CAMPMEETING.

The days of the dying summer,
  The camp in the dear old grove,
A welcome to each glad comer
  To the annual feast of love.
Warm greetings of saints long parted,
  Glad faces of friends that meet;
Good cheer for the weary-hearted,
  And rest for the pilgrims' feet.

Sweet sounds through the oak trees straying,
  As the songs of their praises flow;
Till the evening bell seems saying,
  "To your tents, O Israel," go.
Sweet rest for the thousand sleepers,
  While the sand of the night-glass runs,
For he maketh his angels keepers
  Of all his dear "little ones."

The bell and a voice together,—
  "The hour for family prayer,— Thank God for this pleasant weather,"
  Ring out on the morning air.
Then breakfast, and haste, and bustle,
  And business and toil beside;
For the dwellers in tents are mortal,
  And must for the flesh provide.
It's amusing—the stir—to watch it;
  Now and then from the stand comes—"Hark!
"Who was it that borrowed our hatchet?
  Or, "Please bring our crockery back."

A throng at the morning meeting,
  The tones of a pleasant voice,
Speaking words of cheerful greeting,
  That bid every heart rejoice.
Hear his prayer to the "Holy Father,"
  And hear his inspired "Amen"!
Hear the hymn that they raise together,
  While the woods send it back again.

And now comes the varied preaching,
  Here's a sermon on gospel grace,
Another to home-life reaching,
  While others "the prophets" trace.
Here sinners, to Christ invited,
  First enter the way of peace;
Here saints to fresh zeal incited,
  Gird new for a swifter race.
Thus daily "sweet counsel" taking,
  They're cheered for the onward way,
A seven days' journey making
  Toward rest and eternal day.

These groves be the dearest temples
  The militant church may know,
Till the day when the church triumphant
  To the heavenly house shall go.

"NOT ONE JOT OR TITTLE SHALL FAIL."

BRO. GRANT:—Understand me, when I discover a disposition to insist upon the full and literal fulfillment of the great book of prophecy; but having no disposition to press the matter of unfulfilled prophecy where there exists an honest difference of opinion, I expect he will allow me to illustrate a few very strong points of fulfilled prophecy. Let me again refer to a rule I have adopted whereby we may know what prophecy has been fulfilled, and what has not.

The rule is this: when a certain prophecy has been fulfilled, I can turn to the page of history on which the fulfillment is found recorded, in just as plain language as that in which the original prediction was given. The same rule holds good whether the prophecy be uttered in plain historical, or in the most vivid metaphorical language, for the best of all reasons, that every metaphor, to be good for any thing, must have its corresponding reality. The metaphor is employed not only for the beauty of ornament, but for power of emphasis.

For instance: there stands a substantial, plain church edifice, but it serves a very useful purpose. It has a most beautiful cupola, richly ornamented, a tall spire pointing to heaven. There comes along a lover of beauty; charmed with the upper view, with its ornaments, he insists upon it that the contrast is too great here, and proposes to remove the middle part of the structure, and root up the basement and foundation, leaving nothing but the upper and ornamented portion. I think if that did not destroy the beauty of the upper part, it would very much lower it in the estimate of all who contend for symmetry and proportion, as well as beauty.

If I understand the matter (and I have read over his plans frequently), the great Master Builder intends to leave the structure in its present location, renew and beautify all parts of it, and greatly elevate the upper portion. I like Paul's use of the metaphor better still. He calls it the "house (instead of edifice), whose builder and maker is God; eternal, in the heavens." He adds a city and country, which is heavenly; one city above, one, "that which now is," below. He talks about the inhabitants (referring to the time of the resurrection), and says there will be "bodies celestial and bodies terrestrial," and that there "shall be one glory of the sun, another glory of the moon, and another glory of the stars," etc.

I shall not stop to inquire after the "realities" corresponding with these metaphors," but proceed with my strong illustration of a few prophecies where there are no metaphors used, and try and keep to the point.

I set out to illustrate fulfilled prophecy. I propose a sort of mathematical line of distinction between fulfilled and unfulfilled prophecy, in this manner. Gather up all the passages in which "Moses, the Psalms, and the prophets, have spoken concerning Christ," in his firs advent, and we shall find about one hundred up to the time he hung on the cross. There remain three or four more between that point and his resurrection, which we will add to that list which relates to the second advent; and here we shall find just about one thousand; not one of which can ever fail unless at the expense of the failure of heaven and earth.

I propose now to test just one (the last on the list of one hundred) of these prophecies, in its reality, precision, and importance. I hold that it is best for the christian to "live by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God," and not try to "live by bread alone." If the foregoing estimate be correct (and it will be found very nearly so), our Lord had fulfilled ninety nine of those "things spoken of him by the prophets," when he hung upon the cross, at the time of his greatest agony, and could not die until one more of those "sayings" were fulfilled. In this position of agony and suspense, every consideration would suggest haste; yet, dear reader, go over this point with me in calm deliberation, for it must needs be that the Scriptures be fulfilled; and if this one more scripture be not fulfilled, there remains but one chance of two alternatives: Jesus must hang in agony eternally, or "heaven and earth fail." Turn to Matt. 37: 34, and see if we can find the fulfillment of that last scripture. No. That was one of the sayings of the prophets, but not the one we are in pursuit of. Jesus refused to drink that preparation, which it is said was designed to blunt the sensation of pain. Besides, he was not then on the cross. The forty-eighth verse alluded to the Scripture in question; but we shall find a fuller account of the circumstances as we proceed.

In Mark 15: 23, we have the same report as in Matthew, only an ingredient of the first preparation which Matthew calls gall, Mark calls myrrh. Luke passes over both. We come now to John, who stood by and beheld the agonizing scene. And in the midst of all this dreadful agony, Jesus saw and recognized John. Who can read the words of Jesus to his mother and John there, without intense emotion? Turn to chapter 19, verses 26, 27, and see how Jesus provided a home for his mother, and then there remained but one more scripture to be fulfilled before his agony should cease for ever. "And after this (v. 28) Jesus knowing that all things were now accomplished, that the SCRIPTURES MIGHT BE FULFILLED, saith, I thirst." That will bring on the finishing act. Some where (I believe in the Psalms) it is said, "They gave him vinegar to drink." Observe here, "vinegar to drink," not mingled with gall or myrrh, as in the other cases, when he refused it, but vinegar pure. And observe again "the jot and tittle." No guess-work or patch-work, to make the fulfillment match the prophecy, as in the case of heathen oracles. The lively oracles of God will not admit of that. Verse 29,—"Now there was set a vessel full of vinegar (it did not get there by chance), and they filled a sponge with vinegar and put it upon hyssop, and put it to his mouth. When Jesus therefore had received the vinegar (not refused it as he did the former compound), he said, It is finished; and he bowed his head and gave up the Ghost."

THE PHILADELPHIA CHURCH.

OUR VISIT.

Warm hearts greeted us, kindred spirits surrounded us. Our first visit was with the colored saints. Truly our hearts burned within us as we heard their living testimonies for Jesus. One was a freedman from Maryland. Said he, "the change from slavery to freedom is so great it seems to me I am in heaven." He was sent out by his brethren to collect funds wherewith to build for them a place of worship. Said another, "never be afraid or ashamed to run up the flag for Jesus." This was used of the Spirit to call forth an illustration of the happy results of running up the flag for Jesus, in the experience of a visiting saint present, which was used of the Lord to the conversion of her husband. Thus the heavenly stream deepened and widened until all felt its comforting influence. It was good to be there.

From Christ among the lowly, we met him in the higher walks of life. It was precious to hear the faithful dispensation of his word, followed by living testimonies to its power upon the heart and life. From thence we were piloted to scenes of degradation and vice which made us shudder as we looked. Here lay a woman upon the sidewalk, utterly unconscious of all that was passing around her, and as little noticed as the swine. There, with her head upon the stone doorsill and her body upon a slab of the same, lay another; the doors and sidewalk were strewn with men and women sitting and standing about, as is frequently seen in the evening, notwithstanding it was then about 10 A. M. Some of the women were stripping rags for carpets; smoking and loud talking was the business of most. We followed our guide into courts and allies, cellars and garrets, until both our head and heart ached, and we were glad to know that the Lord has power to separate the righteous from among the wicked, and to cleanse the earth by fire.

From this terrible region, which we think our guide rightly named "Satan's seat," has been gathered, by unremitting toil, a few who love Jesus. How good they looked. How different their rooms. One was sick nigh unto death. When we struck the hymn, "In the christian's home in glory," her fingers began to rise and fall as if beating time, the only sign she was able to give of her interest. She was a little revived the next day.

We had seen the streams, death and destruction, but the fountain of all the misery of this region remained to us yet to witness. Our guide took us to the door, and said, "Step in and look for yourselves." There, behind the counter, stood a man with bottles before and behind him; men and women sitting in front in high glee. Soon we came to another; the sight here presented to our view far exceeded the former. Seats around the room were filled with drunken men and women, half dressed, and talking as the fumes of liquor would lead them. Oh, it seemed more than we could believe that the city of "brotherly love" would tolerate, yea, license such dens of vice. The pawnbroker takes every thing that is brought by these poor wretches, giving them a trifle in return, which trifle is taken by the rumseller, and thus are they robbed of body and soul, of time and eternity. We appealed to an intelligent physician of the city if something could not be done. "Oh!" said he, "there is law enough to shut up such places; but the election is near and the authorities dare not offend the liquor influence, else they lose it and fail in their re-election." Said he, "Our city is ruled by the liquor influence." What an avowal! What a comment upon the times! Are they not culminating for the reign of Antichrist? Surely, "sedition and murder," as personified by Barabbas, are granted, instead of Jesus, as rulers of the world. This was its choice when both were in its power. "Away with this man and release unto us Barabbas." Barabbas is released, and has seized the reins of government, and a "murderer" is he. Sedition and murder, in evesy sense of the terms, are the spirit of the times. Murder, wholesale and retail, is the order of the day.

As it was in the days of Noah and Lot, so shall it be in the day when the Son of Man shall be revealed. Do not these things witness his coming near? Then

"Lift up your heads, ye desponding saints,
Your Lord will come, you need not faint."

This is the only bright hope left to the world; to it we cling when flesh and heart fail us.

In the Sunday school, newly organized in this deplorable region of the city, we again met these indefatigable laborers. Parents and children, some fifty in number, were in attendance, many to be taught the alphabet. Night schools are also instituted for the benefit of those who cannot attend at other times. This Home Mission of Philadelphia we esteem one of the most laudable enterprises in our knowledge, and we would commend it to the sympathy and prayers of every lover of Jesus. Such a practical example of the spirit of Job and of our Lord himself our eyes never witnessed. Heaven's richest blessings abide with them. Amen.

We deem it proper here to add, that the colored people do not attend the meetings of the church up town. The laborers go to them as Jesus came to us. The meetings are entirely distinct.

Our closing interview was in the weekly prayer meeting of the church. Here we were refreshed in spirit. Nevertheless, the exhortation of the apostle to Timothy is meat in due season to the Timothys there, as it is to them everywhere,—"That thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine, neither give heed to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions rather than godly edifying which is in faith." And may we all remember that the "end of the commandment is charity out of a pure heart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned." "Behold I come quickly; hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown."

CHRONOLOGY.—No. 7.

Before a further examination of Dion's testimony, we will attempt to define the A. J. P. The Julian Period is the invention of Joseph Scaliger, who "was born in 1540, at Agen, and was educated at the college of Bordeaux. His friends denominated him "an ocean of science," and "the masterpiece of nature." He died in 1609, professor of the belles lettres at Leyden.

This J. P. is a term of years, often employed in chronology in order to avoid the ambiguity attendant on reckoning any time antecedent to the vulgar era, or A. D. 1. It consists of 7980 years, and is reckoned as having begun 4713 before our era, so that the present year 1865 corresponds to 6578, J. P. "It is scarcely credible," says Petavius, "how easy and how accurate is this method; and if any one shall exercise himself in it, so as to become familiar with the practice, he will carry chronology about with him, instead of leaving it to lurk in books and papers." We have asserted that if Dion's word "total" is made to prove that A. D. 19 was the year of Augustus' death, it follows that Dion contradicts himself. This we deduce from Jarvis (p. 244.) Here is the extract which contains one from Dion:—"Livia (wife of Augustus, and mother of Tiberius by a former husband), was somewhat suspected of having hastened his death, because he had sailed to the island [sc. of Planasia, now called Pianosa], and had had a secret interview with Agrippa. Fearing that Augustus would raise his grandson to the monarchy, she conveyed poison to him in a fig. He died on the 19th of August, the day in which he first became consul, having lived seventy-five years, ten months and twenty-six days; for he was born on the 23d day of September, and he had reigned alone, from the time in which he conquered at Actium, forty-four years wanting thirteen days. (Dion. H. R. lib. lvi., c. 30, p. 589.)

Tacitus speaks of the suspicion resting on Livia; and Pliny and Plutarch both allude to it. Suetonius accords perfectly with Dion as to the day and year of his birth and death, and the duration of his monarchy from the battle of Actium. And with the whole of these historians our present computation harmonizes entirely. Of this we proceed to give a brief recapitulation.

Augustus was born in the consulship of Cicero and Antonius, in the year of the Julian Period 4650, on the 23d of Sept. From Sept. 23, A. J. P. 4650, to Sept. 23, 4725, are 75 years. From Sept. 23, A. J. P. 4725, to July 23, 4726, are 10 months. From July 23, A. J. P. 4726, to August 19, 4726, are in July (not including the 23d), days 8 in August (not including the 19th), days 18. According to Dion's computation... years 75, ms. 10, days 26.

Again: the battle of Actium took place, as we have before seen (p. 197) in the third consulship of Cæsar with Valerius Messalla Corvinus, on the 2d day of Sept., in the year of the Julian period 4682.

From Sept. 2, 4682, to Sept. 2, 4725, are - - - - -	43 years.
From Sept. 2, 4725, to August 2, 4726, are - - - -	11 months.
From Aug. 2 to Aug. 19, both included, are - - - - -	18 days.
To which add 13 days according to Dion's - - - - -	43	11	18

Now let us turn to the list of consuls prepared by Dion himself. Says Dr. Jarvis, "The history of Dion Cassius is our principal guide. He generally names the consuls of each year; and to the several remaining books of his history, the list of consuls during the period of time embraced in each book is prefixed with their names at full length, as they would be registered in public inscriptions and official documents. This is of the greatest use, because it serves to harmonize the testimony of the various Latin historians and other writers who speak of their public magistrates with more familiarity, and, when the consul had several names, sometimes use one, and sometimes another. As Dion flourished about the year 229 of the common christian era, and was himself of consular dignity, his means of obtaining information were of the best character; and, therefore, his testimony alone is of the greatest authority."

From the birth of Augustus, in the consulship of Cicero and Antonius, to the year of his death, in the consular year of Sextus Pompeius inclusive, we count on Dion's list 76 consular years. No historian makes Augustus older than nearly 76, but if he lived to A. D. 19, he was about 82 years old, and died in the consular year of Messala and Cotta, which is five years later on the list. On Dion's list, the twenty-third consular year from Sextus Appuleius and Sextus Pompeius, we find to be that of Proculus and Nigrinus. Dion says, Tiberius died then (Jarvis p. 265.) He and all other historians give 22 years and about 6 months for Tiberius' reign. So by resting the argument alone on Dion's testimony, and applying the Julian number, we are compelled to adopt A. D. 13 as the year of Augustus' death. We could present much more historical evidence confirmatory of this position, but space forbids. Let us abandon all childish theories, and build our arguments on a good foundation, if we build at all.

JOHN LYLE.

COMMENTS ON ACTS 15: 16.

It is claimed by those who believe in the world's conversion and a temporal millennium that the building of the tabernacle of David, referred to by James in Acts 15: 16, has been, or is to be accomplished in the conversion of the Gentiles. Because, he adds, "that the residue of men might seek the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things." But let us see. When Jesus comes the second time, and the tabernacle of David is built, the promise made to Mary will be fulfilled. "And the Lord God will give unto him the throne of his father David." When that time comes will the "residue of men and all the Gentiles" have a general good time seeking the Lord? We answer, No! For "he shall rule them—the wicked—with a rod of iron," and punish them "with everlasting destruction."

The subject of the apostle's conversation was the compulsion of the Gentiles to be circumcised and keep the law of Moses—i. e., those who believed. Paul, knowing that the promises made to Abraham were received in uncircumcision disputed with the Judaizers, dissented from their teachings, and disputed their right to impose upon the Gentile converts the observance of the ceremonial law. So, after the trouble arose on this question it was determined that the apostles and elders at Jerusalem should settle the matter. So when they were come together, Peter told them that "a good while ago God made choice among them," that the Gentiles by his mouth should hear the word of the Gospel and believe. And that God gave the Gentiles the Holy Spirit, "as unto us at the beginning," "and put no difference between us and them, purifying their hearts by faith." And that both Jews and Gentiles should be saved by the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ. Then Paul and Barnabas declared unto the conference how great miracles God had wrought by them among the Gentiles. About that time James, remembering that Amos had prophesied of the conversion of the Gentiles (Amos 9: 11, 12), and that they should possess the inheritance with the true Israel, said, "Men and brethren, hearken unto me: Simon—i. e. Simeon—hath declared how God at first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." (Acts 15: 14.) And to this agree the words of the prophet as it is written. After this I will return and build again the tabernacle of David.... that the residue of men might seek after the Lord. Now it is obvious that it was not the coming of the Lord, or the reconstruction of the tabernacle of David that occupied his attention; but the salvation of the Gentiles. Hence the simple truth, the prophet's declaratian, that the Gentiles should dwell in the tabernacle of David when it should be built again, being, also, the children of God by faith.

TO SUE K.,

Who sold two ear rings and a finger ring, to pay for the Crisis for the poor sister in Mina, N. Y.

O! stranger sister, in that morn,
When Christ shall take his children home,
Into those promised mansions fair,
I trust that I shall meet you there;

To dwell for aye, where, we are told,
The streets are formed of purest gold,
And blooming in youth's vigor, we
From care and sorrow shall be free.

Your kind and sympathetic breast
From tales of woe will be at rest,
And brighter gems thy brow adorn,
Than ere by eastern princess worn.

O! with the blest on that fair shore,
We shall repeat the story o'er,
How partings, mourning, sighing, pain,
And sin and death have ceased to reign.

Then come, dear Savior, come with power,
And bring the long expected hour;
I'll toil and wait,—what need I fear,
When our redemption is so near?

THE BURNING TENT.

What sound more dismal than to be awakened from deep slumbers in the night, by the cry of "fire"! and what looks more gloomy than to open your eyes and see your quiet resting place for the night all in flames. Thus it was with the inmates of the burning tent at Wilbraham. As I was one of the number resting from the toils of the day, in deep slumber and sweet repose, no sound ever greeted my ears so dismal. My first thought was, when half awake, the world was on fire. My next thought was, the whole encampment was in a blaze, and every tent was burning down, and where should we flee for safety? I left the tent in flames, not being wakeful enough to think of clothing, trunk, or money, until I was safely outside; then I was fairly awake, and began to think of what I had left behind to burn up. I thought all was lost; but my treasure in heaven was all safe, and this was my comfort then; but our brethren were not slumbering while our tent was burning; for the cry of "fire" had reached their ears, and they were on hand to save our trunks and clothing, and all that was in their power to save. Thanks to our brethren, and to God our preserver, we were all saved, and the loss was small comparatively to that which was saved, and was made up by kind donors upon the camp-ground.

It was quite an exciting scene in and around the burning tent; but no accident happened to any one, but our Bro. Henry Pratt, who, in trying to do good and save the tent from final destruction, had his hands badly burnt; but we trust it will work for his good, because he loves God. God overruled all to his own glory, and we came out unscathed.

ABIGAIL MUSSEY.

SOWING THE GOOD SEED.

All we can do is to sow the seed in faith, and water it with prayer as the dew of heaven.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good."

"Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days." Some seeds, doubtless, will fall by the wayside, some on stony places, some among thorns—but other into good ground. Our business is to sow, and keep sowing broadcast—scatter the good seed: the Lord will take care of the germination, the growth, and the crop; leave the results with him. Paul may plant, and Apollos water, but God alone must give the increase.

Do not be discouraged, friends, if the fruit of your labors does not immediately appear. Sow on, pray on. Speak a good word for Jesus, warn the unruly, comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, be patient toward all men. "Be not weary in well-doing, for in due time ye shall reap if ye faint not." "He that goeth forth and weepeth, bearing precious seed, shall doubtless come again rejoicing, bringing his sheaves with him."

One very important method of sowing the good seed" is through the medium of the press, the circulation of good books, papers, and tracts. These will impart light and life, preach when no audible voice is heard, in the house and out of it, by the wayside, at the merchant's desk, in the stage coach, the steamboat, the rail-car, the closet, the domestic circle; they preach and keep preaching when we sleep and when we wake. They hesitate not to declare the whole truth, boldly, uncompromisingly. Many pulpits fail to do this.

Lecturing and preaching are great things, but they are not the greatest. They can do something which the press cannot do; but the press can do much which they cannot do. Printed leaves can go everywhere. They never blush—know no fear—never stammer—never die. They can be multiplied without end. Books and tracts can travel at little expense. They want nothing to eat. They require no lodgings. They run up and down like the angels of God, blessing all, giving to all, and asking no gift in return. You can print them of all sizes, on all subjects, in all places, and at all hours. And they can talk to one as well as a multitude, and to a multitude as well as to one. They require no public room to tell their story in. They can tell it in the kitchen or the shop, the parlor or the closet, in the railway carriage or the omnibus, on the broad highway or in the footpath through the fields; and they dread no noisy or tumultuous interruption. They take no notice of scoffs, or jeers, or taunts; of noisy folly, or malighant rage. They bear all things, suffer all things. They can talk, even when the noise is so grest as to drown all other voices. No one can betray them into hasty or random expressions. And they will wait men's time, and suit themselves to men's occasions and convenience. They will break off at any point, and begin at any moment where they broke off. And though they will not always answer questions, they will tell their story twice or thrice, or four times over, if you wish them. And they can be made to speak on every subject, and on every subject they may be made to speak wisely and well. They can, in short, be made vehicles of all truth, the teachers and reformers of all classes, the regenerators and benefactors of all lands.

"We want our friends to give this subject their attention. We feel persuaded that the importance of the press, as a means of spreading simple, gospel truth and promoting christian piety, is not yet fully understood; or if it is, the press has never yet been sufficiently employed in this great work.

Is it not marvelous to see how few professing godliness avail themselves of this easy and efficient mode of preaching! How seldom do visttors and travelers furnish themselves with these silent messengers of truth, while the enemy of all righteousness scatters widely the poison of romance, lewdness, and infidelity.—Home Thrusts.

DON'T MAKE A FUSS.

By all the motives which have weight with man or woman, be adjured, not in any case, to make a fuss. In the first place, it never does a bit of good. You can accomplish all you intend, and obtain all you desire, quite as well without it, if not a little better. Nay, sometimes, it actually prevents your succeeding, where you certainly might have done so, had you kept cool, and not forewarned and forearmed everybody by a cannonade.

In the second place, it is exceedingly annoying to others; there is neither peace nor comfort in the neighborhood of a fusser. He is always plaguing you to know if you think it will rain next week, when he is going to the white mountains; or dreading that the cars will run off the track, or the omnibusses break down, or the hotels be crowded, or some such imaginary trouble, ever so long beforehand. And, when fairly started on such an excursion, a fusser destroys all the comfort and enjoyment of his unfortunate companions, and makes his own fancied torments real ones to them. Therefore, his company is sedulously avoided.

Thirdly, no one sympatizes with a fusser. Even other fussers have no fellow-feeling with it. The word (and a most expressive word it is) means small worrying over trifles; and who cares a straw if Mrs. Briggs did lose her bandbox, which contained her French bonnet? or if Mr. Brown's bedroom was invaded by a shaggy dog that wouldn't go out, so that it quite worried him to death, and made him quite nervous, as he pathetically declares? Nobody cares whether you or I couldn't sleep because the rats ran over our heads all night, or because we had such startled dreams, or such a bad pain in our shoulder, etc. People don't like to have their sympathies appealed to for such nonsense.

Fourthly, it is decidedly vulgar and incompatible with the dignity of a true lady or gentleman. It was an apt remark that a well-bred hostess will not move a muscle, even when John upsets the best china.

HOW HORRIBLE!

Johathan Edwards, D. D., of the Presbyterian church, in his works represents hell as seven times hotter than a limekiln, or an oven, or furnace heated seven times hotter than usual. And he says after the soul has been there millions of years, and heated through and through, like a red hot iron wedge, the punishment will then only just have commenced; so says this eminent divine. He further says, that "parents will look down from the battlements of heaven, and smile at the damnation of their own children."

In relation to the damnation of infants, he says: "God Almighty will take the little vipers up in the tongs of his wrath, and hold them over the fire of hell until they spit venom in the face of Jehovah." But let us pause! We sicken and turn from such theology with loathing! and yet it is Orthodoxy in its purity. We get the same now, only they do it up in a little heavenly sugar, or "good religion," to make it more palatable; or in other words, they are more dishonest now than they were then; for if they were honest, they would come out like men and tell what they believe to be the truth, and the whole truth. The entire Orthodox Protestant world believe in a hell of endless duration; and in torment most excruciating; that they dare not deny. But now it is not much talked of, for fear that it will frighten away the flock from which these dishonest priests get their "golden fleece." The Bible teaches no such horrible doctrine as this. It says, "All the wicked shall be destroyed."—Psa. 145: 20. "They shall be as though they had not been."—Obad. 16.

How long will the people run after these strange priests, and their dogmas, and disregard "the word of the Lord?" Alas! "Ephraim is joined to his idols, let him alone." The people "love darkness rather than light because their deeds are evil.—Ex.

"AXE GRINDING," is a term borrowed from one of the most charming stories told by Benjamin Franklin. A little boy going to school was accosted by a man carrying an axe. The man calls the boy all kinds of endearing names, and induces him to enter a yard where there is a grindstone.

"Now, my pretty little fellow," says he with the axe, "only turn that handle and you'll see something pretty."

The boy turns and turns, and the man holds the axe to the stone and pours water over it until the axe is ground. Straightway he turns with strident voice and fierce gesture on the boy: "You abandoned lillle miscreant," he cries, "what do you mean by playing truant from school? You deserve a good thrashing. Get you gone sirrah, this instant!"

"After this," adds Franklin, "when any body flattered me, I always thought he had an axe to grind."

THE SCOFFER SILENCED.

An infidel from Louisiana saw, in a steamboat on the Mississippi, a minister whom he heard deliver a discourse on infidelity. Gathering his associates to the table, he began to tell hard things about religion and religious people, the Bible and its ministers. The minister said nothing.

At length the infidel came up, and suddenly slapping him on the shoulder, said,—"Old fellow, what do you think of these things?"

"Do you see that beautiful landscape?"

"Yes."

"If you were to send out a dove he would pass over it, see and delight in all that is beautiful and lovely; but if you were to send out a buzzard, he would see nothing to fix his attention, unless he could find some rotten carcass, loathsome to all other animals; on it he would light and gloat with exquisite pleasure."

"Do you mean to compare me to a buzzard?"

"I made no allusion to you."

The disciple of Tom Paine walked off in confusion, and was called Buzzard the rest of the passage.—Ex.

PREACHING.—The true learning of a gospel minister consists not in being able to talk Latin fluently, or to dispute in philosophy, but in being able to speak a word in season to weary souls.—Philip Henry.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE CHILD-READERS.

DEAR CHILDREN:—Are you glad that you have books and papers, and the privilege of going to school? Do you love to read pretty stories, and learn the wonders that are found in going step by step up the hill of science? I know what you will say. I fancy I hear a great many little voices crying—"Yes, oh yes," I guess we do!" and "I can tell you everything in my book!" says one; and "I can write almost as well as father can!" says another. Well, I am glad of it. I would like to hear your stories, and praise your penmanship, but have not time now.

Will you listen while I tell you something about the little Freedmen down South? They have not got such white faces as you have, but they can talk, and laugh, and play, just as you do. Their parents have always been slaves. They could get no money for their work until our good President Lincoln said they were free. They could not learn to read, for it was a crime for any one to teach them. Now these little black boys and girls can go to school, but they want books, and clothes, and teachers. Don't you all want to help them? Some of you have school books that you no longer need; others have coats, and hats, and dresses, and other garments laid by, that have been outgrown; and still more can give money, that would otherwise be laid out for nuts and candy. Go to work, children. See how much you can do before the year is out. Work for Jesus. These little children belong to him. What you do for them, you do for him.

MASKED BATTERIES.

Beware of masked batteries! You know the mischief they work. They have various forms, and are located at various places; but they always work mischief. There are many of them, and for fear that they should be brought to bear upon you, we will point out some of them.

That screen, that you see as you pass the saloon door, is a masked battery. You know this without being told; for why do men or boys go behind that screen for anything that is honest or proper? Did you ever go near enough to read what is written upon it? "Come behind here, boys," it says, "and do what you are ashamed to be seen doing! Come behind here, and be cheated, by giving your money for what will do you more hurt than good! Come behind here, and conceal a bad example! Come behind here, and see how mean a business we carry on; see how we mislead boys, and ruin men; how we get our living by doing evil to others; how we make drunkards and promote poverty; how we wring the hearts of fathers and mothers by enticing their boys to ruin! Come behind here, boys, men, women, children, and see what the screen tries to hide."

Those little dog kennels, in the shop below, are masked batteries indeed. What kind of goods do men sell, whose customers have to go into those dirty holes and shut the doors? Better by far go into the lockup. These holes are indeed masked batteries for men. More drunken men come out of these holes than go into them. Keep watch at the door, boys, and see who are the customers. Men with red faces and tattered characters enter there—men with "blue ruin" written all over them. They have faced batteries before. They think their disgrace is a secret, while everybody knows they have been "battered" till there is little left of them. Watch the door, boys, for nobody goes into those dog-holes except to conceal their shame.

These are not the only masked batteries that might be pointed out to the young men and boys in every community. There are others more dangerous, because more deeply masked. Go to the constituted authorities of your city or town, and ask them to protect you from them—and tell them that, if they fail to do it, the responsibility is theirs. Go, young men, and lay your interests before them, and ask them how they dare, in the face of God and their constituents, thus to neglect their duty! Possibly—possibly they may hear you.

SELF-DENIAL.

The clock had just struck nine, and Harry recollected that his mother had desired them not to sit up a minute after the clock struck. He reminded his elder brother of this order.

"Never mind," said Frank, "here's a famous fire, and I shall stay and enjoy it."

"Yes," said Harry, "here's a famous fire, and I should like to stay and enjoy it; but that would not be self-denial, would it Frank?"

"Nonsense," said Frank; "I shall not stir yet, I promise you."

"Then good night to you," said Harry.

Six o'clock was the time at which the brothers were expected to rise. When it struck six the next morning, Harry started up, but the air felt so frosty, that he had a strong inclination to lie down again. "But no," thought he, "here's a fair opportunity for self-denial;" and up he jumped without farther hesitation.

"Frank, Frank," said he to his sleeping brother, "past six o'clock, and a fine starlight morning."

"Let me alone, cried Frank, in a cross, drowsy voice.

"Very well, then, a pleasant nap to you," said Harry, and down he ran as gay as the lark.

After finishing his Latin exercise, he had time to take a pleasant walk before breakfast; so that he came in fresh and rosy, with a good appetite, and, what was still better, in a good humor. But poor Frank, who just tumbled out of bed when the bell rang for prayer, came down, looking pale, and cross, and cold, and discontented. Harry, who had some sly drollery of his own, was just beginning to rally him on his forlorn appearance, when he recollected his resolution. Frank does not like to be laughed at, especially when he is cross, thought he, as he suppressed his joke; and it requires some self-denial even to suppress a joke.

During breakfast his father promised that, if the weather continued fine, Harry should ride out with him before dinner on the gray pony. Harry was much delighted with this proposal, and the thought of it occurred to him very often during the business of the morning. The sun shone cheerily in at the parlor windows, and seemed to promise fair for a fine day. About noon, however, it became rather cloudy, and Harry was somewhat startled to perceive a few large drops upon the flag-stones in the court. He equipped himself, nevertheless, in his great coat at the time appointed, and stood playing with his whip in the hall, waiting to see the horses led out. His mother now passing by, said, "My dear boy, I am afraid there can be no riding this morning, do you see that the stones are quite wet?"

"Dear mother," said Harry, "you surely do not imagine that I am afraid of a few drops of rain; besides, it will be no more than a shower at any rate."

Just then his father came in, who looked first at the clouds, then at the barometer, and then at Harry, and shook his head.

"You intend to go, papa, don't you?" said Harry.

"I must go, I have business to do, but I believe, Harry, it will be better for you to stay at home this morning," said his father.

"But, sir," repeated Harry, "do you think it possible, now, that this little sprinkle of rain should do me the least harm in the world, with my great coat and all?"

"Yes, Harry," said his father, "I do think that even this sprinkling of rain may do you harm, as you have not been quite well. I think, too, it will be more than a sprinkling. But you shall decide on this occasion for yourself; I know you have some self-command. I shall only tell you that your going this morning would make your mother uneasy, and that we both think it improper; now decide."

Harry again looked at the clouds, at the stones, at his boots, and last of all at his kind mother, and then he recollected himself. "This," thought he, "is the best opportunity for self-denial that I have had to-day;" and he immediately ran out to tell Roger that he need not saddle the gray pony.

"Brother Harry," said his little sister after dinner, "when will you show me how to do that pretty puzzle you said you would show me a long time ago?"

"I am busy now, child," said Harry, "don't tease me now, there's a good girl." She said no more, but looked disappointed, and still hung upon her brother's chair. "Come, then," said he, suddenly recollecting himself, "bring me your puzzle;" and laying down his book, he very good-naturedly showed his sister how to place it.

That night, when the two boys were going to bed, Harry called to mind with some complacency the several instances in the course of the day in which he had exercised self-denial, and he was on the very point of communicating them to his brother Frank. "But no," thought he, "this is another opportunity still for self-denial, I will not say a word about it; besides, to boast of it would spoil all." So Harry lay down quietly, making the following sage reflections: "This has been a pleasant day to me, although I have had one great disappointment, and done several things against my will, I find that self-denial is painful for a moment, but very agreeable in the end; and, if I go on this plan every day, I shall stand a good chance of leading a happy life."—Ex.

POWER OF ONE GOOD BOY.

"When I took the school," said a gentleman, speaking of a certain school he once taught, "I soon saw there was one good boy in it. Saw it in his face. I saw it by many unmistakable marks. If I stepped out and came suddenly back, that boy was always studying, just as if I had been there, while a general buzz and the roguish looks of the rest showed there was mischief in the wind. I learned he was a religious boy, and a member of the church. Come what would, he would be for the right.

There were two other boys who wanted to behave well, but were sometimes led astray. These two began to look up to Alfred, and were much strengthened by his example. Alfred was as lovely in disposition as he was firm in principle. These three boys began now to create a sort of public opinion on the side of good order and the master. One boy, and then another, gradually sided with them. The foolish pranks of idle and wicked boys began to lose their popularity. They did not win the laugh which they used to. A general obedience and attention to study prevailed. At last the public opinion of the school was fairly revolutionized; from being a school of ill name, it became one of the best behaved schools any where about, and it was that boy Alfred, who had the largest share in making the change. Only four or five held out, and these were finally expelled. "Yes," said the teacher, "it is in the power of one right-minded, right-hearted boy to do that. He stuck to his principles like a man, and they stuck to him, and made a strong and splendid fellow of him."—The Little Crusader.

THE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

TUNE.—"Just before the battle, mother."

Soldier in the christian army,
Are you girded for the fight?
Are you ready for the battle
In the cause of truth and right?
Have you on the gospel helmet,
With the girdle and the shield,
With a firm resolve to conquer,
Though you fall upon the field?

Marshaled by our great Commander,
We shall triumph, never fear,
For he's never lost a battle,
And to help is ever near.
Satan's hosts have fled before him,
And the king of terrors dread,
Vanquished, stood in awe before him,
When pale death the captive led.

Millions now have joined the army,
Out of every age and clime;
From the northern ice-clad hill tops,
And where southern vine-wreaths twine.
O'er the earth the call has echoed,—
Come ye tribes of every land,
See, from Afric's arid desert
Ethiopia stretch her hand.

We are fighting for a kingdom
In a purer, better land;
We shall reign ere long in glory,
With the bright angelic band.
We shall bear the palms of victory,
Where all sighing is unknown;
We shall raise our glad hosannah
Round the dazzling azure throne.

Oh then, come and join the army,
There is glory yet in store,
To be given to the faithful,
When the weary march is o'er.
Then shall cease the weary warfare,
And the armor we'll lay down;
And we'll wear the robes of victory,
And the bright unfading crown.

For the World's Crisis.

THE DIVINITY AND SON-SHIP OF JESUS CHRIST."

BY O. R. FASSETT.

(Concluded.)

"In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the word was God. The same was in the beginning with God. All things were made by him; and without him was not any thing made that was made. In him was life; and the life was the light of men. And the light shineth in darkness; and the darkness comprehended it not. There was a man sent from God, whose name was John. The same came for a witness, to bear witness of the light, that all men through him might believe. He was not that light, but was sent to bear witness of that light. That was the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. He was in the world and the world was made by him, and the world knew him not. He came unto his own, and his own received him not. But as many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name; which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God. And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father), full of grace and truth.—JOHN 1: 1-14.

II. The peculiarity of His generation.

To the Word spoken—uttered—God the Father imparted his divine essence, which was really and actually a part of himself. So that in perfect propriety it may be said, "He that built all things is God," referring to "Christ Jesus." Heb. 3: 4. And "God made the worlds," by him—referring to the same being. We are not to regard the divine being as sterile. God the Father could and did communicate his divine essence to the Word. And this communication of a part of himself to the Word was the proper generation of his Son. And inasmuch as he communicated his own divine essence to the Word, which constitutes him God, the Word is also God. But the Son is not the Father, nor the eternal and original God.

In human and natural conception, the Father necessarily precedes the Son, and begets one younger than himself. The divine essence which the Father did communicate to the Word, he had in himself "from everlasting;" but not until the communication of his Spirit and Life to the Word did he become the first-born of every creature, and his only begotten son. Hence says Jesus: "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself." That is: as the Father could and did impart to the dead Word life, so can the Son impart life to a dead world. It was at such a declaration that "the Jews sought to kill him, because he said that God was his father, making himself equal with God."—John 5: 26, 18.

Observe the three following stages of his existence:

1. The Word first subsisted in the Father, as all men were in Adam. As Levi subsisted "in the loins of his father Abraham when Melchisedec met him, and paid tithes in Abraham," Heb. 7: 9, 10, so did "the Son" first subsist in the Father. "The Lord possessed me in the beginning of his way, before his works of old. I was set up from everlasting." Prov. 8: 22, 23.

2. THE WORD subsisted out from the Father, as an independent being; so Jesus himself declares:—"I came out from God." John 16: 27. This he taught his disciples, and they understood it. "I have given unto them the words which thou gavest me; and they have received them, and have known surely that I came out from thee, and they have believed that thou didst send me."—John 17: 8. These two things they knew and believed. So they confess. "We are sure that thou knowest all things, and needest not that any man should ask thee; by this we believe that thou camest forth from God."—John 16: 30. Omniscience belongs to God, therefore they knew he must come out of God, who is omniscient.

3. His third stage of existence was in the form of man. "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus; who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God; but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man," etc.—Phil. 2: 5-8. Of this John speaks. "The Word was made flesh." This existence began when he was conceived and born of the Virgin Mary, or is that to which reference is made,—"Lo, I come (in the volume of the book it is written of me) to do thy will, O God." "A body hast thou prepared me."—Heb. 10: 5-10.

Mark this fact: he was in the form of God before he was in the form of man. The form of God in which he existed has reference to his divine nature, as the likeness of man signifies the human nature more particularly.

There are in human generations two kinds of similitude, one having respect to the internal nature, the other the external form and figure. The former similitude is essential and necessary; it being impossible for a man to beget a son not in nature a man. The latter accidental, as the child may or may not resemble him in form or features, or either parent; yet in human nature he cannot be other than man. The similitude of the Word was in the identity of divine nature at first. In the identity of his invisible nature; for "the first-born of every creature" was in "the image of the invisible God;" and that is Spirit. "God is a Spirit; and they that worship him must worship in Spirit and in truth."—John 4: 24. God in his invisible nature is not far from every one of us.—Acts 17: 23-28. "Lo, the Lord is that Spirit; and where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty."—2 Cor. 3: 17. This has reference to "the spirit of Christ which was in" the prophets, "when it testified before hand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow."—1 Peter 1: 11. And of which Jesus speaks when he gives the promise, "Lo, I am with you alway." Matt. 28: 19, 20. There is God the Father "Spirit"—"the Lord's Spirit"—and "the Holy Spirit," one in essential essence; but the Three which compose the "God-head" (Acts 17: 29), the Father—"the Highest," "the Son," the second, "the Holy Spirit," the third. In "the image of the invisible" nature of God" was Jesus, or the Word, first begotten. In the image and visible similitude of his glorious person was he afterwards perfected, when the body born of the Virgin Mary was raised from the dead and immortalized. Then he said,—"Thou art my Son, this day have I begotten thee."—Acts 13: 33. And when "glorified" in his presence he is "the brightness of his glory and the express image of his person."

The image of God's person was given to man.—Gen. 1: 26. And in the likeness of God made he him.—Gen. 5: 1. So that man resembled God in personal form, as Adam's son resembled him, being begotten in his own likeness, after his image."—Gen. 5: 3. In Gen. 1: 26, the language, so far as the Son is concerned, is prospective of the completion of the similitude of the Son of God after his resurrection and glorification at God's right hand. That the Father has a visible form as well as an invisible nature, is evident from the language also of Jesus in promise. Matt. 5: 8.—"Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." And though as yet, "No man hath seen God at any time," the Father being to all "the Invisible," yet "the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, he hath declared" this: "They shall see God." Reference can only be had to the Father.

From these Scriptures and considerations, we may now understand the meaning of these words of Jesus Christ which have been so perplexing to many minds. "I and my Father are one." "The Father is in me and I in him."—John 10: 30, 38. "My Father is greater than I."—John 14: 28., etc., etc. He being the same, and a part of the divine essence, the Son is one and equal with the Father in respect to his divine nature; while the Father is greater in respect to priority of independent existence, and the communication of the Godhead. Therefore he says, I know him; for I am from him, and he hath sent me."—John 7: 29. One class of Scriptures speaks of his identity of nature, the other of his origin, which greatly embarrasses some minds.

Jesus Christ, from these considerations, is worthy of all the titles and prerogatives ascribed to him in the Scriptures; and without stint or the least limitation the same are given to him which are given to the Father. Isa. 41; 4, 48: 12, 44: 6, Rev. 1: 11, 17, 18, 2: 8, 22: 13, all refer absolutely to him. He is not, however, as some affirm, "the one Almighty and Eternal Father," but one with him. He is not "the very Eternal God, the Father," for he first subsisted in him, and "came out from him."

We may now understand the following Scriptures: "God was in Christ."—2 Cor. 5: 19. Also, 1 Tim. 3: 16. St. Paul says, "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus."—1 Tim. 2: 5. God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Spirit, are one in identity of nature, but three in person; and the second person in the Godhead is our mediator.

Again St. Paul says: "The church of God which he hath purchased with his own blood." Acts 20: 28. Though asserted that "God . . . purchased," etc., this can, may and must be understood of Christ Jesus,—"The precious blood of Christ."—1 Peter 1: 19. It cannot refer to the Holy Spirit, for he has no blood to shed. It cannot refer to the Father, for he cannot die; shedding of blood signifies death. Though the Father be omnipotent, and can do all things, yet he cannot die. Neither can it be said that the Father "purchased us with his own blood," for then it would follow he gave not his son, which would expressly controvert the Scriptures; and it would follow that the Father and son were one and the same person; and that the Father died on the cross! which dilemma and incongruity many fall into. The confession of an old school Trinitarian is: "We cannot but acknowledge that the blood and death was of another than the Father."

Whenever the Father, Son and Holy Spirit are described as working the salvation of man, the blood, by which it is wrought, is always attributed to the Son, and not to the Father and Holy Spirit. Hebrews 10th chapter. The testator which died (Heb. 9: 6) is neither the Father nor the Holy Spirit, but the Son. It is the blood of the Son of God.—Matt. 26: 29.

Finally, we are to consider,

III. In what respect Jesus Christ differs from others who are called Sons of God; and how he is the only begotten Son.

It is, I conceive, in this respect, the divine essence was communicated to the Word in the beginning, as to none others. His generation and creation throughout, also, from the beginning to his perfection in glory, as a glorified being, after his birth of the Virgin Mary, resurrection and ascension to the Father, are totally different from ours, or any of Adam's race. Besides, he came into a state of sonship by adoption through faith in him: "But as many as received him to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name."

We are sons by the grace of God, he by natural generation; and hence he is never called an adopted son. He is truly begotten, and a natural son of the Father, and is called "the true son," "the only begotten son," "his beloved son," etc., etc. When he came in the flesh it is recorded of him, "God sent forth his son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons." Gal. 4: 45. He is the only begotten Son of God, too, because neither angels or any other created intelligences in the universe were so begotten of the substance of God, or a part of God.

I regard it not as true as Dr. Young sings:

"He the great Father kindled at one flame
The world of rationals: one spirit poured
From spirit's awful Fountain; poured himself
Through all their souls, but not in equal stream,
Profuse or frugal, of th' inspiring God,
As his wise plan demanded; and when passed
Their various trials, in their various spheres,
If they continue rational, as made,
Resorb them all into himself again,

Can it be otherwise than that they "continue rational," if God "poured himself" into "their souls"? Or, can God himself sin, or become irrational and deranged? And is there to be entertained the least doubt that he will

"Resorb them all into himself again,"

if the above be true?

The Holy Spirit, the third person in the Godhead, was not so begotten of God as the Son, though identical in divine nature with the Father and Son. He is never said to be begotten, nor is he called the Son of God. He is the gift of God, and proceeds from both the Father and the Son, while the Word is the Son of God by generation.

We must regard in this thought the incomprehensible and infinitely diversified manifestations of generative and creative power of the Almighty. As illustrates St. Paul, "All flesh is not the same flesh; but there is one kind of flesh of men, another flesh of beasts, another of fishes, and another of birds."—1 Cor. 15: 39. And yet "all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again." Of one material (dust) God has the power to make all kinds of flesh. So also to make trees and plants in their infinite variety. Now with this generative and creative power, to us miraculous and inconceivable, why should we question how the Word is the only begotten son of God, and the Holy Spirit not? Eve, too, was produced out of Adam, and of the same nature with him, and yet was not born of him; nor is she called the daughter of Adam. Whereas Cain, Abel, Seth, and Adam's daughters, begotten by him in his own nature and form, were truly his sons and daughters by way of generation. So we may regard the Word as the only begotten Son of God, by the peculiarity of his generation.

IMPROVEMENT.

1. This subject leads us to reflect upon the infinite efficacy of the atonement. "We are bought with a price."—1 Cor. 6: 20. And what price is it? "Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold" (now the most precious of metals) "but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot."—1 Peter 1: 18, 10. Well may we conclude with the Apostle, "If the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh, how much more shall the blood of Christ, who through the Eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your consciences from dead works to serve the living God."—Heb. 9: 13, 14. He was "put to death in the flesh," that holy flesh and "body prepared" him by the conception of the Holy Spirit, and born of the Virgin Mary, that "through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ once for all," there might be one sacrifice for our sins forever," and that through which offering we might be "sanctified" and "saved."—1 Peter 3: 18; Heb. 10: 5, 10, 12.

2. We see the reason why we are commanded to worship and reverence the Son, even as we worship and honor the Father: "That all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son honoreth not the Father which hath sent him."—John 5: 33. So says the Son of God himself. For us to worship him thus as God, if he is not God, would be gross idolatry; and he himself would be guilty of teaching it. But the Father sets his seal and sanction to this command when he requires even the higher beings in the universe to adore him. "When he bringeth the first begotten into the world, he saith, "And let all the angels of God worship him."—Heb. 1: 16. "God hath highly exalted him," since his humiliation, "and given him a name which is above every name; that at the name of JESUS every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is LORD, to the glory of God the FATHER."—Philip. 2: 9-11.

In the day of his final triumph of power, hear the anthem of the angelic hosts, "the number" of whom will be "ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands, saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing." Added to which will be the "new song" of the redeemed,—"Thou art worthy, for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation: and hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and he shall reign on the earth." "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are on the sea, and all that are in them" will say, "Blessing, and honor, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the LAMB forever and ever." Rev. 5th chap. He who is worthy of such adoration and worship is worthy of our praise, and is "our God." We will adore him.

This revelation of the Word shows his exceeding exalted excellence and dignity of person, and should raise us into grateful and thankful acknowledgment of the infinite love of God the Father in sending his only begotten Son into the world to die for us, and to redeem us from all our sins, and the curse of the fall. John 3: 16; Rom. 5: 8; 8: 32; Eph. 4: 9, 10. The gift of his Son is the highest act and expression of his love to our lost race (Rom. 5: 8); and the death of the Son of God on the cross the highest expression of Christ's friendship for us. John 15: 13; 10: 11.

Who of us, let me ask in conclusion, can reply as did Peter to the inquiry of our divine Redeemer and Lord, "Whom say ye that I am?" "Thou art the Christ, the son of the living God," with a clear knowledge of this great revealed mystery? Happy are ye, "for flesh and blood has not revealed it unto you, but my Father which is in heaven," would Jesus say to-day. And who have this assurance of "eternal life," that they know the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom he hath sent?" Happy are ye. A revelation of both Father and Son to the human understanding and heart is the highest evidence of the divine blessing, and of "the hope of eternal life, which God, that cannot lie, promised before the world began."—Titus 1: 2.

May the Father reveal the mystery of his Son unto us, and the Son the mystery of the Father, and the Holy Spirit both the mystery of the Father and the Son, as well as the written revelation of his inspired Word, till in the more perfected and glorified state, "we see face to face, and know even as also we are known." Amen.

For the World's Crisis.

"THEY BRAKE NOT HIS LEGS."

"The Jews therefore, because it was the preparation, that the bodies should not remain upon the cross on the Sabbath day, . . . besought Pilate that their legs might be broken, and that they might be taken away."—JOHN 19: 33.

Having examined all the passages usually offered as collateral evidence in support of the thief's having probably been with Christ on the day of his crucifixion, in some locality called "paradise," except two—namely, the "Rich man and Lazarus," Luke 16: 19, and "All live unto God," Luke 20: 28, which will be duly investigated in their time and place—we proceed now to examine the testimony on which the claim that the thief died on that day in which our Lord was crucified is predicated. To say that the Savior's declaration to him, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise," is the proof of the fact, will not do; for that application of his words is the very thing to be proved. To assume a position and then make the assumption proof of itself, is by no means allowable; the fact upon which that assumption rests must be proved; otherwise, the assumed premise is not sustained, to say the least of it; and in the case before us, the assumption is that the thief was in paradise with Christ on the day of and subsequent to his death; the fact substantiating that assumption to be proved, is that "the thief" died on that day; and without, or in absence of, such proof, the thief cannot be made to appear in paradise, to answer for himself; and must, therefore, of necessity be "declared in default," and judgment entered against him accordingly.

The examination of this testimony necessarily involves the consideration of four particulars; viz., the different modes of crucifixion, the usual time that criminals hung upon the cross before death supervened, the time indicated in the case, and the circumstances involved in the allegation. There are two known modes of crucifixion that were commonly practiced among the Romans, and are still in existence among the Chinese; and a knowledge of these has descended to us by coins, monuments, paintings, crucifixes, traditions, and authentic histories. Two varieties also of crosses were in vogue; the one consisting of a perpendicular or upright shaft, with a transverse or cross beam fastened to the upright at right angles, resembling the obelisk †; and the other composed of two timbers of equal length and size, halved together in the middle, at such an angle as to resemble the letter X; the former being called the Roman, and the latter the Grecian cross. From the centre of the upright, in the Roman cross, about two and a half to three feet below the transverse beam, there projected a wooden pin, block, or arm, which constituted a sort of rest, seat, or saddle. Upon this kind our Lord and the malefactors were crucified, which also had two modes of accomplishment; the one by placing the condemned upon the cross and nailing the hands of the extended arms to the transverse, and the feet to the perpendicular shaft, the wooden saddle projecting between the thighs, which supported the principal weight of the body. The other mode consisted in tying the criminal with cords to the transverse and upright, by the wrists and ankles, instead of nailing. Our Lord is not only represented as having been nailed, but all written testimony substantiates this as being the mode by which he was fixed to the cross; while ancient coins, medals, paintings, and well authenticated histories represent the two thieves as having been only tied to the cross, without having either hands or feet pierced with nails. In this condition, criminals were left to languish until starvation, thirst, suffering and exhaustion terminated in death.

The time of thus suffering on the cross varied. Barnes, in his notes, says "from two to seven days," Ripley says "several," Clark says "three," Benson silent; Robinson's Calmet, one of the oldest and most reliable authorities, says, p. 319, "at cross, from three to nine." Clarke says, "birds of prey often began to tear them before life was extinct." The circumstances surrounding the Savior and the malefactors for twelve or eighteen hours prior to, and while under crucifixion, are so vastly different that I feel myself entirely incompetent to delineate them, and shall, therefore, not attempt a description. Suffice it to say, that at the sixth hour, i. e., twelve o'clock, high noon of our time, Christ and the two thieves were fastened to the cross, and the process of executing the three by crucifixion was fairly, thoroughly and completely inaugurated.

At three o'clock P. M. Jesus died, and from the fact that he expired in so short a time after being placed upon the cross, only three hours, it has been generally supposed that there was something miraculous in his death. I have myself participated in this common idea; viz., that "the sin of the world" killed him, instead of its being a procuring cause, through "wicked hands." But there is some testimony upon this point deserving a place here. Matt. 27: 46 says, "about the ninth hour (3 P. M.) Jesus cried with a loud voice, ... and . . . . one of them ran and took a sponge, and filled it with vinegar, and put it on a reed, and gave him to drink; the rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him. Jesus, when he had cried again with a loud voice, yielded up the ghost." Now, according to Granville Penn, Bentley, Birch, and other eminent and reliable critics, there has been a very important passage suppressed in this place, and it originally read thus:—"About the ninth hour, Jesus cried with a loud voice, saying, Eli, Eli, lama Sabacthani, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Some of them that stood there said, This man calleth for Elias, and one of them took a sponge, filled it with vinegar, put it on a reed and gave him to drink; the rest said, Let be, let us see whether Elias will come to save him; [but another, taking a spear, pierced his side; and there came forth water and blood] and Jesus cried out again with a loud voice, and expired." This reading is sustained by the two oldest manuscripts, the Vatican and Ephrem, by the copies of Diadorus, Tatian, and various other holy fathers (Schol. Cod.. 72); by the ancient Jerusalem, Syriac and Ethiopic versions; by some of the most ancient Latin versions, and in six other MSS. (L., 5, 48, 67, 115 and 127 of Wetstein.) The passage was condemned in the fourteenth century, by Pope Clement V., and his successor John. See Bible versus Tradition, pp. 96, 97. This certainly throws light on Acts 2: 23, 3: 14, 5: 30, 7: 22, and 10: 39, "by wicked hands have crucified and slain;" "desired a murderer to be granted unto you, and killed the prince of life;" "whom ye slew and hanged on a tree;" "of whom ye have been now the betrayers and murderers;" "whom they slew and hanged on a tree." This removes not only a miraculous interposition, but accords exactly in time, place, and manner with the killing of the passover lamb as a type of Christ our sacrifice, and does not in the least detract from the efficacy of the atoning sacrifice, inasmuch as we receive justification unto life by his being raised again; and this fully explains why he did not linger longer in agonizing suffering, when others sometimes continued nine days instead of three hours. This, three to six P. M., was the preparation, i. e., the time in which the lamb for the Jewish passover was slain, and roasted with fire, preparatory to eating. See Ex. 12: 3-12. Private persons brought lambs to the temple, and there slew them; they then offered the blood to the priests, who poured it out at the foot of the altar; but the eating of that passover was to be done in the night, Ex. 12: 8-10; and, in the year of the crucifixion, it is claimed that the Jewish Sabbath was a passover day, which day began at six o'clock at night, being the time of the vernal equinox; and from then (six) until morning (six again), it was lawful to eat the passover; and after that was the passover feast of unleavened bread.

This brings us to consider the three intervening hours, from three o'clock P. M., when Christ died, to six; being the only remaining time of that day. When the writings and sayings of different men are examined in relation to the events that transpired within that time, in reference to the two malefactors, it is truly astonishing and painful to see how they have not only labored, supposed, pettifogged, and assumed, but begged the entire question, so as to proclaim the thief dead before six P. M., in order to have him in paradise with Christ that day. Every author consulted on that side of the question affirms that the object of breaking their legs was to hasten their death, that they might be buried before sundown; and some go so far as to say, that the request was made of Pilate for "the three," with that object expressed; whereas, neither of the thieves could be buried at all.—Robinson's Calmet, p. 223, art. Calvary. Nor could Jesus, had not Joseph begged his body. For breaking their legs there was another reason; i. e., the Roman law condemned these men to death: the Jewish, or Mosaic law would not allow a dead man to hang all night at any time—Deut. 21: 23, Josh. 8: 29, 10: 27, 27; nor a criminal over the Sabbath, dead or alive.—Jno. 19: 31. But to take down these thieves, who had been only tied to the cross, sitting upon their wooden saddles, and who, consequently (as Clarke says on Luke 23: 39), "could not have suffered much," and take them away to the valley of Gehinnom, where criminals were to be deposited, and burned up (Robinson's Calmet, p. 450, art. Gehenna), after execution of sentence, would be to defraud the Roman law out of its victims, and justice of its due; for if thus carried away and placed in the valley, they could easily jump up and run off, thus escaping the reward of demerit: so a compromise was made, a petition was preferred to Pilate, that their "legs might be broken and they be taken away;" this included Christ; and the only reason that his were not broken was that he was already dead. The law in his case was fulfilled; he could not escape, for dead men cannot run away, even though their legs be whole; and the only thing that could save him from being carried away to Gehenna, and burnt up, was another petition to the Roman governor, Pilate, which was accordingly presented by Joseph, and granted by Pilate; but when this petition came it was already getting late; for, according to John 19; 38, Joseph did not go to Pilate until after the soldiers had completed the breaking of the malefactors' legs; and the petition to break their legs was not made until three o'clock P. M. Jno. 19: 31.

But how late was it at this time? Clarke says on Matt. 27: 57, "the Jewish passover beginning about four, it was necessary that Joseph, who would not fail to eat the passover at the usual time, should have obtained and buried the body of Christ sometime before four o'clock;" and on Luke 23: 54, "and the Sabbath drew on, or, Clarke says, "the Sabbath was lighting up; i. e., with the candles which the Jews light just before six in the evening, when the Sabbath commences." Now Luke says, it was at this time, when they took down the body, wrapped it in linen and laid it in a sepulchre," that Jno. 19: 42 says "was nigh at hand;" and the reason he assigns for putting it there was the shortness of the time before the Sabbath commenced, because of the Jews' preparation." Mark says, 15: 44, that Pilate marvelled, i. e., wondered, was amazed, astonished, when Joseph "went in boldly . . . . and craved the body of Jesus." He could not believe that Joseph was telling him the truth; that Jesus was dead; and notwithstanding he had given permission for his legs to be broken, and supposed the request had been carried into effect, still he could not help thinking but what there must be either some mistake, or that the Jew was practicing some deception upon him; so he sent for the centurion, who had watched Jesus, to know if Joseph's statement was correct, and if so, had he been any while dead—long enough to show satisfactorily that it was any thing more than a fainting fit, or synchopee? "And when he knew it of the centurion, he gave the body to Joseph;" i. e., when the centurion had confirmed Joseph's previous statement, that Jesus was dead. But if the coup de grace of breaking their legs, as Clarke says on Luke 23: 39, "put a speedy end to their lives," how happens it that Pilate, who was altogether conversant with all the chances of death by crucifixion, still marvelled at the statement that Christ was dead, when himself had given the order for this coup de grace?" The plain matter of fact is, he knew better; and Joseph Benson says, on Mark 15: 44, Pilate knew they (Christ and the thieves) might live some hours in that condition, and so it is plain that Piilate, who had supposed Christ's legs broken, did not believe, between four and six o'clock, that Jesus was dead, who had suffered so much; how, then, shall we believe that the breaking of the malefactor's legs should cause their death in less than three hours, when they had suffered, comparatively, so little?

During the winter of 1835-6, the foreman of a saw-mill, belonging to the then existing firm of Pope and Peabody, in Keesville, on the Ausable river, Essex Co., N. Y., caught his foot in the mash cogs of the mill wheel, and the entire leg to the thigh was mashed to chowder, and yet he lived over twelve hours, —if memory serves me correctly eighteen hours—after the accident; and the surgical and hospital reports are full of such cases; nay, almost every community can produce specimens, and yet we are called upon in the light of such facts staring us in the face,—called upon in open defiance of Pilate's admitted knowledge of facts to the contrary,—called upon with the knowledge that the supporters of the allegation themselves see and feel the weakness, lameness, and inconsistency, of the claim set up, the testimony advanced, and the improbability of the correctness of their own conclusions, and the consequent conjecture that the soldiers might with their hammers have dealt them a blow in some vital part, so as to make their improbabilities a little more probable; under such circumstances, we are asked to render a verdict in the case, that the thieves, the penitent one in particular, came to their—or his—death, before six o'clock on the day of our Savior's crucifixion, in less than three hours, in consequence of having had their legs broken, after having been tied to the cross three other hours, where they were mostly supported by a wooden block or saddle, and where the claimants themselves admit, "they could not have suffered much," and this verdict is asked for in order that the affirmants may sustain their claim, that the words of the Savior may be so construed in law that they shall place the soul of the one thief in paradise with him on the same day of his crucifixion, contrary to his own positive law, that "whither I go ye cannot come." Verdict rendered—allegation not sustained by the evidence in the case.

MOSES ON THE MOUNT.

BRO. GRANT:—While reading an article in the Crisis of Aug. 15th, on the Transfiguration, a few thoughts suggested themselves to my mind; and I feel impressed to say a few words through the Crisis for the first time, if you consider them worth the room in your valuable paper.

This passage (Matt. 17: 3) is often quoted, with several other inferential passages, by the so-called orthodoxy, to prove the immortality of the soul. Well, I suppose it is the best they can do, for they have no positive proof. Now, to prove the immortality of the soul from this text, the argument is, as Moses was dead, and yet appeared on the mount talking with Christ, it must have been his soul and not his body that talked. Well, this is perhaps as well as they can do under the circumstances; but there is one fatal objection to this reasoning, and that is, it takes for granted what it attempts to prove. Would it not be well to prove that Moses had an immortal soul first? Cannot these few inferential passages, that they quote, be explained as well without the immortal soul as with? Most certainly they can. Let us see.

In the first place, this account affords no evidence that either Moses or Elias was ever on that mountain. It begins thus:—"Verily I say unto you, There be some standing here which shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of man coming in his kingdom." All agree that this promise was fulfilled about six days after (except a few that believe that it was fulfilled on the day of Pentecost), when he took Peter, James and John, upon the mountain, and was transfigured before them. Now, the question is, Did Christ then and there come into his kingdom? if so, the kingdom of heaven is on that mountain, for it is an everlasting kingdom; but if Christ did not come then in his kingdom, Moses and Elias were not there. How was it then? The 9th verse of the 17th chapter explains the mystery. "And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them saying, Tell the vision to no man until the Son of man be risen again from the dead." It was a vision. Peter, James and John looked into the future, and saw Christ in his kingdom, enshrouded in that bright glory he will have in his coming kingdom, so near at hand; and in that kingdom, they saw Moses and Elias. John saw a new heaven and a new earth, and the holy city; but they were not on the isle of Patmos; they were in the future. Was Peter's trance, or vision, a reality, or a literal transaction (Acts 10: 10, 11), when he saw the great sheet let down from heaven? The same was true of Paul, when he was caught up to paradise. It was a vision. 2 Cor. 12: 1. He saw into the future. I heard a man quote this last passage last Sabbath to prove the immortality of the soul. I felt sorry for him, when I considered the thick darkness that shrouded my own mind upon this subject for thirty long years; but, God be praised, the true light is shining; and all who will may throw off the yoke of bondage to the creeds and traditions of men, and stand forth rejoicing in the liberty of the gospel, for the truth shall make us free, if we will receive it; and whom the Son makes free is "free indeed."

NEARING HOME.

Yes, dear brethren and sisters, we are nearing home. The wheels of time are rolling on with the celerity of the lightning flash, and every revolution brings us one day nearer our Eden home. Soon we shall be there. O, what a stupendous thought! Immortality secured in the paradise of God. No more aches and pains; no more sighs and tears; no, nothing there to mar the happiness of God's dear saints, in the bright world to come. The tree of life, lost by Adam's fall, once more blooms on Eden's aromatic plains. The forest songsters tune their warbling notes without a fear of harm, and the (now) ferocious beasts lie submissive at the infant's feet.

The glorified saints, redeemed from hades' dark gloom, participate in the full fruition of their hope, while sparkling diadems deck their immortal brows.

And can it be that we are within a few brief years of that blissful home? Yes, the clarion notes of the last loud trump may break the silent watches of to-morrow's night. And are we prepared for that event? Have we done our duty in warning our fellow men? If not, then let us be up and doing, that we may meet the approbating smile of Him who knows the secrets of our hearts, when he shall come to render unto every man according as his deeds shall be.

The wheels of time are rolling on,
The day is drawing near,
When Israel's King, God's royal Son,
In glory shall appear;
And those who bravely meet the strife,
And to the end endure,
Shall gain a crown of endless life,
Which is "in Christ secure."
But those who do despise his name,
Or shun the cross to bear,
Shall in "that day" be put to shame,
And doomed to dark despair.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Report of the "Maine Advent Annual Conference," held Sept. 7th to 10th, 1865. Conference met at the Baptist meeting-house in Belgrade, according to appointment, at seven o'clock in the evening, when a discourse was preached by Bro. J. T. Jordan, founded on Heb. 2 : 6.

Sept. 8th, at 9 o'clock, a good social meeting commenced, which continued till noon. At 2 P. M., Bro. C. Goud preached from 1 Cor. 3 : 2. Several warm exhortations followed, and one penitent soul requested prayers. In the evening, Bro. L. L. Howard preached from Heb. 9 : 27, 28.

Sept. 9th. The President and Secretary having arrived, conference met for business at 8 A. M. Bro. H. B. Seavey was chosen President, D. W. Griffin and R. R. York Secretaries for the ensuing year.

Voted, That the chairman appoint a committee of three to prepare and present business for the conference. W. H. Mitchell, L. L. Howard, and R. R. York, were appointed said committee. The committee reported the following work in its order before the conference, viz:

1st. To hear the report of the committee chosen last year, to examine more fully the case of Eld. Jesse Partridge, and report to this meeting.

2nd. See if any change should be made in the boundaries of our quarterly conference.

3d. Hear the report of the committee appointed last year to dispose of missionary property.

4th. Hear the report of the preachers and others in relation to their labors the past year. Conference voted to accept the report of the business committee.

The report of the committee on the case of Eld. J. Partridge was read, and adopted by the committee. This report states, "That after a prayerful and careful consideration of the case, it is decided that Eld. Partridge is not worthy of the fellowship of this conference as a christian minister."

The report of the committee on Mission property was read and accepted. The amount received for said property was eighty dollars, and was transferred to the Maine Second Advent Tract Society. The business of the conference was then adjourned to be taken up at the close of the afternoon service.

11 A. M. Bro. W. H. Mitchell preached from Rom. 8 : 2. At 2 P. M., Bro. I. C. Wellcome gave a discourse founded on Luke 1 : 32, 33, after which the conference met for business.

The subject of changing the boundaries of the quarterly conference was taken up in its order. The request of the "Western Quarterly Conference," that its boundaries be changed, so as to embrace all the territory in Maine west of Augusta, extending north-west as far as Lewiston, thence to Windham, and on in a direct line west to New Hampshire, was granted.

The following preambles, etc., were presented, and adopted by the conference, viz: Whereas the circulation of books and tracts exerts a powerful influence in community, it becomes us to distribute those which are the most sound in theology and devotional in spirit. We therefore commend to our brethren generally the works of Bro. H. L. Hastings, as among the most important now published on the great subjects which should demand the attention of this generation. Also the works of Bro. S. S. Brewer. While we are deeply interested in many other works, we think the above named worthy of special commendation, as exerting a healthy and salutary influence.

Whereas we have long waited for a good collection of hymns and tunes, as a substantial book among us, and seeing no prospect of any such being obtained; we earnestly request Bro. Hastings to publish as soon as possible the "Hymn and Tune Book" he has for some time past been preparing, believing that he has the facilities and ability to produce a book that will give satisfaction.

Voted, To adjourn to Sunday morning at 8½ o'clock, then to hear the report of the preachers and others.

At 7 P. M., Bro. McDaniels of New Hampshire preached from Prov. 8 : 4. Sunday morn, 8½ o'clock, conference met, and for an hour listened to brief reports of the preachers relating to their labors since our last yearly session.

A synopsis of these reports is in the hands of the Secretaries, but as "short articles" are called for, it is thought best to omit them. We would however say that the reports were of a very encouraging nature, showing that most had been hard at work in the vineyard of the Lord; and as a general thing, good results of their labors had been seen. New fields of labor were opening, and the calls for help were increasing.

On motion, the chairman appointed a committee of one from each quarterly conference to correspond with the ministers and churches within their respective boundaries, "to see if the conference shall be dissolved and a new one organized," and to report at our next annual meeting.

The following brethren were appointed said committee:—Israel Damman, E. M. Haggett, Wm. H. Mitchell, and Jas. A. Libby.

Voted, To adjourn to meet again, if the Lord will, at the call of the Chairman and Secretaries. At 9½ A. M. a good social interview was started, which lasted for one hour, at the close of which Bro. C. Goud preached from Rom. 5 : 18. In the afternoon Bro. W. H. Mitchell gave a discourse founded on 1 Cor. 16 : 22. At the close of this service the Secretaries were obliged to leave, consequently cannot report the evening meeting.

The meetings were all well attended, and it was truly good to meet the old veterans in the cause, as well as those who have recently enlisted in the "loyal army."

The names of the preachers present were as follows, viz:—H. B. Sevey, I. C. Wellcome, L. L. Howard, W. H. Mitchell, C. Goud, D. M. Hanscomb, J. T. Jordan, J. R. Hall, J. Dudley, Isaac Wight, H. D. Reed, L. Rhodes, J. Carr, J. Meader and R. R. York, of Maine; Bro. — McDaniels of N. H.

The friends living where the conference was held, most cheerfully entertained us. May [illegible] Lord reward them.

H. B. Sevey, President,
D. W. Griffin, } Secretaries.

THE FREEDMEN'S MISSION.

Thank the Lord, there are some noble hearts that sympathize with those who sit in darkness, who are ready to go and carry them the light. The greatest missionary field ever opened in these last days is now all ready for the reapers—the Southern field among the Freedmen. Theirs is truly a Macedonian cry—"Come over . . . and help us." Several stand ready to go at this earnest call for help, as soon as ways and means are provided. Four noble-hearted souls will soon be on their way to carry the glad tidings that Jesus is soon coming to end earth's long night of sorrow, which none have felt more than the poor slaves. Brn. and Srs., let us take hold of this work in earnest. Send your offerings with a liberal hand, that those who go may not be fettered for want of means. The case is urgent, and needs the most prompt action to secure success. Satan is laying his plans to secure the field if possible. Let us head him in the name and strength of the Lord. This is the time when our efforts will tell effectually if put forth with a holy zeal. Do not hesitate.

"Strike! let every nerve and sinew Tell on ages—tell for God."

A GOOD USE OF ORNAMENTS.

Recently, several have given up their jewelry, and requested that whatever it is worth should be devoted to the cause of Christ, to scatter tracts, and help sustain the Freedmen's mission. We are glad to see this spirit of sacrifice. It is good evidence that the Spirit of the Lord is allowed to work upon the hearts of those who lay aside their foolish ornaments which the Bible forbids. How long will those who are looking for the speedy return of their heavenly Bridegroom continue to ape the vanities of this world? Is it not high time for those who would be "ready" "for the marriage of the Lamb," to cease their conformity to this world's foolish fashions, laying aside their golden idols and adorning themselves instead with a "meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price?"

The bride should have some respect to the feelings and taste of the Bridegroom in selecting her dress,—certainly in this case; for it is evident that his taste is the best. Is it becoming to his bride then, to disregard his feelings, and go and ornament herself after the manner of the worst enemies of the coming Bridegroom? Will he be pleased with such conformity to the world, after having said to her, "BE NOT CONFORMED TO THIS WORLD?"

Does it show love for him and his appearing? This is a serious matter, and demands immediate attention from those who wish to be prepared for the marriage of the Lamb. We know it is crossing; but if the cross is not borne, we learn from the Scriptures that we are not "worthy" of Jesus. Consider what crosses he bore for us. Can we not take a small burden upon us for his sake? or shall we seek to please a wicked world instead, and conform to its costly and foolish customs? When we do the latter, it only shows that we are "of the world," and hence try to please it. We think this matter needs the prayerful attention of all who wish to be ready to meet the Savior in peace at his coming. We cannot please the Lord, and at the same time follow the fashions and manners of the world. We must leave one or the other. The choice is ours. What shall be done? This subject has been treated with altogether too much indifference. One would think that all that most professors of religion aimed to do, was to live about as well as others, without attempting to regulate their conduct entirely by the Bible. Come, brethren and sisters, let us make an effort to live nearer to the Lord, that we may be more useful in the great field of labor spread out before us. It is no time now to be weary in well-doing. "The end of all things is at hand." "Remember Lot's wife."

A NEW HYMN BOOK.

The Christian Publication Society purpose to issue as soon as possible a new hymn and tune book that shall surpass any before published. The work is now in progress, and will be urged to its completion as fast as practicable. Those who have choice hymns or tunes not found in the Christian Lyre, which they wish inserted, please forward them at once, and they will receive all due attention.

A STRANGE UNION.

These are strange times! People may well inquire, "what next?" There is progress,—rapid progress, but is it for the better or worse. Is the world rising in the moral scale? or is the church falling, and approaching nearer to the world? Is Catholicism advancing nearer the true standard of christianity? or are other churches departing from "the faith once delivered to the saints?" It must be one or the other, for the distance between them is rapidly diminishing. It needs but observation to see which way the current runs, and those who get into it will find it hard to escape.

Satan has introduced a new and very shrewd policy in these last days. For years past he [illegible] christians at war with each other about something, and in this terrible work he has had great success; and now having persuaded them to quarrel all the Spirit of Christ away, he proposes to have them unite under his banner, and call it "christian union." While he is getting up the counterfeit, let the true followers of Jesus see that they exhibit the genuine spirit of christian union, unmingled with the blighting influences of sectarianism, which has exerted a very disastrous influence in the world. Sectarianism only helps its own party; while christianity is ready to help every one, and to unite with all who truly love Jesus, in every denomination. While backsliders and the world are uniting in what they may call "christian union," for secular purposes, let the true-hearted disciples of Christ come out from the world, and be "separate, saith the Lord, . . . and I will receive you."—2 Cor. 6 : 19. Try it.

The following is the "strange union" to which we refer in the heading of this article:

A NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT:—A singular religious movement was begun in England a few weeks ago. It is proposed to unite the members of the English, Roman Catholic and Greek churches in friendly communion, and the public journals report that three hundred churches in England have assented to the measure. From a statement made by Rev. F. G. Hall, formerly of St. Edmund Hall, Oxford, we gather the following indications of the character and purpose of this movement:

"An institution has been formed under the title of 'The Association for the Promotion of the Unity of Christendom,' to unite in a bond of intercessory prayer members both of the clergy and laity of the Roman Catholic, Greek and Anglican communions. 'To all,' it is said, 'who, while they lament the divisions amongst christians, look forward for their healing mainly to a corporate reunion of those three great bodies which claim for themselves the inheritance of the priesthood and the name of Catholic, an appeal is made. They are not asked to compromise any principles which they, rightly or wrongly, hold dear; they are simply asked to unite for the promotion of a high and holy end'"

The names of members are to be kept strictly private, and the only obligation imposed upon those who join the association is the daily use of a short form of prayer, to which is added, in the case of priests, the offering, at least once in three months, of the Holy Sacrifice.—Boston Journal, Sept. 22nd.

HOLY FIRE.

The following from the Earnest Christian,—a most excellent religious monthly, worth a cart load of ordinary monthlies,—we would like to have those read who write for the Crisis. We think the Earnest Christian has taken a correct view of the subject.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR WRITING.

We are determined, by God's help, to keep our columns to the one thing—salvation in its life and power. We thank the Lord for giving us so many contributors whose hearts glow with love to God and man. Our proportion of original matter is greater than that of any similar magazine with which we are acquainted. Yet we are obliged to decline much that is sent us. It may be well written, but it lacks the fire and power. If you would write acceptably for us, come from the closet to your desk with your soul baptized with the Holy Ghost. Write because you feel the truth shut up in your bones. Get courage to write boldly, and be willing to assume the responsibility of what you say. We are obliged to decline many articles because the writers fail to send us their names. A brother in a letter to us says:

'I do not think any one ought to attempt to write for the Earnest Christian until fully saved. He may have a talent for writing, be gifted, educated and all this, yet there will be a great lack without the anointing of the holy fire. A written article may be full of the Holy Ghost as well as an exhortation or sermon. Why, I have read articles that seemed to send shock after shock of divine power through soul and body, and I always think these come from a sanctified pen, held in a sanctified hand, which was a part of a sanctified body, which was a temple of the Holy Ghost. Now these are just the kind for the Earnest Christian. Its readers, most of them, expect just such a stream of red hot gospel lava from a volcano of holy fire every time it comes, and this is what they have had, and this is what they love. This they cannot very well do without, and not droop and wither and die."

MORE PRAISE.

We think christians would enjoy themselves much better, and exert a more healthy influence upon society, if they praised the Lord more. The Scriptures show very clearly that the Lord is specially pleased with the praises of his children. We know they tend to refine, as well as to comfort those who offer them to the Most High. Complaining and murmuring are very disagreeable to the Lord, as well as to ourselves. We read in the Bible, "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth me." The more we praise him, the more we are inclined to do so; and the sweeter the peace that follows. We have constant reasons for praise. Let us look more on the bright side, and we shall see more occasion for "spiritual songs," and sooner forget our cares and troubles. Our pilgrimage will seem shorter, our pathway brighter, our burdens lighter, if we often praise Him from whom all blessings flow.

The following from Dr. Nevins is worthy of consideration:—

"It strikes me that we ought to praise more, as well as pray more. I do not know how it is with others, but I know that I have a great deal for which to be thankful, and to praise God. I feel that it will not do for me to spend all my breath in praying. I should thus, it is true, acknowledge my dependence on God; but where would be the acknowledgment of his benefits conferred on me? I must spend a part of my breath in praise. God has been very good to me. Yes, he has exercised goodness towards me in all its various forms of pity, forbearance, care, bounty, grace, and mercy; or, to express all in one word, 'God is love,' and he has been love to me.

I do not know why he should have treated me so kindly. I have sought, but can find no reason out of himself. I conclude it is because he 'delighteth in mercy.' I think I shall be able, without weariness, to spend eternity on the topic of Divine love and goodness.

Shall we not praise God? Shall all our devotion consist in prayer? Shall we be always thinking of our wants, and never of his benefits? always dwelling on what remains to be done, and never thinking of what has been already done for us? always uttering desire, and never expressing gratitude? expending all our voice in supplication, and none of it in song? Is this the way to treat a benefactor? No! it is not just so to treat Him; neither is it wise. It is very bad policy to praise no more than christians in general do. They would have much more success in prayer, if one-half the time they now spend in it were spent in praise. I do not mean that they pray too much, but that they praise too little. I suspect that the reason why the Lord did such great things for the Psalmist was, that while he was not by any means deficient in prayer, he abounded in praise. The Lord heard his Psalms, and while he sung of mercy shown, showed him more. And it would be just so with us, if we abounded more in praise and thanksgiving. It displeases God that we should be always dwelling on our wants, as if he had never supplied one of them.

How do we know that God is not waiting for us to praise him for benefits he has already conferred, before he will confer on us that other which we may now be so earnestly desiring of him. For one who offers genuine praise, there may be found ten who pray. Ten lepers lifted up their voices together in prayer. 'Jesus, Master, have mercy on us,' but only one of the ten 'returned to give glory to God.' The rest were satisfied with the benefit—this one only thought gratefully of the benefactor.

Praise is altogether the superior exercise of the two. Prayer may be altogether selfish in its origin, but praise is ingenuous. Praise is the employment of heaven: Angels praise. The spirits of the just made perfect praise. We shall not always pray, but we shall ever praise. I charge thee, my soul, to praise him, and he will never let thee want matter for praise. 'While I live will I praise the Lord! I will sing praises unto my God while I have any being!'"—Presbyterian.

SECOND DEATH.

BRO. GRANT:—Is the term "Second Death," found in Rev. 21 : 8, or in other places, found in the original, or is it supplied?

The words rendered "second death," "in Rev. 21 : 8, and other places" are deuteros thanatos, and are not supplied by the translators, but are in the original Greek.

SOCIAL HYMNS.

We are using this precious little collection of hymns, by H. L. Hastings, in our family devotions. They add so much to our joy and strength that I wish to commend them to others. Every devoted soul will there find hymns which express better than they themselves can the varied sentiments and feelings of their hearts. While we are waiting for a larger collection, we can well afford to purchase and use this, especially for social and family worship.

WANTED, WANTED.

In the city of Philadelphia, two of us missionaries have gathered together from the narrow streets, courts, and alleys of "Satan's Seat," more than one hundred boys and girls, who did not go anywhere to Sunday school; and we have now organized them into a Sunday school, called the "Dorcas Mission Sunday School." We have hired two halls in one building to accommodate them, and a number of men and women, who are also connected with the school as learners. This is an Advent mission. Sr. R. Reeves is superintendent, and Sr. M. Helginson assistant superintendent. The brethren in Philadelphia have been very liberal in the past towards us in our labors among the lowly, and I do not care to press this new matter upon them; so, through the columns of the Crisis, I invite others to take hold and help in the following manner:

It is well known that the children's paper, "The Young Pilgrim," needs help by way of subscribers and subscription; therefore, I want the readers of the Crisis to present the "Dorcas Mission School," of over one hundred scholars, with at least fifty copies of "The Pilgrim." In this manner, you will help the paper, encourage Adventist missionaries, and will gladden the hearts of more than one hundred poor little black girls and boys. The total cost of fifty copies will be but seventeen dollars and a half. Twenty-five dollars will furnish us with over seventy copies, which would be all the better, for our school is but nine weeks old, and increasing in numbers. We expect one hundred and fifty members will be our number ere long.

I propose that a column in the Crisis have a small space set apart for this object. God loves a cheerful giver. Five brethren could give us the seventy copies.

Yours in Christ, F. H. BURBANK.

ALTON BAY CAMPMEETING.

BRO. GRANT:—When I look back to the campmeeting that has just closed at Alton Bay, and think what a great blessing I received there, it seems as though I must let others know it. I trust this campmeeting will long be remembered by me and others.

I am glad, and feel to thank the Lord, that he impressed it upon my mind to go there. It was there that I gave my heart to the Lord, and found him ready and willing to receive and forgive me. What a dear Savior I have found; one that will stand by me even unto the end of the world, if I am only faithful to him. I mean, by the grace of God, to be faithful, and do every known duty. When I think of that beautiful lake by the side of the camp-ground, where Jesus washed my sins away, I feel to take new courage. Shall I ever forget those blessed seasons which I enjoyed? My heart answers, no.

How good the Lord has been to us in sparing our lives, and permitting us to meet there to worship him, while many were deprived of that blessed privilege by sickness and death; yet I was spared, after I have been so wicked and sinned against God with such an high hand. I once was blind, but now I see. Thanks be to God. I have tried the pleasures of this wicked world long enough. I have found them perishing; but if our hope and trust are in things above, there we can find something that will last till Jesus comes. I mean to have my trust in divine and heavenly things, that when he comes, it may be said unto me, Well and faithfully done; enter into my joys, and sit down on my throne.

How hard it was for us to part at the end of the campmeeting! But we have one thing to console us; that is, if we are only faithful, we shall meet when Jesus comes to gather his children together in that great and glorious meeting, where parting scenes will be known no more forever. The Lord help us to be there, is the prayer of your unworthy sister, CATIE A. TILTON.

ITALIAN MISSION.

BRO. GRANT:—My occupation the last two weeks has been to exhort my dear brethren and sisters Vaudois to be faithful to the grace given them, and walk in the light they have received, and to give lessons in Bible Theology to the young brethren of whom I have frequently written you; and last, but not least, to write on the important subjects of our faith to several noble persons of much influence, whose acquaintance I made in Germany, Bavaria, Saxony, and Poland, during my absence. Many became interested, and desired more light, and having no publications to give them, I must do what I can by writing to interest them in the study of the Scriptures and make its doctrines plain to their understanding. Dear brethren, if we truly believe that Jesus is so soon coming, we shall surely do all in our power to rouse our fellow creatures to a preparation for that momentous event. I consider the "Italian Mission" a European mission, and have from the commencement; and in view of the vast field of labor before me, I feel called upon to be very active in this good work.

I suppose that this is the last report I shall write you from La Tour, at least for the present; as I expect, Providence permitting, to spend the fall and winter in Switzerland, near the Lake of Newchatel. I have already devoted more time to preaching in this vicinity than I expected when I came here, and I found during my journey in Switzerland and Germany such earnest calls for light, that I feel I cannot longer tarry here, but must preach this gospel to other cities, aye, and countries also.

Switzerland is a free republic, and will be more central for a residence of my family while I am laboring there, in Germany, and the adjacent countries. I shall leave brother Francois Besson in charge here among the Vaudois, his own people. Bro. Joseph Jones will labor in Tuscany until it seems to be the will of God that he should go elsewhere. Bro. Jean Geymet expects to accompany us to Switzerland and assist me in the large field that is open for me. Be so kind therefore as to retain our papers for the present, until I shall write you my P. O. address, as it is impossible for me to give it you at this time.

I had the pleasure of receiving the 27th inst. a letter from Bro. Adams through Bro. Herron, containing a draft for 477 11-100 fr., for which I am very grateful. May God abundantly bless all the dear brethren and sisters who have given of their means to sustain us while laboring in this work of the Lord. The money is most acceptable at the present time. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may be very useful in the Lord's vineyard.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still preaching the word from house to house. I left my brother E. full in the faith of the soon coming of his Master, to raise the sleeping dead, to put on incorruption, and this mortal immortality. He is a good brother, and is at work in his Master's cause. Those words of the prophet Isaiah are a consolation to him in his deep trials:—"Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word; your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified; but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed." The greatest enemies are those of his own house. Pray for him.

There is plenty of field for more laborers over these western prairies and among these bluffs. Opposition to the present truth is increasing, the further you go west and the nearer we come to the judgment; but I must cry aloud, lift up my voice like a trumpet, and warn the people, whether they hear or forbear, that the blood of souls may not be required at my hands.

Sister Rowel is spending all her time traveling and preaching from Winona, on the Mississippi river, to Chapfield, in Fillmore county, about one hundred miles. Some few are getting the cords of priestcraft loosened, and some severed. Bless the Lord. But there is that whispering,—"I guess she is a soul's-keeper," and "I am afraid she is a time-setter," and "I don't know what she believes about taking up arms to protect our government."

At Lone Rock, Richland Co., Wis., I arrived late in the evening, and called for supper and lodging, for I had traveled from seven in the morning without food. I chose Graham bread and milk, and tomatoes for supper. The landlord thought I was the oddest man he ever saw. I gave him a lecture on health, and on being overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness. I gave him one more lecture in the morning, and had to reprove him for swearing in the contest. When I asked for my bill, he told me in a friendly manner I was welcome, and asked me to stop the next time I came that way. So much for preaching the word in a bar-room. I could say peace be to that house.

I have been turned off by ministers and members of sects; but have not yet had to say like my Master, I had not where to lay my head. Thank God. I am spreading your tracts and papers through this western region. I am now at Ithica, Richland Co. I intend to go to the Western Conference in Sauk Co., calling on Bro. Turner on my way to the meeting. I pray that God will send out more preachers, teachers, and evangelists, into this part of the world. The tares are ripening up for the harvest. Be faithful to your calling, brethren. H. MCCLARY.

NOTES OF A CALIFORNIA TOUR.

NUMBER TWO.

BRO. GRANT:—After having visited the United States mint in San Francisco, and seen many chemical experiments showing us how silver and gold are separated and made ready for the dies, and seen twelve thousand dollars in twenty dollar gold pieces pass under the dies in a minute, and thinking that the works are crowded day after day, and people are at work in the mines digging out immense quantities, which are being sent into the mint daily to be put into United States coin, and then thinking that is the very thing that is sinking men into perdition,—for it seems as though that was all most of the people think of here in California,—I am ready to exclaim, "How vain are all things here below."

Having taken the street cars and visited the Old Mission, and the sugar refinery, I started July 3d for Sacramento, by steam, and arrived there at one o'clock on the morning of the 4th. As there was no stage coming to this place, I had to stay in that city over the 4th. On the morning of the 5th, I took stage for this place. I found Bro. Pike sick, but he soon recovered. Bro. Pike has lived here over three years, and has been very vigilant in getting subscribers for the Crisis, and scattering books. He succeeded in getting forty to take the Crisis; but as they heard no preaching on these subjects, and the most of them belong to the Campbellite church, and it has been very hard times for the last two years, the most of them have stopped the paper. He being very anxious to have the people hear on the subject, he addressed a letter to me at San Francisco, to come up here and hold some meetings. He was the only Adventist that I received an invitation from to come and preach in their neighborhood, in response to the letter I published in the Crisis, that I would do so if they wished. I commenced meetings in the Union meeting-house.

A DISCUSSION.

After holding meetings a little over a week, nearly every evening, I preached on the subject of Spiritualism. I then challenged any competent person to discuss the question of the state of the dead. Mr. Pendegast, one of their preachers, concluded to accept the challenge. He drew up the question as he wished,—"That the soul, body and spirit are utterly unconscious until the resurrection, after man dies." I took the affirmative, he the negative. In my opening, I admitted that man has a soul and spirit, but when he dies, the dust returns to the earth, as it was, and the spirit returns to God who gave it; and when that took place, his thoughts perished, and there could be no consciousness without thoughts, whether applied to soul, body, or spirit.

In all of his quotations, he could only get them separated, which I admitted in the beginning, therefore he could not prove that they were conscious. The last evening of the discussion he made quite a confession to his church. Said he, "I confess that I have not done my duty to you, before this discussion commenced, in my preaching to you. I have been delinquent. Yes, I have sinned. I could not have given a reason for my hope in regard to these questions, but this discussion has set me to searching the Scriptures. It has done me good. These are important questions."

After having called on me repeatedly to tell them what became of Christ's soul and spirit when he died, and being asked if they are unconscious, I replied, "Let him tell me if he can." I turned to the 53d chapter of Isaiah, and read, he made "his soul an offering for sin," and he "poured out his soul unto death." He pretended to be so horrified that he almost raved, and said could it be possible that I, a minister of the gospel should stand in that sacred place and teach that this universe was without a God for three days and three nights? Yet he did not tell the people what those passages did mean. I did not say the spirit died, but he would have it that I taught that the soul, body, and spirit, died. The people manifested a great deal of interest in the discussion. They bought quite a number of books, and I think much good will grow out of the discussion. He was very sarcastic, and violated the rules of the discussion, which he wrote himself; one of which was, that there should be no offensive personalities. He indulged in them so much, that he would feel so guilty he would say to the congregation and chairman, that he could not help it, and they must overlook it.

But I think the Lord helped me not to retaliate, and to keep that propensity under, which I confess is naturally very strong in me. He acknowledged that I was very fair, and he believed me to be a good christian, and would give me the credit of believing what I preached; that my heart was all right, but there were two or three screws loose in my head. He contended that God said that Samuel talked with Saul, and what he said was God's truth; that it was the best sermon he ever heard. This he said after having said I went to the Old Testament for my proof, where Brigham Young goes to get his authority for polygamy. He took the New Testament for his guide, he said. The discussion has set people to searching their Bibles, to see if these things are so. I hope and pray that it may be the means of preparing a number who will let their light shine, and be ready for the coming of the Lord.

Yours, hoping that Jesus will soon come and give us the kingdom, P. A. SMITH.

PERILOUS TIMES.

Brethren, it seems to me that the tares are ripening for the harvest faster than the wheat. Those that have departed from the faith, and have given heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils, speaking lies in hypocrisy, are becoming wiser in their generation than we that profess to be the children of light.

O brethren, don't be deceived by them. They will, if it be possible, deceive even the very elect. They are taking photographs of the dead as natural as life. I warn you not to have any thing to do with pleasant pictures. "For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up, . . . and upon all pleasant pictures, . . . when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth. In that day shall a man cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they . . . . worship, to the moles and to the bats. . . "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?"

Brethren, we must come out and be separate in all these things, "and have no fellowship with" them, "but rather reprove them." Get "on the whole armor," so that we can "be able to stand," "and, having done all, to stand." I find we have to fight "against principalities, against powers, . . . against spiritual wickedness in high places," and against the powers "of the darkness of this world." We need the word of God for "the sword of the Spirit," and our "loins girt about with truth," . . . and "our feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace." Then we must have the wisdom of our Master to use them effectually to his glory, and the benefit of our fellowmen. O that I, with you, my dear brethren, may be found at the coming of Christ, "walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord blameless."

For the World's Crisis.

DECIDEDLY NEW.

A very prominent member of the Baptist church in this place, in a conversation a few days since, said, "A few years ago the world was in a fair way to be converted, and the glorious time seemed to be approaching rapidly, and all was going on smoothly toward that end, until William Miller began to write and preach, and since then he has thrown the whole of the churches into CONFUSION."

A decidedly new idea to me, that a doctrine of such magnitude as the conversion of the world should be brought to confusion, and the world not be converted, just by the writing and preaching of one man. What sound sense! What reasoning! What faith people must have in their own theories, if they think they are so weak that one man can overthrow them! I read of a people that talked quite differently on one occasion, when a certain doctrine was being proclaimed: "If this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to naught; but if it be of GOD, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God."

One would suppose, if persons would confess that the churches are in confusion, that they would bestir themselves, and try to seek the light they had departed from, and to cease to fight against the eternal counsel of God. I do bless God our hope is not built upon such a sandy foundation. No, we are not afraid that one man, or all the forces of men and devils combined, can overthrow our hope. What God has promised, he is able also to perform. When he speaks, we know that he who made language knows how to use it. What he says we believe, and believing, we have "good hope through grace."

Dansville, N. Y. A. P. MOORE.

A HORRIBLE PREDICTION.—Professor Leonidas, an Indianapolis astrologer, after looking at the rings around the sun, makes the following horrible prophecy:—"I observe by the planets that a dreadful plague will commence in Russia, originating from silks brought over from Egypt, Cairo, and Turkey. It will extend across the Baltic Sea, desolate Germany, cause immense mortality in England, and then spread to the United States. This dreadful epidemic will spot the people like a leopard, and turn the flesh of a purple black. The pestilence will carry off such an amount of mortals that there will not be enough left to bury the dead or give them christian burial. The streets of our cities, towns, and villages, will be swarmed with the dead and dying. The groans and yells of horror will fill every breast with consternation. Confusion will abound on all sides. The death-knell will cease to toll as the malady rages in fury. The infected will fall and die wherever they take it. The stench of the dead will become so common that the survivors will not heed it."

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. E. Twing.

Bro. Grant:—I am still alive, and striving to obey God. My kind Father has permitted me to visit some of his dear children in this place. Yes, I am now among the Shinnecock Indians, at Bro. David Bunn's house. I occupy, Bro. Miles, your little room. I write from the stand you used to write from. How little I thought I should get so far away from my sick room a few weeks ago. O how good the Lord is to me! I attended a meeting in the little chapel. Bro. Stephen Walker told them about the Wilbraham campmeeting; such a gathering of God's dear children, such love, such power with God in prayer, so much of the Holy Spirit. O how good it was to be there! I shall not forget this meeting. A day was set apart by the church for fasting and prayer, that God would baptize the church with his Holy Spirit. I went to see Mother Walker—that old pilgrim soldier. She is ninety-eight years old. She is blind and deaf. She is looking for Jesus,—don't know but she may live to see him. O how she longs to see Jesus. She told me some of her experience in prayer.

Bro. Grant, will you let me relate it? it is good. I think I hear you say, yes. Mother Walker is a widow. Her oldest boy, Stephen, wanted to go on a whaling voyage. She could not spare him; he was her support, but her boy went and shipped for a whaling voyage. He came home and told his poor mother. None but a mother in like circumstances can know her feelings. Stephen bade her good bye, and started for the ship, some twelve miles off. The mother's heart was full. She retired to bed, but not to sleep. She started off very early, about four in the morning, to have one more look at Stephen. She arrived at Sag Harbor, but the ship was gone; her loved boy was far off on the ocean! O how her heart beat—how her throat filled. She came home; her boy was gone. She hastened down to the shore, and as she looked out on the ocean, she fell on the ground and cried, "My poor boy is gone forever! I shall never see him again, I fear." She cried and shrieked and rolled on the beach, crying, "My poor boy!" She could not give him up. After a long while, she got up, went towards home, but stopped at a spring and washed her face. But again her heart was full. She went back again to the shore, and prayed and cried for a long time, and returned to the spring, and washed, and started for home. But her heart was not yet relieved. "My poor lost boy!" Again she hastened to the shore, and shouted, and cried for her boy. As her heart seemed ready to break, while she was calling for her boy, a voice like a man's spake to her, "Be still, you shall have your boy again." She arose, washed, went to her home calm, quiet, sat down, and ate food, trusting in God that he would protect and bring back alive her son.

God was true to his promise. Her son, after a long time, came home again. "Mother," said he, "I will never leave you again. God has protected me. A man was killed at my back, another in front of me. I fell overboard once; was once entangled in the whale line, and came near being lost; but here I am at home once more." The mother's prayers had been answered, and then she went to God and asked him that she might have this one of her children to go with her to the kingdom. God heard her fervent prayer. Her son was converted. Once more she went in earnest to God, and asked for another of her children. Another was converted. She was encouraged to ask still for another; and another was given her; and thus she presented them one by one, till twelve children,—all of her family, were converted to God. She asked for one at first; she obtained twelve.

O how good the Lord is to those who seek him with all the heart! Mothers, who read this, have you children unconverted? will you take one of them, like this poor Indian sister, to Jesus, and plead and pray from the depth of your heart for your child? If you will, you may yet have your children to rejoice over. What you do must be done quickly.

Southampton, L. I., Sept. 1st, 1865.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—After spending six or seven weeks at home to recruit my nervous system, I have started out again into the great vineyard of my Master Jesus, where there is so much work to do. After the Alton campmeeting, I visited Wolfboro, Tuftonboro, and Moultonboro, where I found a goodly number of the old veterans of '43 and '44, rooted and grounded in the faith, and was kindly received and hospitably treated, as I usually am wherever I go.

I see the brethren are investigating, not only the time of the ending of the present dispensation, but the beginning and duration of the New Dispensation, which is to follow that of the Gospel, during which dispensation the saints will dwell safely, not afraid of the terror by night, nor the arrow that flieth by day, etc. And when a great tumult from the Lord shall be among the wicked, and every man's sword is raised against his neighbor and brother, and the slain shall lie from one end of the earth to the other, not to be lamented or buried; when the cities shall be left without an inhabitant, and the houses without a man, and the earth be emptied of its inhabitants. This dispensation will be ushered in by the coming of Jesus Christ personally, at the end of the 2300 days, and the resurrection of the just, and the changing of the living righteous, and their being gathered to the cleansed sanctuary at the end of the prophetic times; when, according to Thurman's Chronology, seven years' space will follow, to fulfill the type of the feast of Tabernacles. It is a query in many minds, whether the space will not be longer than seven years, and whether all the unfulfilled prophecies can be fulfilled in those seven years.

I hope some of our Bible students will take up this subject, and give us the events which are to be fulfilled in that space after Jesus comes.

B. Spaulding.

Bro. A. C. Newell, Susquehannah Depot, Pa., writes:—"I have gained some converts to the truth, but it is with many of them as it was in the days of Christ, they dare not confess the truth for fear of being turned out of the synagogue. If some of the preaching brethren would come here and make an opening, there might be a church gathered here. Will some of the preachers, passing from east to west, please come this way and call on me? I am on the Erie R. R., twenty-five miles east of Binghamton."

From Bro. D. Grant.

Bro. Grant:—As we in this city have many friends scattered all over the country, who are readers of the Crisis, they may perhaps be anxious to hear how we are getting along. To such I would say that our apparent progress does not keep pace with our desires, especially as regards numbers. We have added no new members to our strength lately; otherwise I think our prospects are fair. There has been a great waking up among the reading and thinking portion of our fellow christians by whom we are surrounded. "The life-and-death question" has been the prominent topic of conversation for some time past; and we think that it has almost always ended in our favor. We know a good many pious christians in the different churches, who, if they do not think with us altogether, readily acknowledge that we have a considerable amount of truth on our side, and who are halting "between two opinions." May God give them grace to choose rightly, and strength to bear the cross of confessing the truth.

There is likewise a visible improvement in public opinion. Some months ago, we could not whisper the name of Elder Grant without calling down upon our heads a host of hornets ready to sting us to death, if they could. Then, to acknowledge one's self a "Granite," was to bear a burden of reproach almost overpowering. The term "infidel" was then the common salutation of our christian friends. Thank the Lord, we have lived down this, at least to a certain extent. We are no longer upbraided with "infidelity." They now consider us to be good christians, though ignorant and mistaken.

We praise the Lord, who has sustained us by his grace, and enabled us to bear the cross, which has been to us so light. We feel that we have been in the way of doing our duty; that we have sown the seed, and that God in his own good time will bring forth the fruit.

Dear friends, wherever you may be, we earnestly desire an interest in your prayers, that we, as a branch of Christ's church, may be found ever ready to spend and be spent in his service, and that we may be kept pure and undefiled until his appearing.

Yours in Christ, D. Grant.

Montreal, C. E.

From Bro. H. Pratt.

Bro. Grant:—Still the good work goes on in Worcester. Three more last Sabbath evening were baptized in the likeness of Christ's death. One sister, a member of the Old South church, remarked as we were walking through the waters, "This has been a great cross. I have loved Jesus many years, but have never fully obeyed him till now." God bless you, sister. I am glad that you are able to do it now. How many like you are trying to shun the reproach of Christ, that which seems most crossing, the very thing you need to crucify and make alive. Do it no more. Kiss the cross and embrace the crown.

Bro. C. W. Low, Fredonia, N. Y., writes: "Our meeting at Darien, N. Y., was an excellent one. It was truly a feast to those who came up to worship there. One Bro. Taylor, of Pa., was ordained, and set apart for the work of the ministry, and one was baptized. Our meetings, and the truth preached by us, are beginning to have power upon the people. To the Lord be all the glory."

Jer. Carr.

Dear mourning friends, I feel for you,
For I have lost a brother too.
Your loss is great I know full well,
Your grief too deep for tongue to tell.
The anguish of a mother's heart,
When with a child she's called to part,
And lay it in the grave so low,
None but a parent e'er can know.

A son so gentle and so young,
Whose race on earth so quickly run,—
We could not bear it, dearest Lord,
If not supported by thy word.
And then the thought he died alone,
In a strange land, far from his home,
Where loved ones could not with him be,
To cheer with words of sympathy;

And acts of kindness which can come
So lovingly from those at home,
Wrings my heart in anguish; then
I cry, Lord Jesus, come and reign.
O come, and raise the sleeping dead;
Call loved ones from their dusty bed;
Immortal life they then will have,
Who did on earth for Jesus live.

With Gabriel's trumpet's sound
We'll see them coming from the ground,
And then may we together rise
To meet our Savior in the skies.
For Jesus tells us in his word
That paradise shall be restored;
This earth anew in beauty bloom,
And fitted for the saints' sweet home.

Then, mother, brother, sisters dear,
Trust in the Lord, be of good cheer;
Joseph, we hope, will rise again,
Free from sickness, death, and pain.
In that blest land to which we go,
No sorrow shall we ever know;
Then we will shout our sufferings o'er,
When landed safe on Canaan's shore.

Young. Died in the Rebel prison, Bro. Joseph Young, aged thirty-seven.

Bro. Young's religion was consistent with the Advent faith, not to resist evil. He was drafted by government to fill the Third Maine regiment, and had to go. He was wounded in battle, and made a prisoner, and died in the rebel prison. He leaves a father and mother, wife and children, brothers and sisters, to mourn his loss. We hope to meet him where hunger and thirst will not be known, nor storms, nor heat, nor the clashing of war will disturb the inhabitants of the heavenly country. Sermon to the afflicted friends, July 2d, by the writer.

Wentworth. Died in Great Falls, N. H., Sept. 8th, 1865, Edie May Wentworth, of cholera infantum, aged one year and nine days.

A lovely flower has been plucked by the ruthless hand of death, but it will bloom again in paradise restored, when Edie May is brought from "the land of the enemy." May this afflictive dispensation be sanctified to the good of the parents, and all the mourning circle. Funeral service was attended by Rev. Mr. Stratton, of the Methodist denomination.

The Fenians.—The Fenian Brotherhood in the United States numbers two hundred and fifty thousand; in the British Provinces forty-five thousand; in Ireland two hundred thousand; in England sixty-five thousand, of which thirty-five thousand are in the City of London. There are over five thousand soldiers belonging to the fraternity in the English army. The monthly expenses of the body amount to $60,000, and it is said that a tax of $20 per man on the Fenians in the United States is nearly paid up, and that the aggregate assessment will reach five millions of dollars. Eight per cent bonds of "The Irish Republic" are in course of being manufactured and will soon be in the market. It will soon be seen by the foreign news to-day that the English government are taking active measures to meet a Fenian outbreak in Ireland.—Boston Journal.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Sept. 9th, Londonderry 10th.

The political news is wholly unimportant.

The French Minister of Agriculture has addressed a report to the Emperor on the cattle plague, and the Emperor has issued a decree prohibiting the introduction or passage through France of cattle from England, Holland or Belgium.

Cyrus W. Field is a passenger in the Australasian. He was present at one of the meetings of the British Association, and made a brief speech expressive of increased faith in the accomplishment of an Atlantic cable, double line, next year.

Late accounts from Constantinople place the destruction of buildings by the Stamboul fire at 2800; 22,000 persons were rendered houseless. One estimate is high as 12,000 buildings.

☞ Statements with reference to the Fenian movements continue to excite the public of England, and to interest the authorities. It seems generally to be admitted that matters are fast approaching a climax. There is no doubt of the truth of the reports of the great numbers and boldness of the organized bodies of Fenians. A correspondent of Sanders' News Letter, a Dublin paper, says:

"Since the termination of the American war every steamship which arrives off Cork Harbor, on her homeward voyage from New York or Boston, lands on these shores large numbers of young men, who had served in the Republican army, who carry revolver pistols, rifled guns, daggers, and short swords, which they openly expose in their perambulations through the city of Cork. Those arrivals are ever ready to intrude their conversation on all with whom they meet, boasting of the preparations making in America by the Fenian Brotherhood for the invasion of Ireland."

The country papers in Ireland contain the most exciting reports from America relative to the action about to be pursued by the Fenians here. An extract from one letter is published stating that the writer, in concert with a great many deliverers of Ireland, would reach that country almost as soon as the letter would be delivered.—Boston Journal.

☞ There are better reports from Asia and Europe concerning the cholera. It is decreasing in Egypt, Turkey, and Italy, and no cases were reported in France or England up to the 1st inst.

The directors of the Atlantic Telegraph Company have unanimously accepted the offer of the Telegraph Construction Company to manufacture and lay down a new cable and complete the present one, so as to have two perfect cables between Ireland and Newfoundland next summer. The manufacture of the new cable has commenced and the work is done with the utmost care.

Captain James Anderson has received and accepted an offer from the Telegraph Construction Company to command the Great Eastern for five years in laying cables. The cable buoys are drifted away.

It is stated that, in consequences of the spread of Fenianism, the number of regiments in the south of Ireland is to be increased.

The report that Mr. Bright is to visit America on official invitation is pronounced to be without foundation.

The Pope has been defied by some Capuchin friars, and the French troops are preparing to leave Rome. The Revolutionists are active.

Russian designs upon China are much talked of.

DOMESTIC.

Washington, Sept. 18.—The U. S. Consul at Constantinople, in a letter to the State Department dated Aug. 14, says: "It is estimated that the victims of cholera already number 20,000, the number of deaths in a single day having reached 1000. It is said that probably 200,000 terror-stricken inhabitants have left the city."

The Consul at Barcelona, under date of August 22, says: "The cholera is fully declared in this city. The deaths from this disease have averaged up to this date about twelve per day, or the total number of deaths from cholera in Barcelona up to August 21, is 115. There have also been many deaths from other diseases, and although it is stated that over 50,000 persons have left Barcelona during the last fifteen days, leaving at present, perhaps, 130,000 persons in the city, on the 21st inst. there were 51 deaths."

The Consul at Leghorn reports, under date of Aug. 25: "The cholera, which has prevailed in an alarming degree for the past few months in Egypt, Turkey, and some of the eastern portions of Italy, has not yet reached this place. It has not broken out on the western coast of Italy, except at Malta. Among the Musselmen population nightly processions perambulate the streets, chanting hymns and prayers for the averting of the scourge.

Among the Greek population the fright has almost resulted in famine, the bakers refusing to make bread, the butchers to kill meat, and grocers to sell provisions. The panic among the masses of the people is out of all proportion to the danger. In Ancona and other places on the Adriatic where it prevails, it is very fatal, and of those attacked more than half die."

The Prophetic Year.—The London correspondent of the Presbyterian Banner enumerates a long list of the agitations and apprehensions which press upon the minds of thoughtful people in Europe, as portents of coming convulsions among the nations, and alludes to the approach of the cholera next year, and the significance of the year "1866" in the minds of many students of prophecy. And he asks of the prophetic year:

"Will it come laden with wrathful indignation? Will it shake out of its horrid hair 'both pestilence and war?' The American war and woe is past—God has been glorified—a nation has freed itself from an incubus and a curse—shall our turn come next? This pause may be but prophetic. O Lord God, thou knowest. If thou comest first in the whirlwind, the earthquake, the tempest of thine anger, to take vengeance on Europe's guilty nations, let these days be shortened for thine elect's sake, and then with 'the still small voice' speak peace and jubilee to all mankind."

Fenian Conspiracy. The Springfield (Ill.) Circle of the "Fenian Brotherhood," in an address to the American people, openly proclaims that "Ireland is about to have her revolution; that "the day of provisional government is established, and an army of 200,000 men sworn to sustain it;" that officers, American and Irish," who have served with distinction in our late war, "are silently moving into Ireland to assume control of the active operations, to be inaugurated in a few months," etc. Upon the strength of such statements as these, large contributions in money are solicited of men favorable to the cause of Irish independence.

The Indian Council. Fort Smith, Ark., Sept. 14. The following tribes to-day signed a treaty of permanent peace with the United States, as represented by loyal citizens: Osages, Seminoles, Creeks, Chickasaws, Cow Skins, Seneca, Shawnees, Choctaws and Trapaws. The treaty concludes as follows:

"The undersigned do hereby acknowledge themselves to be under the protection of the United States of America, and covenant and agree that hereafter they will in all things recognize the Government of the United States as exercising exclusive jurisdiction over them, and will not enter into any allegiance or conventional agreement with any state, nation, power or sovereignty whatsoever; that any treaty of alliance for the session of lands, or any act heretofore done by them or any of their people, by which they renounced their allegiance to the United States, is hereby revoked and repudiated.

In consideration of the foregoing stipulations made by members of the respective nations and tribes of Indians, the United States, through its Commissioners, promises that it will re-establish peace and friendship with all nations and tribes of Indians within the so called Indian Territory; that it will afford ample protection for security of persons and property of the respective nations or tribes, and declares its willingness to enter into treaties to arrange and settle all questions relating to and growing out of former treaties of such nations with the so-called Confederate States, at this council now convened for that purpose, or at such time in future as may be appointed."

Religious Equality in Chili.—By the latest arrival, it appears that the "Bill of Interpretation," as it is called, which establishes the most liberal construction of the constitution in favor of religious freedom, has passed both houses of the Chilian congress, so that now it is said that

"Free worship, which has existed in fact in some of the towns of Chili, more especially in Valparaiso, will have acquired the legal sanction which it lacked; and edifices of all denominations may be put up and protected by law. No greater proof of the advancement of Chili in civilization and knowledge exists than the attitude which the majority of her people have assumed in this important question; and it is to be hoped that the good example she has set will be followed by her sister republics of South America."

The Chivington Massacre.—The Atchison Champion says that Major General Allen McD. McCook, with his personal Aid, Major Bates, and other members of his staff, reached Atchison from the West, on the 9th, and among other things, has investigated the "Chivington massacre." A recital of the atrocities said to have been committed, is almost too much for belief. The Champion says:—

Of Chivington's Sand Creek massacre, he gave us many interesting details, and he is of the opinion that it was the most cold blooded, revolting, diabolical atrocity ever conceived by man or devil. The sworn accounts of witnesses of the affair are enough to make any man blush for his species. It was an indiscriminate, wholesale murder of men, women and children, accompanied by the disfigurement of dead bodies of both sexes, in every revolting and sickening form and manner. Unborn babes were torn from the wombs of dying mothers, and scalped; children of the most tender ages were butchered; soldiers adorned their hats with portions of the bodies of both males and females; and the flag and uniform of the United States were disgraced by acts of fiendish barbarity, so revolting in their details that a truthful account cannot be published in a respectable journal, without giving offence to decency. And all these atrocities were committed on a band of Indians who had voluntarily entrusted themselves to the protection of the Government, received assurances of care, and who had flying above their encampment, at that time, a white flag and the national banner, given them by the military authorities at Fort Lyon, with the promise that this was to be to them security and guardianship as long as they remained under it, and continued friendly.

These Indians were under the leadership of "Black Kettle," a chief whose friendship for the whites had been proverbial for years. He had been in the employ of our government as a scout; had been engaged by Lieut. Col. Tappan, of the 1st Colorado, to keep a watch upon the Sioux and other hostile tribes; had only a few days before prevented, by giving timely information, an intended raid; and he brought the men, women and children of his tribe together to live near the fort and under the care of the whites. His trust was repaid by indiscriminate massacre; his friendship was rewarded by outrage on the living and disfigurement of the dead; his confidence requited by betrayal, by rapine, by murder so sickening in its forms, that it passes all understanding to imagine how any one, be he either man or devil, could have executed it.

San Domingo.—The difficulty with which Spain gives up an idea, especially if it be a bad one, is illustrated in her course toward San Domingo. In 1861 that republic, by an act in violation of the popular will, was surrendered to Spain by President Santana. For about six months the most arbitrary rule was exercised, until, by a general revolt, three of the Spanish garrisons were destroyed. Since that date a desultory warfare has been carried on, the details of which can never be told, but which were so unfavorable to the usurpers that early in the season the Cortez ordered the withdrawal of the Spanish troops. The change, however, which excluded Narvaez from the Cabinet and put Marshal O'Donnell in his place, has led to a renewed attempt. Spanish vessels are to blockade the ports, and all the trade of San Domingo is to be ruined. The commerce of the country is of some value, and under the better legislation which may be expected to characterize our Government concerning it, a flourishing trade would have resulted. The fact that American influence has not been more favorably felt in developing the resources of the whole island is owing to the adverse effect of pro-slavery policy. The Spanish intervention took place just when this state of things on our part began to be susceptible of improvement.

A New Paper.—A Joint Stock Association was formed at the meeting in Crane's Grove, Ill., last Saturday, called the "Gospel Publishing Association," and they decided to publish a paper, to be called the "Millennial Banner"; also a youth's paper, books, pamphlets, tracts, etc. Before their adjournment they purchased the Harbinger and Gospel Banner offices, allowing them to finish their volumes, however, and the Association will start their "Millennial Banner" in December next. Bro. H. V. Reed is elected the editor of the new paper. Millennial Harbinger.

ITEMS.

☞ The drouth is prevailing extensively in the the mountain towns in the northern and western part of Massachusetts. The want of water is seriously felt, not only by the farmers, but by all manufacturers. There is not even water enough for household purposes, and in some towns, as, for instance, Lenox, water for family uses has to be brought more than a mile.

☞ A lady informs the Maine Farmer that she saved her cherries from the birds by making some cats out of old rags. "Be sure," she says, "to make the eyes out of large yellow beads or brass buttons, and the birds will not come near when one of these cats is perched in the tree."

☞ Wednesday, the 18th of October, has been appointed a day of general thanksgiving in Canada, for the late abundant harvest.

☞ An investigation by the Russian government shows that the frequent and terrible fires which have desolated large districts in Russia, destroying hundreds of villages and turning thousands of people out of their homes, were caused by Polish plotters, who incited "all true patriots" to lay waste the enemy's property. Women were employed in some of these incendiary deeds.

☞ Jeff. Davis' treasure, brought to Washington in charge of a Treasury agent, has been counted in the Treasurer's office, and found to consist of $87,000 in gold coins, $9,000 in silver coin, mostly Mexican dollars, old coining, and thirty bars of silver; total value slightly over $100,000.

☞ A great revival of religion is now progressing in all the colored churches of Richmond, and every night the churches are densely crowded. At the Third Street Baptist church, one night last week, there appeared over one hundred seekers at the altar.

☞ On Tuesday, 12th inst., a terrible tornado passed over "Typo Lake" Settlement, about forty miles north of St. Paul, Min., doing a great amount of damage, and seriously injuring several persons. Trees were uprooted and houses blown down.

☞ Rogues are becoming bold at Niagara Falls. Two of them lately stopped a gentleman in midday, as he was walking to Suspension Bridge, and demanded his money, holding a pistol at his head. Luckily he had left his money with his wife at the hotel, and had only a trifle with him.

☞ H. Young, Springfield, Bradford County, Pa., says: "If you tap maple trees as soon as the ground begins to freeze in autumn, the sap will run as freely as in the spring."

Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire.

The annual session of this Conference will be held at Lake Village, N. H., commencing Oct. 12th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope there will be a full attendance, both of ministers and delegates from churches throughout the State. In the meantime let prayers go up to God for his blessing to rest upon us during its session.

Albion Ross, President.
A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

We would call the attention of our preaching brethren who are members of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire to the following: The constitution requires that "the ministers shall report themselves personally, or by letter, and the churches by delegates duly appointed thereby," at its annual session. Let this be remembered.

A. Ross,
A. W. Sibley.

Conference.

It is proposed to hold a conference at the chapel in North Norway, Me., commencing Oct. 5th, and continuing through the week and over the following Lord's day. Particulars hereafter. We purpose to be present, the Lord willing. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come.

M. Grant.

Conference.

The R. I. and East Conn. Conference will hold its next session with the church in North Foster, R. I., commencing Wednesday, Oct. 4th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the following Sabbath. All are invited to attend. Come, brethren, with your hearts filled with the love of God, so as to labor for the salvation of sinners. Those coming by rail will stop at Danielsonville.

Wm. H. Chapman, Clerk.

Just Received.

Dr. Zech's computation of Ptolemy's Eclipses, based on the Greenwich observations as reduced by Professor Airy. Price $1.00 mailed, post paid. Address C. F. Hudson, Cambridge, Mass., or H. L. Hastings, 19 Lindall St., Boston, Mass.

Basket Meeting.

Elders Wendell and Stetson will hold a series of meetings at Petit's Grove, near Shiloh, on C. C. and C. R. R., three miles from Plymouth, O., Oct. 7th and 8th. Services at 10½ A. M., and 1½ P. M. Evening preaching also through the week previous at Plymouth and Shiloh, simultaneously.

G. W. Stetson.

Minnesota Quarterly Conference.

The first quarterly meeting of the Minnesota conference will be held in the Ramer school-house, Winona County, commencing Saturday, at 2 o'clock P. M., October 7th, 1865, and continue over the following Sunday.

T. K. Allen, Secretary.

Notice.

Bro. H. Holden, Worcester, Mass., has on hand a few of our books and tracts. Brethren and friends in that vicinity can purchase of him.

Notice.

There will be a Second Advent tent meeting in Providence, R. I., commencing Oct. 3d. Saints and sinners are invited to attend. Brn. George Brown, S. W. Bishop, J. T. Curry, and D. S. Holt are expected to attend.

Quarterly Conference.

The fourth quarterly session of the New Hampshire State Conference will be held with the church in Whitefield, N. H., commencing Sept. 28th, and continue over the following Lord's day. May prayer go up to God that this meeting may result in great good to the church and people in Whitefield.

A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

Notice.

Eld. J. K. Bellows and H. Hadlock will hold meetings in the Advent Christian Chapel, Hoosick, N. Y., commencing Wednesday evening, Sept. 27th, and continue over Sunday.

In behalf of the church, J. Wilbur.

Agency for Maine.

Having been solicited to take the agency for Maine of Bro. Himes' "New Chart of Daniel and John," I would say to any and all in Maine who wish it, I am prepared to furnish it at the regular retail price, $5.00, and to preachers (or others who wish them to sell) at a liberal discount. Address orders to L. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me.

Appointments.

We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

Business.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Wm. P. Durfee—Tell her she can do as the Lord shall direct. If not able, we will cancel the account, and He will pay it.

A. D. Smith—You are credited.

W. T. Harding—To No. 540.

P. B. Hart—Will send them soon. We are waiting for more to be printed.

I. F. Harden—Paid to No. 513. Had you paid in advance, it would have paid to No. 521.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 521. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

A SONG OF DELIVERANCE.

BY M. M. CATLIN.

I saw a weary traveler,
In tattered garments clad;
A struggling up a mountain,
It seemed that he was sad;
His back was burdened heavy,
His strength was almost gone;
He shouted as he journeyed,
"Deliverance will come."

The summer sun was beaming,
The sweat was on his brow;
His garments were all dusty,
His step was very slow;
Still he kept pressing forward,
For he was wending home,
He shouted as he journeyed,
"Deliverance will come."

The songsters in their arbors,
The pleasures of the way,
Attracted his attention,
Inviting his delay;
Still he kept pressing forward,
For he was nearing home;
He shouted as he journeyed,
"Deliverance will come."

Then I saw him in the evening,
When the sun was bending low;
He overtopped the mountain,
And reached the vale below;
His eyes were dim and heavy,
His journey it was done;
He shouted as it ended,
"Deliverance will come."

Then they closed the blinds around him,
And locked him up alone;
That nothing might disturb him
Till his best friend should come.
Hope made for him a pillow,
And Faith a garment rare,
To keep him in his slumbers
Till Jesus should appear.

At length the trumpet sounded,
The shadows fled away,
The gilding rays of glory
Proclaimed the light of day;
Then when the light of morning
Broke in his little room,
He rose and cried, "Hosannah,
Deliverance has come!"

Then I heard a song of triumph
He sang upon that shore,
Saying, "Jesus has redeemed me,
I'll suffer now no more."
Then casting his eye backward
On the race that he had run,
He raised the loud hosannah,
"Deliverance has come!"

CHRONOLOGY.—No. 8.

We have made a few selections from the church history of Eusebius, and wish to present them to show the near agreement of his testimony with the computations we have made from the Olympic dates of Josephus, and the consular list of Dion Cassius. The following biographical paragraph may not be out of place:

"EUSEBIUS, surnamed PAMPHILUS, from his friendship with the martyr of that name, is supposed to have been born A. D. 267, at Cesarea, of which city he became bishop in 315. He died in 339 or 340. He was one of the most eloquent men of the christian church. * * * His works were numerous, but many of them are lost. His ecclesiastical history, which is extant, has gained for him the title of the Father of Ecclesiastical History; and his Evangelical Demonstration induced Scaliger to apply to him the epithet of divine."

In Eusebius B. 1, c. 5, we read concerning the birth of our Lord:—"It was the forty-second year of the reign of Augustus, but the twenty-eighth from the subjugation of Egypt and the death of Antony and Cleopatra, which terminated the dynasty of the Ptolemies, when according to prophetic prediction, our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ was born at Bethlehem of Judea."

The above extract dates the birth of Christ two years later than we have been compelled to place it on the Olympic table of Josephus, which we formed before the works of Jarvis or Eusebius came into our hands. In all other numbers stated, there is a very close agreement, as will be shown. Eusebius is classed among the Greek writers of church history. Their means of obtaining accurate information were not equal to the Latin writers, who either resided in, or visited Rome, which no other city contained. It would be an easy task to show that Eusebius dated the beginning of Augustus' reign two years earlier than he should have done, and hence he conflicts with the numbers of Josephus. But taking all things into consideration, there is an agreement among these ancient historians, concerning dates and events, which is surprising when we reflect that they wrote and computed at different periods, independently of each other.

"The fame of Eusebius as an ecclesiastical historian has occasioned great deference to be paid to his authority; but I had occasion several times to speak of the difference between accuracy of facts and accuracy of dates. In common with other ancient historians, Eusebius has often committed errors respecting the date of events preceding his own times, from the variety of eras used, and the imperfect state of astronomical and chronological science."—Jarvis, p. 417.

The second chapter of Book 2 of Eusebius has this title:—"How Tiberius was affected when informed by Pilate respecting Christ." I can hardly refrain from giving it entire. It contains a citation from Tertullian, and proves that both of these writers believed that the resurrection of Jesus took place a long time before Tiberius died.

"The fame of our Lord's remarkable resurrection and ascension being now spread abroad, according to an ancient custom prevalent among the rulers of the nations, to communicate novel occurrences to the emperor, that nothing might escape him, Pontius Pilate transmits to Tiberius an account of the circumstances concerning the resurrection of our Lord from the dead, the report of which had already spread throughout all Palestine. In this account, he also intimated that he ascertained other miracles respecting him, and that having now risen from the dead, he was believed to be a God by the great mass of the people. Tiberius referred the matter to the senate, but it is said they rejected the proposition, in appearance, because they had not examined into this subject first, according to an ancient law of the Romans, that no one should be ranked among the gods unless by a vote and decree of the senate; in reality, however, because the salutary doctrine of the gospel needs no confirmation and co-operation [illegible]

The senate of the Romans, therefore, having [illegible] the doctrine of our Savior as [illegible] and Tiberius still continuing [illegible] he had before cherished, [illegible] projects against [illegible] in the testimony [illegible] to present in this [illegible] forty years elapsed between [illegible] and the destruction [illegible] says (p. 82, b. 3), "Yet it may be proper to mention, also, what things occurred that show the benignity of that all gracious providence that had deferred their destruction (the Jews) for forty years after their crimes against Christ." But I will not enlarge.

A SHORT SERMON.

"For the Son of man is come, to seek and to save that which was lost."—LUKE 19: 10.

What! the Son of the eternal God lay his glory by—the glory he had with the Father before the world began, and descend to this world to save the fallen race of man! Stupendous thought! Where shall we begin the story, and where shall we end it? It is like launching out into a boundless ocean, without bottom, banks, or shore. But let me ask the intelligent and kind reader, what was lost? We answer, the whole human race; for in the fall of Adam all the human race died, and all the human race must remain eternally dead; for all were mortal and dying creatures in the fall of Adam, and never could rescue themselves from death, unless God could provide a ransom, so that man could be brought back to life again. And here we can have something of a view of the greatness and importance of a resurrection to life, which was brought about by the death and resurrection of the greatest personage that ever stepped foot upon this planet. But let us now understand man's condition, as lost, in order that we may have a clearer view of the grandeur of the great work of redemption, which was brought about by the death and sufferings of the Son of the Highest.

1st. We understand that the whole human race came under the sentence of death in the fall of Adam; and the sentence was, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"; and because Adam in his fall became mortal, or a dying creature, all his posterity must of course fall victims to death, and remain eternally dead, unless they could be resurrected from death. But Jesus, the beloved Son of God, undertook and fulfilled the great plan of the redemption of the human race from death; which corresponds with the declaration,—"In Christ shall all be made alive." But, dear reader, this does not look like a redemption from endless life in misery, or from the flames of fire and brimstone; no, for they were not sentenced to any such place, but were sentenced to death, which is a positive cessation of life.

But the death in Adam was not the punishment for our sins, who are the posterity of Adam. No indeed, for our natural death is the effect or consequence of the fall of Adam. But the punishment of the sins, which we as individuals have committed, must be the destruction of the soul and body in hell, or gehenna; and the instrument of that punishment must be fire and brimstone, according to God's holy word; and we think that the whole tenor of the Scriptures do positively show that every person that is punished for his or her sins, at the day of judgment, must suffer final destruction in the flames of fire and brimstone. But, dear reader, Jesus has "power on earth to forgive sins," for he has become the end of the law for righteousness to all them that believe, and who receive Jesus as their Savior; and all who do not apply to Christ for salvation must be raised and be brought before the great judgment seat, there to receive their sentence of "SECOND DEATH" in "the lake of fire and brimstone," where they will be finally destroyed, and "be as though they had not been"; while all who have come to the great Redeemer for salvation, and continued to seek for glory and immortality to the end of the christian race, will then have eternal life in Christ their great Deliverer, and reign on the new earth forever.

This gives us a view of the greatness of the work of redemption, brought about by the lovely Redeemer, who is soon to be our King in the new earth. Yours looking for that lovely King. Amen. B. PERHAM.

WHAT IS TRUTH?

For the last three years I have heard a great many good things about the Bible. I have heard about Jesus, about his commandments, his coming the first time, his coming the second time, the resurrection, the new earth, the saints of God singing on that immortal shore, the golden streets, the crown, of Adam, Abraham, Noah, Daniel, Cyrus, Esther; yes, I have heard a great many good things. I have heard about Paul, about the angels, the dragon, the abomination of desolation and signs of the times, and about the time of Christ's coming in 1867 and 1868. I am not going to tell all I have heard, for I have heard a great many good things besides these.

One thing more I have heard about, on which I wish to say a few words; that is, the "thousand years" found in Rev. 20. I may not give any light, but if I do not, I can stir up your pure minds some. Perhaps, before we come directly to the subject, a few words to those who do not know just how many times the original word thousand is found in the New Testament may be in place. The Greek word is kilioi. It is found eleven times in the New Testament, and is used in no case only to denote a thousand years. Please bear in mind, this is the word the angel used. If any wish to stretch them, and make them out 1800 years, let them do it. I cannot. The first the word is used is in 2 Pet. 3: 8. "Beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." This is the only place that I know of in the N. T. where we can find out the length of one of God's days. Who wishes to shorten or stretch it. The next is in Rev. 11: 3, where the angel is speaking of the 1260 days, or years. Why not take them and stretch them? I think the angel knew what he was talking about. Will it do to stretch any of these dates, that are given so plainly? Say you, that would not do? So I think. Let them stand.

The next is in Rev. 12: 6. What shall be done with that? The next is Rev. 14: 20. Stretch or shorten as you think best, or let stand, which I think is far better. Turn next to Rev. 20: 2–7. Suppose we read the first one. "And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years." Now we will ask, why stretch this thousand over 1800 years, or since the resurrection of Christ? for it must be done, if Christ was the first resurrection, and this the second, for they are one thousand years apart, as taught in the Bible. Was Christ the first, and this the second? Was Christ resurrected one thousand years ago? And it is over 1800 years ago. Now, I want to know if that is not stretching this time that the angel says is a thousand years? I think when God despatches one from glory, he knows just what to say. We cannot tell him how it ought to be. O may God help us to believe his word. In speaking of Satan, or Diabolos, which is the Greek word, it says he is bound "a thousand years." Yes, that old Devil, bear in mind, is the same one that took our blessed Lord up into the mountain, and on the top of the Temple. Call him all the names you please, it is old Diabolos. I think we had better let it stand, be patient, and endure a little longer. God will bring it all round in due time.

A few words further—Rev. 20: 6,—"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power." Now, if we call Christ the first resurrection, which is true in a certain sense, and the one in Rev. 20: 5, 6, the second, where is the blessing? or, in other words, does God say there will be a blessing on those who do not have a "part in the first resurrection"? I think there are a great many things in the way in regard to these "thousand years" being in the past.

For fear some would think I make these things a test, I will say, I make christian character the only test. He that does the will of my Father, the same is my brother. There are a good many of those who do not believe just as we do.

I will say no more about this for the present, hoping we may all be good, watch and pray. Be of good courage, ye pilgrims and strangers. A few more trials, a few more storms, and if we are faithful, we will land in safety on the other shore. Say, reader, will you be there? Shall I meet you on the other shore? Shall we sing the song of Moses and the Lamb? Say, will you be there?

PASSING EVENTS IN THE LIGHT OF PROPHECY.

Gal. 5: 20, 21, "Hatred, . . . strife, . . . murders, drunkenness, and such like." 2 Tim. 3: 1–4. "This know also, that in the last days men shall be lovers of their own selves, . . . proud, . . . without natural affection, . . . incontinent, . . . traitors, . . . lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." 1 John 5: 19. "The whole world lieth in wickedness." Never before has the world been called upon to witness a deluge of crime such as we are now passing. Instance the following cullings from the press of a few days ago. Says "The Morning Star" of Aug. 30th, 1865, in a leading article:—

"THE THEORY OF CRIME," etc., "PASSING EVENTS."—"Few subjects at the present time call more loudly for the candid attention of the people at large, than the alarming prevalence of crime. It is scarcely possible to open a daily journal without having our feelings shocked by murder, etc, or something of the sort. We are told it is hardly safe to walk at midday. . . . In what this state of things will end, unless some means be devised to remedy the existing evils, no one can tell."

Street's and Smith's New York Weekly, of Aug. 31st, 1865, in a leading article, "An Epidemic of Crime," says:—"We are dreadfully reminded of 'Dahoman customs' just now, in reading the record of criminality of our own country during a single month. It is hideous and revolting. As if unsatisfied with our Aceldemas, our fields of blood so lavishly fed with sacrifices during four years of war; we were now inaugurating a 'Saturnalia' of crime, worse than that which degraded Rome under her bloodiest tyrants." The fearfulness of wickedness appals us by its increase. It is sufficient, if we recognize it, to fill us with horror. It shows a state of morals that almost threatens to plunge us into anarchy, frightful to contemplate. . . . What a catalogue of atrocities horrifies the public during one month. It would seem as if stragglers from hostile armies were roaming through our villages, with vindictive purpose, marking their path by murders and outrages, simultaneously in a score of localities. Citizens are slain in their beds, robbed in the highways; females are assaulted in their walks, ruined and slaughtered within sight almost of their homes. * * * Both sexes, and young as well as old, are infused as it were with the contagion, infection, or whatever it may be.

"Two hundred years ago, such multiplicity of offences against life would have been attributed to Satanic influence; or witchcraft. That the malefactors of our day are instigated by the devil, we have no doubt. * * * The last drops, black and bitter, of man's red vials seem now to be sprinkling the land."

The Boston Journal of Aug. 25th, 1865; in an article on "The Path of Crime," says:—"The statistics of unusual events, such as tornadoes and murders, have certainly been enlarged to an uncommon degree within six months. Nature, animate and inanimate, seems to be somewhat disturbed in her realm."

The Portland Advertiser, of the 11th of Aug. says:—"Crimes of all kinds seem to be on the increase throughout the length and breadth of the land. Rarely do we pick up an exchange, but what some heinous crime is chronicled therein."

When speaking of the N. Y. World of the 9th Aug., the Criminal Era says:—"The columns of the daily World for the past week have teemed with cases of crime, which, should we attempt to transfer them to the Weekly, would require more than our entire space, and surfeit our readers." Again, in its issue of Aug. 23d, in an article headed, "The Second Deluge," it says:—"The war which we have just closed seems to have been only the first act in a grand tragedy of horrors, which is still in course of representation. At this moment the Muse of tragedy presides over the columns of all the journals, and fills them with tales of rape, robberies, suicides, murders, and crimes of every sort and every degree."

The Boston Journal of Aug. 25th, quoting from Willmer and Smith's European Times, says:—"Great crimes are the painful characteristic feature of our day. One man was taken up for killing his wife and daughter. He stated that the day before he had killed three children. A professed murderer, of the name of Winsor, murdered children at $25 per head."

Says another paper, "If the present state of things continues without modification, we shall have to record murders as regular productions; as we do those of the generous summer and teeming autumn."

One paper contains twenty-nine murders, in its issue. In "The Nation," of Aug. 24th, 1865, when quoting from English statistics for 1864, it says, "Coroner's inquests were passed upon 1,337 suicides," and that drunkenness was fearfully on the increase.

Another paper states that the number of convictions for crime had increased in England in ten years from 48,908 to 70,597; in Ireland, in the same period, from 17,669 to 37,637; in Scotland, from 5,289 to 27,643.

In view of the terrific fulfillment of prophecy, who can longer doubt but that the last generation is fast closing, when the sinner will cry for the rocks and mountains to fall upon him, to hide him from the Lamb. But the voice of the christian will be, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him."

EXODUS 20: 15.

Basest and meanest of all things is theft:
To take thy neighbor's property, or aught
That's his; to practice fraud upon thyself
By idleness or waste; or by deceit,
Concealment, peculation, breach of trust,
To practice it in others. Aim to be
In all thy dealings upright. True it is,

A VISIT TO THE INDIANS.

Being near a small tribe of aborigines I had a desire to visit them. I did so, and found it both pleasant and interesting. As they are not as numerous as formerly, many never saw an Indian, and suppose they are always cruel and unnatural beings. The tribe I visited live on the eastern part of Long Island, in the town of Southampton, on a neck of land partly surrounded by water. On one side is Shinnecock bay, and on the other side is a small creek. They are called the Shinnecock Indians. In number there are about two hundred; thirty or more houses and families. They have a Congregational church and an Advent church, and a good school house. They have no settled preacher for the Congregational society, but have preaching some, and prayer meetings when no preaching. The Advent church is addressed by Rev. James Lee, one of their own number, and a good and intelligent man he appeared to be. Most of them attend church and many are members. They appear generous, kind and obliging. They are very devoted and sincere, and open in their expression.

The school receives considerable attention. It is taught by a white teacher; number of scholars from twenty to thirty-five. They are as forward as many scholars in our own schools. The parents generally manifest an interest for their offspring, and care for them as parents only can. Their situation is pleasant, and the land is good. The soil is a fertile loam. They have from six to seven hundred acres of land, surrounded by water, all but about three-quarters of a mile, where they have a fence. They have a lease of the land for 999 years, or as long as water runs and grass grows,—long enough, I should think.

Adjoining their land, and running to the Pequonic bay, is a large field of 6,500 acres, formerly owned by the Shinnecock tribe, now owned by twelve white individuals in company. They pasture it.

The Indians live in small, wood-colored houses. In their houses is order, neatness and economy. Some were well furnished with good furniture, and adorned with shells, ornaments and many curiosities. Each family have their portion of land to work on. It is not fenced; fencing material is scarce. They chain their animals to a stake to feed. They keep horses and cows. They dress, work and appear like other folks. In the winter they make baskets. They appear happy and industrious. They have three trustees,—namely, David Bunn, Wilks Cuffee and James Cuffee, who act for them in a business capacity only. They have reading, both religious and political. One Mary Walker is ninety-seven years of age and is quite smart. She told me several historical facts about the Revolution. Noticing a paper on the table, I took it up. It was the "World's Crisis." She spoke very highly of it, although she could not read it, for she was blind; but her grandchildren could read to her. She had twelve children and twenty great-grandchildren. When I told her that I had heard the editor of the "Crisis" preach, her countenance lit up with joy and interest. She said she had heard him too, and in their own church. She said that she was well cared for and happy. I wish them all well, and hope that eternal joy may be their lot.

And now, kind reader, if you have had patience to read to here, I would not have you think that the Indians are all the society, or that they are better than the white people. No! No!

The town of Southampton is a pleasant place, and I think the inhabitants are hospitable and well disposed. I was treated with much kindness and courtesy by Captain Wm. L. Payne and family, and I take this opportunity to express my thanks and best wishes, and may Captain Payne and his family live long in true prosperity, and be able to conquer in adversity. A. L. PASSOVER.

Dear Bro. Litch:—Having found myself in an error, I crave the privilege of confessing it through the Herald, so that, if any brethren have been or are in the same error, they may examine for themselves; and I hope that I may help them to discover it. Much has been written upon the order of the feast of unleavened bread, the seven Sabbaths, and the feast of Pentecost. I have taken the ground that the seven Sabbaths began to be numbered from the weekly Sabbath in the seven days' feast. Others have taken the ground that they were numbered from the first day of holy convocation, i. e., the day after the Passover. This, I believe, is the almost universal opinion. I am now satisfied that neither of these opinions are correct.

The feast of the Passover and of unleavened bread has nothing whatever to do with the seven Sabbaths from the offering of the wave sheaf, the first fruits of the harvest, but is as entirely independent of those Sabbaths, numbering the fifty days, as of the feast of the seventh month; so that it no more affects the numbering of those Sabbaths than if the Passover was three or six months distant from them. Read Lev. 23: 5–8. "In the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, is the Lord's Passover; and on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord. Seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation, etc. This is the ordinance for the Passover and feast, and nothing more. Now read verse 10, "When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first fruits of your harvest unto the priest, and he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord to be accepted for you; on the morrow after the Sabbath the priest shall wave it." This is plain. So the harvest may (though not necessarily,) occur at the time of the feast, i. e. when the feast occurs about the middle of April; but then the feast may occur two or three weeks previous to the harvest, or about one week after the beginning of the harvest. So then the harvest in no wise affects the feast, or, as an ordinance, has any relation to it.

I always had a difficulty to harmonize the harvest with the feast and seven Sabbaths or fifty days. The difficulty is now gone. When the fourteenth day of the first month came, then came the Passover, whether before, at, or after the ripening of the harvest; and when the harvest ripened, then the wave sheaf, the first fruits, must be offered, whether before, at, or after the feast; "on the morrow after the Sabbath"—that Sabbath when the harvest was ripe. Thus it is all plain, and I wonder that I, or some one, has not before seen and noticed it.

I have been told that the Jews changed the Sabbath every year on account of the so-called feast Sabbath; also, that the fifty days were numbered by sevens from that day; but it is plainly not so. This truth may not be as important as many other truths, but it is important as a truth, and to me imparts comfort, particularly as it clears away all ambiguity and doubt, and relieves all disputation about these Sabbaths, and the Passover. I have thought the true Passover could not occur at the ripening of the harvest, and, as I believe the Lord will come at the time of the Passover, I have now no difficulty in determining the time when that occurs. But should he come at harvest time, though I may not know the precise week for the beginning of the harvest, I can look with special interest "to the morrow after the Sabbath," the day of offering the wave sheaf, the first day of the week, that being a complete cycle of seven from the beginning of creation to the commencement of the seventh millenary. Do not understand me that I am positive of any month, week, or day, when Jesus will come. I look to the time of the Passover as the most probable because God has more particularly marked that time in his dealings with his people. It was the time of their deliverance from Egypt, passing over Jordan and entering the land of Canaan, Josh. 4: 19, and 5: 10, going from the captivity of Babylon or Assyria, Ezra 8: 31, and more than all, the death and resurrection of our Lord and Savior. These events occurring thus are not positive evidence of the future, greater and more glorious event, the coming of our blessed Lord the second time, and the resurrection; but as we have no record of a number of important events for the benefit of God's people occurring at any other particular season of the year, I think I may reasonably look to the season of the Passover, with greater interest, for Jesus' coming, than to any other time; yet, for aught that I know, he may come at any time, in any month, on any day; and though I love to search and find out all I can, yet my great business is to be ready, watch, and wait for the coming of the Lord from heaven, so that, when he does come, I may meet him with joy, having wisdom from God to understand the things revealed concerning his coming, and thus be looking for him in all his glory. Brethren, we are, or should be minute men, always ready. God grant that it may be so.

Affectionately yours, J. CROFFUT.

HUSBAND AND WIFE.

"Therefore shall a man leave his father and his mother, and shall cleave unto his wife; and they shall be one flesh."—GEN. 2. 24.

I have been moved to write upon this subject by reading an article in the Crisis, of Aug. 8th, headed, "Opening of the Books." And the particular passage in that article on which I propose to dwell, reads as follows:—"The human heart,' the world over, seeks for a response to its own outgushings, and if it fails to find it in the companion, it will go somewhere else." This statement will convey various impressions. "Unto the pure all things are pure." But some may take this as a license to seek a "response" away from home. Take an illustration.

A young man of good education and superior mental endowments, and, withal a church member, takes to himself a wife. He does not choose to marry one who is above himself in education, and otherwise; and the lady who becomes his wife stands, at the time of their union, on a par with him in regard to religion. Both profess to have had some sort of experience some time ago, but neither enjoy present salvation. But after marriage the husband is reclaimed from his backslidden state, and becomes a zealous and active christian, while the wife remains as before. Now this man may not find a full response to all the outgushings of his heart in his companion. She is not his equal in education, or mental endowments, and does not enjoy religion. But he is bound by the law and the gospel to "love his wife even as himself," and what right has he to seek a "response" elsewhere? He may indeed seek earnestly to find consolation in his Bible, and in prayer, and all the duties of religion, but he must by no means neglect his wife, because he does not find in her a full response to all the outgushings of his heart. He should, if possible, be even more attentive to her; and while he prays for her earnestly and constantly, he should endeavor to convince her that he is seeking her welfare and salvation more earnestly than all other things.

I am aware that the above illustration will not apply to every case; but I deny the right of any one seeking companionship and society away from home, to the neglect of his own family. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

ATTEMPT TO PRINT A PERFECT BOOK.

"Whether such a miracle as an immaculate edition of a classical author does exist," says one, "I have never learned; but an attempt has been made to attain this glorious singularity, and was as nearly realized as is perhaps possible—the magnificent edition of Os Lusiadas of Camoens, by Don Jose Sauza, 1817. This amateur spared no prodigality of cost and labor, and flattered himself that, by the assistance of Didot not a single typographical error should be found in that splendid volume. But an error was afterwards discovered in some of the copies, occasioned by one of the letters in the word Lusitano having got misplaced during the working of one of the sheets. It must be confessed that this was an accident or misfortune, rather than an erratum."

The celebrated Foulises, of Glasgow, Scotland, attempted to publish a work which should be a perfect specimen of typographical accuracy. Every precaution was taken to secure the desirable result. Six experienced proof-readers were employed, who devoted hours to the reading of each page; and after it was thought to be perfect, it was posted up in the hall of the university, with a notification that a reward of fifty dollars would be paid to any person who could discover an error. Each page was suffered to remain two weeks in the place where it had been posted, before the work was printed, and the printers thought they had attained the object for which they had been striving. When the work was issued, it was discovered that several errors had been committed, one of which was in the first line of the first page. The Foulises' editions of classical works are still much prized by scholars and collectors.

☞ Much of a christian's spiritual strength lies in secret prayer. Nothing disarms Satan and weakens sin like this. Secret prayer is like Jacob's ladder, where you have God descending into the soul, and the soul sweetly ascending to God. Secret duties are very soul-enriching.

A VALUABLE RECIPE.

This medicine is for cholera morbus, cholera infantum, and the worst forms of dysentery, which are so prevalent at this season of the year. It is a recipe from the noted Dr. Beache's medical works, found on p. 732. Directions for making one quart:—

1 dram of pulverized rheubarb, 1 do. of saleratus, 1 do. of peppermint herb; all put into 1½ pints of hot water. When cold, strain off and add 2 oz. loaf sugar, and 2 oz. of French brandy; all this will make nearly one quart, sufficient for a family one year, or more; all not costing, besides the labor, over fifty cents. Every family ought to have it in their house. It is the best medicine for all derangement of the stomach and bowels I ever saw.

For a dose, one to two table spoonfulls, once in one half and three-fourths of an hour, until the pain ceases, and the disease is evidently checked. Two doses, as above, will generally do the work; sometimes one dose of two spoonfulls is sufficient. For children, and slight sickness of the stomach of females, where there is no pain, a smaller quantity will answer. Those who prepare this valuable article for sale, as a great profit, may feel hurt to see it given to the world, but so let it be. HIRAM MUNGER.

HOW TO PRESERVE THE TEETH.

BY DR. I. A. SALMON.

Boston, April 16, 1865.

BRO. HAVEN:—In looking over an old number of Zion's Herald, I saw an article giving some of the causes of decay in the teeth, and calling for a more extended knowledge as to the best method of avoiding the evil where it does not already exist. I dislike the idea of making myself conspicuous, but I have been pained so many times to see valuable teeth lost, which with proper care might have been saved for years, that I cannot withhold a few suggestions from the public, if you think them worthy of a place in your columns.

The causes of caries, or decay, are principally these: the too free use of acids, alkalies, confectionery and pastry, and the collection of food between and around the teeth. The most destructive of these are acids; confectionery and food being converted into acids when allowed to remain in the mouth, are also classed with them. These all act directly upon the teeth. But alkalies used as freely as we use them in our bread, rich pastry, and most kinds of rich food, cause a derangement of the system, and as a consequence a vitiated state of the secretions of the mouth, thereby producing the same effect as the acids, although perhaps not to so great an extent.

The teeth are the hardest of all the bones. The body of a tooth, called dentine, or tooth bone, is composed of seventy-two parts mineral matter to twenty-eight parts animal matter, and covered as far as it is exposed to view with enamel, composed of ninety-eight parts mineral to two parts animal matter. This enamel is designed to protect the dentine; but it will not resist the corrosive power of acids, proof of which almost every person has had to a certain extent by having their teeth set on edge—as it is commonly called—by eating sour apples. The effect is to eat out the mineral matter and leave the animal matter. Let a tooth be covered with strong vinegar for a few days, and the earthy matter will be dissolved, leaving only a sort of cartilaginous substance not so hard as horn.

It may be said we do not allow acids to remain in the mouth long enough to produce such a result. True; but everything we take into the stomach passes over, around and between the teeth, more or less, and if allowed to remain there will produce the same result in the course of time upon those parts of the teeth which come in contact with those things thus confined between and around them.

There are also many medicinal agents that contain acids, some of which are very powerful; and great caution should be used if it should be necessary that such medicines be administered, to avoid contact with the teeth if possible.

I do not pretend to say that decay can be prevented in all cases, for some teeth are defective in their organization, the effect of disease during their formation, or from some cause still further back. But it is a well established fact that by proper attention to the kind of food we eat, and a thorough system of cleansing, a perfectly organized set of teeth may be preserved, and even those that are soft may be saved much longer than if no care or attention is paid to them. For example, we scarcely ever see a tooth decay in those points where the most wear comes from mastication, simply because the process of mastication keeps them clean and smooth; so if they could be kept as clean in all parts, they would not be much more liable to decay except where the enamel is thin.

I would therefore advise as a preventive or as a remedy for disease of the teeth, a strict observance of the facts stated above: abstinence from those things so injurious to them, and absolute cleanliness, that not a particle of food of any kind may be allowed to remain between them. To accomplish this, the following suggestions should be strictly carried out:

The brush should be of a medium stiffness, neither too stiff nor yet too soft, (for the one will wear the teeth in the course of time, and the other will not thoroughly cleanse,) and it should have notches cut across it, leaving ridges crosswise; which will the more readily pass between the teeth. The brush should be used before breakfast and after each meal, taking particular pains to brush lengthwise, or up and down, as well as across. Cold water is sufficient in many cases to keep the teeth from stains; but should that be insufficient, a good reliable dentifrice, or tooth powder, should be used once or twice each day. And should it be necessary to take acids into the mouth, or medicines containing them, a weak solution of carbonate of soda, or soap tooth powder, should be used at once to neutralize the acid.

Too much cannot be said in favor of cleanliness, or too great care taken to preserve the teeth from decay; for with the most strict attention to their preservation, some teeth will decay, owing to hereditary causes or otherwise. Such teeth should be carefully watched, and should be examined two or three times a year by some good, reliable dentist, whose aim is not to see how much he can manage to do for you, but how long he can make your teeth last. Then, when a cavity of sufficient size makes it appearance, have it well filled, and decay will be arrested for years. But unless a tooth is filled well, it may as well not be filled at all. The filling only covers up the decay, and the patient thinks all is right until after a few weeks or months (the tooth having continued to decay) the filling drops out, exposing a much larger cavity, and in many cases an exposure of the nerve, and consequent loss of the tooth, or a large bill for treatment of the nerve and refilling. Above all things avoid cheap dentistry. A dentist cannot spend time enough to fill a tooth well without a sufficient fee to remunerate him; and a fair price paid for good work is cheapest in the end. Consequently it is important that we should be as particular in the selection of a dentist as in the selection of a physician.

It will be evident to every reasoning mind that unless there is disease in the system, hereditary or otherwise, by a strict adherence to the above directions there would be less suffering from decayed teeth, less dyspepsia and other diseases caused by imperfect mastication, and a much smaller number of artificial sets of teeth. Let these suggestions be followed, then, by all who see them, and the benefit derived will amply repay for all the trouble it costs.—Zion's Herald.

DRESS OF OUR EXTREMITIES.

During the damp and cold season deficient dress of the feet and legs is a fruitful source of disease. The head, throat and liver are perhaps the most frequent sufferers.

The legs and feet are far from the central part of the body. They are not in great mass like the trunk, but extended and enveloped by the atmosphere. Besides they are near the damp, cold earth.

For these and other reasons, they require extra covering. If we would secure the highest physiological conditions, we must give our extremities more dress than the body. We men wear upon our legs, in the coldest season, but two thicknesses of cloth. The body has at least six. Women put on them four thicknesses under the shawl, which, with its various doublings, furnishes several more—then over all, thick, padded furs; while their legs have one thickness of cotton, under a balloon. They constantly come to me about their headache, palpitation of the heart, and congestion of the liver. Yesterday, one said to me, "All my blood is in my head and chest. My head goes bumpety-bump, my heart goes bumpety-bump." I asked, "How are your feet?" "Chunks of ice," she replied. I said to her, "If you so dress your legs and feet that the blood can't go down into them, where can it go? It can't go out visiting. It must stay in the system somewhere. Of course, the head and chest must have an excessive quantity. So they go 'bumpety bump,' and so they must go until you dress your legs and feet in such a way that they shall get their share of blood. In the coldest season of the year, I leave Boston for a bit of a tour before the lyceums—going as far as Philadelphia, and riding much in the night, without an overcoat; but I give my legs two or three times their usual dress. During the coldest weather, men may wear, in addition to their usual drawers, a pair of chamois-skin drawers with great advantage. When we ride in a sleigh, or in the cars, where do we suffer? In our legs of course. Give me warm legs and feet, and I'll hardly thank you for an overcoat.

My dear madam, have you a headache, a sore throat, palpitation of the heart, congestion of the liver, or indigestion? Wear one, two, or three pairs of warm, woolen drawers, two pairs of warm woolen stockings, and thick, warm shoes, with more or less reduction in the amount of dress about your body, and you will obtain the same relief permanently that you would derive temporarily from a warm foot-bath.

I must not forget to say that a thin layer of India-rubber cemented upon the boot-sole will do much to keep the bottom of our feet dry and warm.—Dio Lewis.

USE OF THE ARMS IN WALKING.

Dr. Dio Lewis does not believe in muffs. In a recent publication he says:—"The first time you are walking with your arms at liberty, stop moving them, and hold them by your sides. You will be surprised to find how soon your companion will leave you behind, although you may hurry, twist, wriggle, and try hard to keep up. One reason of the slow walk among girls is to be found in this practice of carrying the arms motionless. Three miles an hour, with the arms still, is as hard work as four miles with the arms free.

I have seen the queens of the stage walk. I have seen a few girls and women of queenly bearing walk in the street and drawing-room. They moved their arms in a free and graceful manner. Could this habit become universal among girls, their chests would enlarge, and their bearing be greatly improved. See that girl walking with both hands in her muff. How she wriggles and twists her shoulders and hips! This is because her arms are pinioned. Give them free swing, and her gait would soon become more graceful.

You have seen pictures of our muscles. Those of the upper part of the body, you remember, spread out from the shoulder, in all directions, like a fan. Now, if you hold the shoulder still, the muscles of the chest will shrink, the shoulders stoop, and the whole chest becomes thin and ugly.

But some girls will say, "Swinging the arms must be very slight exercise." True, it is very slight if you swing the arms but once or ten times, but if you swing them ten thousand times in a day, you will obtain more exercise of the muscles of the chest than by all other ordinary movements combined. Indeed, if I were asked what exercise I thought most effective for developing the chests of American girls I should reply at once, swinging the arms while walking."

SENSIBLE ADVICE.—Prof. Silliman, of New Haven, recently closed a Smithsonian lecture by giving the following sensible advice to young men: "If you wish for a clear mind, strong muscles, quiet nerves, long life, and power prolonged in old age, avoid all drinks above water, shun tobacco, opium, and every thing else that disturbs the normal state of the system; rely upon nutritious food, and mild, diluted drinks, of which water is the base, and you will need nothing beyond these things, except rest, and due moral regulations of all your powers, to give you long, happy and useful lives, and a serene evening at the close."

HYMN OF THE LAST DAYS.

BY H. BONAR, D. D.

Help, mighty God!
The strong man bows himself,
The good and wise are few,
The standard bearers faint,
The enemy prevails.
Help, God of might,
In this thy church's night!

Help, mighty God!
Evil is now our good,
And error is our truth,
Darkness is now our light,
Iniquity o'erflows.
Help, God of might,
Defend, defend the right!

Help, mighty God!
Men turn their ear away
From the great voice divine;
And each one seeks his own
Dark oracles of lies.
Help, God of might,
The idols, Lord, affright!

Help, mighty God!
Men slight the grace divine,
They mock the glorious love,
And the great gift of God
Is a thing of nought.
Help, God of might,
The foe arise and smite!

Help, mighty God!
The blind now lead the blind,
Man has become as God,
The tree of knowledge now
Bears its last ripest fruit.
Help, God of might,
For us come forth and fight!

Help, mighty God!
The perfect word of heaven
Is as a Sibyl's scroll,
And the great mount of God
Is as Dodona's shrine.
Help, God of might,
And in the dark give light!

Help, mighty God!
The cross is growing old,
And the great sepulchre
Is but a Hebrew tomb!
And Christ has died in vain!
Help, God of might,
Else faith shall perish quite!

Help, mighty God!
The Christ of ages past
Is now the Christ no more!
Altar and fire are gone,
The victim but a dream!
Help, God of might,
Put the fierce foe to flight!

Help, mighty God!
The world is waxing gray,
And charity grows chill,
And faith is at its ebb,
And hope is withering!
Help, God of might,
Appear in glory bright!

For the World's Crisis.

THE LORD IS COMING.

It is now twenty-three long years since I heard that honest old Low Hampton farmer, in the Apollo Hall, Broadway, N. Y., with godly sincerity proclaim the coming of the Just One. Crowds attended, and listened with a seeming intensity to know the truth; but as in the parable of "the sower," the seeds fell among way-side, stony ground, thorny ground, and good ground hearers.

In taking a retrospective view of the above period, I find it mingled with joy and sorrow, dotted with seasons and incidents of a very interesting nature. Many of our pioneers, who bore aloft the prophetic banner, leaving their religious associations,—and at that time those social ties were dear as life,—have one after another fallen asleep. Others have fallen out by the way. Could we have seen the crosses in number, weight and size that we have had to bear, nature might have shrunk; but God has comforted, sustained, and, like a tender Father, gently led us by the way. Like Samuel, let us set up our Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The Lord showed Paul how great things he must suffer for his name. But in mercy he kindly withheld our light afflictions and disappointments from us in the early days of our espousal of those doctrines that have distinguished us as a people. With very little exception, it may as a general thing be without doubt admitted, as in the apostle's day, "As concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against." May God in mercy grant that in our case, as in theirs, it may be falsely. Amen.

Beloved, our days of mourning are fast drawing to their end; according to divine appointment their bounds are limited that they cannot pass. By the positive light of God's blessed word, we through faith (which is "the evidence of things not seen") see, feel and know that we shall very soon see the King in his beauty, and behold the land once afar off, but now specially nigh. Then let our love, faith and joy abound. Cry aloud, spare not. Watchman, lift up your voice like a trumpet. Cry out, oh daughter of Zion. Shout, Behold, thy King cometh. Not but encircled in light, enshrouded with might, majesty, and the grandeur and glory of the Godhead. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

"A suffering lamb to slaughter led,"

Beloved watchman, preach the coming of Jesus. Warn your hearers of his coming. Exhort them to prepare for it. Bride of Christ, awake! Put on thy beautiful garments. Let thy robes be without spot or wrinkle. Jesus is coming. The invitation to the marriage supper is now about to close. The watchmen are about to leave their walls, and soon a universal and eternal silence will prevail. See that you have on the "wedding garment." You cannot be admitted to the feast without it. See that it is not spotted with spiritual pride. See that you are not puffed up with vain glory, trying to enlarge yourself beyond the humble dimensions of a meek and lowly disciple of the Man of sorrows, by using big words and great swelling expressions, for the meaning of which we must needs hunt up Webster or Worcester.

Sons and daughters of affliction, bowed down amid the alternate sorrows of mental and physical anguish, yet patient in all your tribulation, the morn of joy hasteth. Your Redeemer is now marshaling the hosts of "mighty ones." The heavens will soon reveal Him and all the beautiful ones that compose his shining retinue with him. Are thine eyes red with weeping, and thy cheeks moist with tears? O, strive to draw consolation from the abounding grace of thy precious Savior. Jesus is coming.

Dear afflicted one, feeble and emaciated, withering away, sinking, fading, still fading, every pulsation of thy heart and every throb of thy pulse beating the dead march downward to the grave, hear it. Jesus is coming. Thou shalt be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." That hectic flush upon thy sallow cheek shall be quickly changed. That measured, feeble, tottering step shall soon give place to the full vigor of eternal youth. Hallelujah! Jesus is coming.

Dear weeper, in thy dark night of lonely widowhood, with thy lovely little ones in all their sweet innocence dependent upon thee, amid the selfishness of this covetous generation; do clouds still lower thick and portentous o'er thy lonely path? May Father in heaven cheer and guard thee amid the perils of these last degenerate days. Jesus is coming. "Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Such is inspiration's strain of melting melody, gushing forth from the full heart of the sweet singer, in view of the coming of Jesus.

Hear the eloquent Edward Irving sing of the coming of the Just One:—"Blessed consummation of this weary and sorrowful world! I give it welcome, I hail its approach, I wait its coming more than they that watch for the morning. Over the wrecks of a world I weep; over broken hearts of parents, over suffering infancy, over the unconscious clay of sweet innocents, over the untimely births that have never seen the light, or have just looked upon it and shut their eyes for a season until the glorious light of the resurrection morn. O my Lord, come away. Hasten with all thy congregated ones. My soul desireth to see the King in his beauty, and all the beautiful ones whom he shall bring along with him."

"The church in her militant state
Is weary and cannot forbear;
The saints in an agony wait
To see him again in the air.
The Spirit invites in the Bride
Her heavenly Lord to descend,
And place them enthroned by his side
In glory that never shall end."

"Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Yours affectionately, waiting for the dawn of eternal day. S. S. BREWER.

BIBLE TESTS, AND FRUITS OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—We, of all others who believe in the nearness of the judgment day, should be Bible christians. The inspired word thus admonishes us, "BUT BE YE DOERS OF THE WORD, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

I have been led to make this communication on learning that an afflicted invalid sister of our faith has been permitted to go to the poor-house. Is this according to our Savior's command? "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Now, brethren and sisters, who wish to hear the welcome announcement,—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," let me entreat you personally to attend now to these things. "For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy." Do you wish to be found among this class? "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?" "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Would Job have suffered an instance like the above, who says, "Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him?" What was his testimony? "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." What does our Savior say? "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none." "Freely ye have received, freely give." "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" Do we wish to spiritualize or figure away these teachings? Have these obligations enjoined by the apostles ceased? "I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, 'It is more blessed to give than to receive.'" "Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also."

Is this promised blessing of no account? "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies." "A good man showeth favor, and lendeth; he will guide his affairs with discretion. Surely he shall not be moved for ever; the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Was the apostle in an error when he made this statement? "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully." "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give," not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Our Savior also says, "Give, and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." "For with the same measure that ye mete withal shall it be measured to you again."

Dear brethren and sisters, cannot even the poorest of us do as much as this?—"And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Furthermore, "But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Brothers, sisters, is there none to search out all causes? "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." "Behold the judge standeth before the door."

"TO-DAY."—Luke 23: 43.

To perfect the argument, we shall now admit that the sentence is correctly punctuated: that Christ did say to the penitent, believing thief, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise;" that Christ and the thief did both die on and in that same Jewish day in which they were placed upon the cross, and still maintain that neither Christ nor the thief are or have been in paradise, but will be in strict accordance with, and in fulfillment of Christ's affirmation, "today."

Adam Clarke, in his Butterworth's Concordance, says that "day is put for (1) light (Gen. 1: 5), and (2) Time in general, (Luke 19: 42.) He beheld the city and wept over it, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which" . . This is equivalent to, If you had "to-day" known, which is at least your time, even if thou hadst known the thing which, etc. (3) For GOSPEL TIMES. (Rom. 13: 12, 13.) "The night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us walk honestly, as in the day." 2 Cor. 6: 2. "I have heard thee in a time accepted and in a day of salvation,—NOW is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Heb. 3: 13. "Exhort one another daily, while—so long as—it is called to-day." 15, "While—so long as—it is said, to-day if you will hear his voice." 4: 7, "Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David (Psa. 95: 7), To-day, (comma after day) after so long a time;" as it is said, To-day . . . harden not your hearts." 9, "There remaineth therefore a rest (day, a Sabbath) to the people of God." 11, "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest (into that day of rest, into that Sabbath day,) called after so long a time by David and Paul, "to-day."

(5) The time when (after) Christ came in the flesh. Jno. 8: 56. "Abraham rejoiced to see my day." (6) Light of truth. 1 Cor. 3: 13. "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it." (8) A short time. Deut. 9: 1. "Thou art to pass over Jordan this day." Rev. 18: 8. "Her plagues shall come in one day." (9) Put for "glory." Prov. 4: 18. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Phil. 1: 6. "Being confident . . . . that he who hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." See also v. 10, and 1 Cor. 1: 8. "Who shall confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." See also v. 55, and 2 Cor. 1: 14, 1 Thess. 5: 23. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Tim. 6: 15. "Which in his time he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," i. e., "in the day," at "the coming," in "the times" of Jesus Christ, in "the end" of the "gospel day," the "day of salvation," the "atonement day," the "perfect day," the "day of glory," the "limited certain day," called "to-day," when "the night is past," when the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom" of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15, 10: 5, says, "reign on the earth."

Now it is self evident from these passages collated, that the "times of Christ" constitute "the day of the Lord Jesus," "the day" of "his coming," "the day" of his salvation.—Heb. 9: 28. The "to-day," after so long a time, in which day there remaineth a rest; for God's people, when Christ shall come into his kingdom, and "gather out of it all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth;' "Then shall the righteous shine forth, (i. e., come forth like the sun's rays shining from behind a cloud when it is parted,) as the sun in the kingdom of their father."

"Who hath ears to hear let him hear." Now that was the time, that was the hour, that was the day of which "the thief" spoke when he prayed to Jesus saying, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." And speaking in response to that prayer, of that day, our Savior might properly, forcibly and truthfully say, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day (or, as Joseph Benson has it in his comment on Luke 23: 43, p. 501, "This day"—of which you have just spoken, the day of my coming—this day) thou shalt be with me in paradise."

But there is not a necessity, even, for the explanatory clause above, for King David, said by Peter to be a prophet, in his time called the entire epoch, from Joshua to the second coming of Christ, including his "reign on the earth," "To-day." Paul, in Hebrews, centuries of years after David, and some thirty odd after Christ's death, speaking of the same time, still called it "to-day."

The day of salvation in former, present and future times, is called "to-day," on the same principle that any hour out of a given twenty-four in solar time is called to-day, and by the same figure of speech—synecdoche—where a part is put for the whole. Under the law and the prophets it was styled to-day, because they testified of Christ who "was to come," who, under the gospel, "has come," to redeem sinners, and in (not after) the day of salvation "will come again," "without a sin-offering," to save saints. Abraham saw it and rejoiced. David was in it and "was glad." Paul departed before it closed, and "his eyes were opened to its light." Moses called it "this day." David called it "to-day." Paul called it to-day." Writers, speakers, editors, theologians, eighteen hundred years after, are still calling it "to-day"; and all christians affirm that it is not yet ended, and a great many, far too many, are making a very, very long day of it yet; for they say it cannot end until Christ comes, and Christ, they say, cannot come for some thousands of years yet. Ah! "My Lord delayeth his coming."

But all admit that when he does come, the "to-day" of David, of Paul, of the men of the nineteenth century, will end, and Christ will have come into his kingdom, and with him the saints will come, with him "the times of the restitution will come, with him will come the glory, with him will come the judgment, with him God's wrath will come upon every soul of man that doeth evil;" with him will come the time when, sitting upon his throne, he "will make all things new," and "paradise lost" will then be paradise restored; and there Christ will be, and there the saints will be, and there, too, will He be, who on the cross prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom;" and still the "to-day" of David, the "to-day" of Paul, the "to-day" of Christ will not yet have ended; for he must reign in his day, until all enemies are put under his feet, and the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters of the sea cover the vast abyss. So Christ could well say, "to-day" thou shalt be with me in paradise. Oh, my Lord, remember poor me, too, when thou comest into thy kingdom, that I, also, may be with thee in paradise.

We are done with "the thief."

THE HIGH PRIEST.

Once a year the high priest offered the sacrifice of atonement for the sins of Israel. With the blood of a goat, on which had been laid their sins, he entered into the Holy of Holies to make intercession for the people. None but the high priest was permitted to enter into the inner sanctuary, and he must be pure, or he would lose his life; for no unclean person could enter the most holy place and live. And when he had made an end of intercession and reconciliation in the holy place, he came out into the outer tabernacle, finished the work of atonement, sanctified and blessed the people, and sent their sins away on the head of the scape-goat into the land of forgetfulness, and the glory of God appeared. Where were the people, and in what position did he find them when he came out? They were praying without, waiting and watching for his coming forth to bless them. Perhaps they became weary sometimes, waiting for his return; but as long as they knew that he was alive, they also knew that he was making intercession for them, and had reason to expect he would come forth with the blessing. But could they tell whether he was alive? and did they know when he was about to come out of the holy place? Let us see.

The robe of the high priest was curiously adorned with bells and pomegranates. What were the bells for? That the "sound" might "be heard when he" went "in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he" came "out." When he was in there sprinkling the blood of atonement upon the mercy seat, and ministering before the Lord, the people could hear the tinkling of the bells and knew their high-priest was alive. And when he started to come out, they could easily tell that the sound was approaching nearer and nearer. But they must be within hearing distance. If they ceased to wait, and watch, and listen, and wandered off into the wilderness, saying, he will not yet come forth, they would get beyond the sound of the sweet tinkling of the bells, and would not know when he was coming out, and would lose the blessing. See the host of Israel, gathered together before the tabernacle, in the attitude of prayer, probably with their faces to the ground, waiting and anxiously listening to those tinkling bells. The priest is quiet and solemn in his movements, for he is in the presence of God—a holy place. The bells make but little noise, but by listening earnestly, the people can catch now and then the tinkling sound, just enough to assure them that the priest still lives. They are weary and long for his coming, but still they patiently wait. By and by, the bells begin to sound louder; they turn their ears and listen more intently. The sound comes nearer, they look up; nearer still—they lift up their heads and watch eagerly the door or entrance of the tabernacle. The curtain lifts, the glory begins to shine. The priest—the mediator of the old covenant—comes out, and stretching out his hands, in God's name, he blesses them.

Then comes their joy. Their waiting is ended. The blood of the atonement has been sprinkled upon the mercy seat; their sins have been borne away into the land of forgetfulness; they are sanctified and blessed, and the glory of God is revealed. A shout of praise, more acceptable to God than their sweetest incense, ascends to heaven from that great congregation. They are now prepared to enjoy a Sabbath of rest and the feast of tabernacles. ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

The belief that such a high attainment in christian holiness as this caption indicates, was once a distinctive feature in the theology of a large denomination of christians. I well remember, when a boy, how much it was discussed. I was reared under the folds of another and somewhat different denomination, nearly, if not quite, as large. Consequently, my mind was biassed against that doctrine as something unattainable in this life. I was instructed to fight against this doctrine, and another also,—a somewhat distinctive feature of the denomination first alluded to,—viz: "falling from grace." I hear very little said about either of these doctrines now.

In subsequent life I was thrown into a society where the doctrine of "entire sanctification" was revived and insisted on, as not only practicable, but imperiously demanded of all those who professed faith in the gospel of Christ. This was not among those attached to the denomination first alluded to, but in the denomination in which I was educated. After I had lost all denominational preferences, I was disposed to look at it candidly in its new dress. I had before this espoused a somewhat new doctrine, called "entire consecration," which I thought made larger drafts upon practical life than I had ever seen presented by the professors of the elder doctrine; they were no doubt sisters; but I believed the "elder would serve the younger" ere long.

Still further on in life, my lot, for a time, was cast into the very focus, or the central fires, from which this new "entire sanctification emanated. I was somewhat disposed to doubt the entirety of the work; but to the extent it had progressed, the fruits were indeed grateful to the last. Without any mere figure of speech, I will state in what these fruits consisted. It had produced a religious community; not exactly like that following the day of Pentecost, but the most like it of anything I had ever seen, or have yet read of. No one stopped to inquire if "aught of the things which he possessed was his own" The grand and only object seemed to be to found, nourish and sustain an institution which should give free and equal chances for a christian education; no matter whether the student be rich or poor, male or female, white or black. Could any one blame me for loving such a community as that with the deepest ardor? And yet I was not blinded to any remaining fault. I could not admit that they were "entirely sanctified."

I was in possession of a very severe test of the doctrine of sanctification here so favorably exhibited; and if I had not believed it furnished me by the word of God, I would never have used it as a probe. If these lines ever meet the eye of a reader of the Crisis possessing a tender spot similar to the one to which this probe was applied, I hope he will not think it designed for him; but only allow me to make it in this connection, so as to complete the illustration for which I set out. I was not thinking of this point when I started. Let me be fairly understood. I wish to admit that there may be noble attainments in christian sanctification, while the subjects of this blessed work are not aware of remaining defects, which, if they were, would go at once for the remedy, and apply it. A happy thought has now taken possession of my pen. There are a plenty of incidents for carrying out my illustration, leaving out the point I was rushing into with so little consideration of the consequences. It was a very strong point, but I will omit it. I have a plenty of others at hand, equally pertinent to my object.

But to return. You will ask, what was lacking in that community and institution? Why not accord to the people and professors the attainment their cherished doctrine implies? Well, one strong reason was, they ignored the teachings of God's prophets. How can men or women be entirely sanctified, who leave out of their theology and out of their affections the return of that blessed Lord they claim to imitate? It is impossible. A man or woman, who is entirely sanctified, will not only be "looking for," but "hasting unto the coming" of the One they love above all other beings.

But just here I must put in one thing in favor of this community, which should not have been omitted in its proper place. And now I must move softly, or I shall touch some tender feelings by the contrast. As much as I loved this people, I love the Advent people more; not because I have been better treated in the Advent family, for the reverse is the fact. My stronger affinities for the latter family arise from the fact that they love the appearing of our blessed Lord. But this family have never allowed one half the freedom I was allowed in the community described above. They knew me to be an Adventist of the millenarian type. They had Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians, many people, and students. But you could never have learned this fact by one shade of difference in the treatment which each received. All was as free as in an apostolic church meeting. Put that down to their credit.

While this was the general fact, and while I was perfectly free to talk with the people, or students, and even with the professors, the subject of prophecy was discussed throughout. I went to the President, who was less hostile than others to the subject in general. He readily allowed it was of some importance; but there must be a "millennium before the Lord comes." I went to the professor of theology:—"I don't know any thing at all on the subject." But you have some opinion on the subject. "None at all; there [illegible] many different opinions about the matter, I can form no opinion of my own." But you are a professor and teacher of theology; there is some difference of opinions in theology; how do you get an opinion of your own on that subject? "Go to Bro. C.; he is professor of Hebrew Exegesis; he has looked into the subject of prophecy some; I leave it all with him." Yes, I am well aware of his view; but the pith of the question with him I have agreed to leave out for the present. I will, however, give some of the points in my encounter with the professor of Hebrew Exegesis on one other point. He told me I "could not understand the prophets of the Old Testament, unless I understood the usus loquendi of the Hebrews. I told him I had availed myself of information from the best Hebrew scholars on the few disputed points in reference to the original. I supposed the English reader should be allowed, with such aid, to understand the general scope of prophecy. No, "we must understand the usus loquendi of the Hebrews themselves." I told him there was with me, then, but one alternative. I should not stop to learn the Hebrew language, but would fall back upon the usus loquendi of the Lord himself, and take my chance. There was no dispute about the Lord's use of language for six thousand years. It was fair to presume the same use of language would be continued for one thousand years more, at least.

This brother had taken a high stand in defense of the doctrine of entire sanctification. On a public occasion, when as usual there was a warm, free and brotherly discussion on all points, with both clergymen and laymen (all the professors were among the former class), the subject of entire sanctification was a prominent topic. I brought forward the claims of "entire consecration," and endeavored to get such claims in a little ahead of entire sanctification. Whether I succeeded or not, this brother discovered, or thought he did, that the jury were leaning toward a verdict in my favor. That result must be avoided if possible. Having exhausted his other arguments without producing the desired effect upon such a large, free, and popular jury, he turned upon me with the argumentum ad hominem. A resort to "personalities" was so entirely discarded in that community, that if the doctrine of "entire sanctification" received no damage from their use on that occasion, one of its advocates made a less fortunate escape. I remain a friend of that doctrine, nevertheless. D. CAMPBELL.

SATANIC LITERATURE; or, SNAKES IN THE GRASS.—No. 2.

"Nothing but leaves—no garnered sheaves
Of life's fair, ripened grain;
Words, idle words for earnest deeds!
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds;
We reap, with toil and pain,
Nothing but leaves."

"The prince of the power of the air, the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience," has many agents in his employ. Among these none are more efficient than writers and distributers of bad books and papers. A book or paper lives not only while its author lives, but long after the hand which wrote it has turned to dust, and if it is a bad book or periodical is one of the most malignant forces on the earth. Hence those who are bent on serving the devil most effectually put corrupt and corrupting sentiments into type, or finding them there, give them currency in the community.

There is much of this latter work going on, not only in our large cities, but in our manufacturing villages and farming towns. Persons not satisfied with being poisoned themselves, are diligently poisoning others; not satisfied with going to hell alone, are inducing as many others as possible to go with them. Could we reach any such, we would ring in their ears a startling note. We would tell them—God will hold you accountable, and a fearful account will you have to render. Nor this only; you will meet those whom you have corrupted, and forever receive their execrations. They will say, you brought us here; but for you, truth and not error would have been our guide, and we should have been led upwards, and not hither. You ruined us, ruined us forever.

Friends, you that traffic in these literary serpents, the popular, fascinating weeklies and monthlies that are flooding and cursing our land, mark well the words of Christ, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Rumsellers find this passage literally true—the curses they impart often return tenfold upon their own pates, into their own bosoms. Very many children of those who traffic in liquid death and distilled damnation become inebriates, bloated sots, and find a drunkard's grave. Fathers, mothers, sons and daughters, all find a common hell of weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. So may it be with these dealers in intellectual poisons, that intoxicate the mind, corrupt the heart, pollute the soul—sink it lower than the grave! "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind."—Hosea 8: 7.

Editors, beloved, are you aware of the mischief you are doing in giving favorable notice of these popular works of fiction? The man that writes novels, may look for novel readers in his own family. And that same novel writer, publisher, seller and puffer, may meet the curses of his children, 'where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.'

Such recruiting sergeants of the devil should be avoided by the young as their worst enemies. They should shrink from them as from contact with pestilence. If known in any community, they should be marked by all the good people there as a nuisance, and be frowned upon; and it should be understood that whoever countenances them in any way, [illegible] or by contributing to their support, are 'partakers of their sins,' and unless they repent and do works meet for repentance, will finally be 'partaker of their plagues.'"

"The brand of guilt is on your brow;
The price of blood is in your hand;
Ye feed yourselves from human woe;
Ye trample on each social band."

SHORT SERMONS.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—JOHN 3: 16.

Let us notice first the love of God here spoken of. It is free and totally unmerited on our part. When man sinned, Christ was promised,—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."—Gen. 3: 15. Salvation was freely offered. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price."—Isa. 55: 1. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."—John 7: 37. What infinite love is here manifested after man had sinned and disobeyed God. Jesus died for us, and offered us salvation free. Will we accept this offered mercy, or reject it to our own condemnation?

SECOND. We must believe on Jesus, receive him as our Savior, to secure the blessings promised. "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."—John 7: 38. "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—John 4: 14.

THIRD. "Should not perish." Precious promise, made to us on the condition that we believe on Jesus, receive him as our Savior, obey his commands, and yield our hearts in sweet submission to his will. What is it to perish? First, it is not to die a natural death, for this is the lot of all, both saint and sinner; but it is to be a partaker of "the second death." "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Rev. 20: 14. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. "Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—James 1: 15. Shall we sin and receive death, or obey, and receive eternal life?

FOURTH. "But have everlasting life." "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3: 15. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10. Will we be faithful and receive the reward of eternal life in the kingdom of our Savior?

DIALOGUE

BETWEEN PETER AND A DISCIPLE.

Disciple. What did you say those prophets were searching for in that first letter you wrote?

Peter. I was telling you how diligent the prophets were in searching out the salvation of God at the appearing of Christ.

D. But you said something about the suffering of Christ.

P. Yes, I said Christ was "put to death in the flesh."

D. Well, Peter, what did you mean to have us understand about the time?

P. I told you there was a time, or a manner of time, that those prophets were searching out, in which even angels were interested.

D. Did they find it out?

P. No. It was revealed unto them, that they were not ministered unto themselves, but unto us, to whom this special grace shall be brought, at or just before the revelation of Jesus Christ.

D. But were they so earnest to know the time when the Savior would be born, or the time when this great salvation would be wrought out by the death of Christ?

P. Oh, it was the time of the death of Christ and the glory, that caused this earnest inquiry.

D. But some of our brethren say that the time of which they prophesied, and of which they were searching so diligently, was for the birth of Christ, and not his sufferings, and I thought they were mistaken.

P. Most certainly they are; for, as I told you in my letter, "the spirit of Christ which was in them" caused them to search diligently for the time of the "SUFFERINGS of Christ, and the glory that should follow."

D. I am glad of this explanation Peter, for many of the brethren will receive your testimony, and no longer misapply the prophetic time of Christ's sufferings, to his birth.

More anon. H. PRATT.

☞ It should be the aim, from day to day, of every one to make some improvement in self or surroundings, by well directed efforts, for it is often that earnest striving results in vast good to mankind.

HYMN OF THE LAST DAYS.

BY H. BONAR, D. D.

Help, mighty God!
The strong man bows himself,
The good and wise are few,
The standard bearers faint,
The enemy prevails.
Help, God of might,
In this thy church's night!

Help, mighty God!
Evil is now our good,
And error is our truth,
Darkness is now our light,
Iniquity o'erflows.
Help, God of might,
Defend, defend the right!

Help, mighty God!
Men turn their ear away
From the great voice divine;
And each one seeks his own
Dark oracles of lies.
Help, God of might,
The idols, Lord, affright!

Help, mighty God!
Men slight the grace divine,
They mock the glorious love,
And the great gift of God
Is a thing of nought.
Help, God of might,
The foe arise and smite!

Help, mighty God!
The blind now lead the blind,
Man has become as God,
The tree of knowledge now
Bears its last ripest fruit.
Help, God of might,
For us come forth and fight!

Help, mighty God!
The perfect word of heaven
Is as a Sibyl's scroll,
And the great mount of God
Is as Dodona's shrine.
Help, God of might,
And in the dark give light!

Help, mighty God!
The cross is growing old,
And the great sepulchre
Is but a Hebrew tomb!
And Christ has died in vain!
Help, God of might,
Else faith shall perish quite!

Help, mighty God!
The Christ of ages past
Is now the Christ no more!
Altar and fire are gone,
The victim but a dream!
Help, God of might,
Put the fierce foe to flight!

Help, mighty God!
The world is waxing gray,
And charity grows chill,
And faith is at its ebb,
And hope is withering!
Help, God of might,
Appear in glory bright!

THE LORD IS COMING.

It is now twenty-three long years since I heard that honest old Low Hampton farmer, in the Apollo Hall, Broadway, N. Y., with godly sincerity proclaim the coming of the Just One. Crowds attended, and listened with a seeming intensity to know the truth; but as in the parable of "the sower," the seeds fell among way-side, stony ground, thorny ground, and good ground hearers.

In taking a retrospective view of the above period, I find it mingled with joy and sorrow, dotted with seasons and incidents of a very interesting nature. Many of our pioneers, who bore aloft the prophetic banner, leaving their religious associations,—and at that time those social ties were dear as life,—have one after another fallen asleep. Others have fallen out by the way. Could we have seen the crosses in number, weight and size that we have had to bear, nature might have shrunk; but God has comforted, sustained, and, like a tender Father, gently led us by the way. Like Samuel, let us set up our Ebenezer, saying, "Hitherto hath the Lord helped us." The Lord showed Paul how great things he must suffer for his name. But in mercy he kindly withheld our light afflictions and disappointments from us in the early days of our espousal of those doctrines that have distinguished us as a people. With very little exception, it may as a general thing be without doubt admitted, as in the apostle's day, "As concerning this sect, we know that every where it is spoken against." May God in mercy grant that in our case, as in theirs, it may be falsely. Amen.

Beloved, our days of mourning are fast drawing to their end; according to divine appointment their bounds are limited that they cannot pass. By the positive light of God's blessed word, we through faith (which is "the evidence of things not seen") see, feel and know that we shall very soon see the King in his beauty, and behold the land once afar off, but now specially nigh. Then let our love, faith and joy abound. Cry aloud, spare not. Watchman, lift up your voice like a trumpet. Cry out, oh daughter of Zion. Shout, Behold, thy King cometh. Not but encircled in light, enshrouded with might, majesty, and the grandeur and glory of the Godhead. Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus.

Beloved watchman, preach the coming of Jesus. Warn your hearers of his coming. Exhort them to prepare for it. Bride of Christ, awake! Put on thy beautiful garments. Let thy robes be without spot or wrinkle. Jesus is coming. The invitation to the marriage supper is now about to close. The watchmen are about to leave their walls, and soon a universal and eternal silence will prevail. See that you have on the "wedding garment." You cannot be admitted to the feast without it. See that it is not spotted with spiritual pride. See that you are not puffed up with vain glory, trying to enlarge yourself beyond the humble dimensions of a meek and lowly disciple of the Man of sorrows, by using big words and great swelling expressions, for the meaning of which we must needs hunt up Webster or Worcester.

Sons and daughters of affliction, bowed down amid the alternate sorrows of mental and physical anguish, yet patient in all your tribulation, the morn of joy hasteth. Your Redeemer is now marshaling the hosts of "mighty ones." The heavens will soon reveal Him and all the beautiful ones that compose his shining retinue with him. Are thine eyes red with weeping, and thy cheeks moist with tears? O, strive to draw consolation from the abounding grace of thy precious Savior. Jesus is coming.

Dear afflicted one, feeble and emaciated, withering away, sinking, fading, still fading, every pulsation of thy heart and every throb of thy pulse beating the dead march downward to the grave, hear it. Jesus is coming. Thou shalt be changed "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." That hectic flush upon thy sallow cheek shall be quickly changed. That measured, feeble, tottering step shall soon give place to the full vigor of eternal youth. Hallelujah! Jesus is coming.

Dear weeper, in thy dark night of lonely widowhood, with thy lovely little ones in all their sweet innocence dependent upon thee, amid the selfishness of this covetous generation; do clouds still lower thick and portentous o'er thy lonely path? May Father in heaven cheer and guard thee amid the perils of these last degenerate days. Jesus is coming. "Let the heavens rejoice, and let the earth be glad; let the sea roar, and the fulness thereof. Let the field be joyful, and all that is therein; then shall all the trees of the wood rejoice before the Lord; for he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth: he shall judge the world with righteousness, and the people with his truth." Such is inspiration's strain of melting melody, gushing forth from the full heart of the sweet singer, in view of the coming of Jesus.

Hear the eloquent Edward Irving sing of the coming of the Just One:—"Blessed consummation of this weary and sorrowful world! I give it welcome, I hail its approach, I wait its coming more than they that watch for the morning. Over the wrecks of a world I weep; over broken hearts of parents, over suffering infancy, over the unconscious clay of sweet innocents, over the untimely births that have never seen the light, or have just looked upon it and shut their eyes for a season until the glorious light of the resurrection morn. O my Lord, come away. Hasten with all thy congregated ones. My soul desireth to see the King in his beauty, and all the beautiful ones whom he shall bring along with him."

"The church in her militant state
Is weary and cannot forbear;
The saints in an agony wait
To see him again in the air.
The Spirit invites in the Bride
Her heavenly Lord to descend,
And place them enthroned by his side
In glory that never shall end."

"Amen, even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Yours affectionately, waiting for the dawn of eternal day. S. S. BREWER.

BIBLE TESTS, AND FRUITS OF CHRISTIAN FAITH.

DEAR BRETHREN AND SISTERS IN THE LORD:—We, of all others who believe in the nearness of the judgment day, should be Bible christians. The inspired word thus admonishes us, "BUT BE YE DOERS OF THE WORD, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."

I have been led to make this communication on learning that an afflicted invalid sister of our faith has been permitted to go to the poor-house. Is this according to our Savior's command? "Therefore, all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Now, brethren and sisters, who wish to hear the welcome announcement,—"Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me," let me entreat you personally to attend now to these things. "For he shall have judgment without mercy, that hath showed no mercy." Do you wish to be found among this class? "If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?" "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone." Would Job have suffered an instance like the above, who says, "Because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him?" What was his testimony? "The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me, and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy." What does our Savior say? "He that hath two coats, let him impart to him that hath none." "Freely ye have received, freely give." "Sell that ye have, and give alms." "If therefore ye have not been faithful in the unrighteous mammon, who will commit to your trust the true riches?" Do we wish to spiritualize or figure away these teachings? Have these obligations enjoined by the apostles ceased? "I have shewed you all things, how that so laboring ye ought to support the weak, and to remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, "It is more blessed to give than to receive." "Therefore, as ye abound in every thing, in faith, and utterance, and knowledge, and in all diligence, and in your love to us, see that ye abound in this grace also."

Is this promised blessing of no account? "Blessed is he that considereth the poor; the Lord will deliver him in time of trouble. The Lord will preserve him and keep him alive; and he shall be blessed upon the earth; and thou wilt not deliver him unto the will of his enemies." "A good man showeth favor, and lendeth; he will guide his affairs with discretion. Surely he shall not be moved for ever; the righteous shall be in everlasting remembrance." Was the apostle in an error when he made this statement? "He that soweth sparingly shall reap also sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully shall reap bountifully." "Every man according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give," not grudgingly, or of necessity; for God loveth a cheerful giver." Our Savior also says, "Give, and it shall be given you; good measure, pressed down and shaken together, and running over, shall men give into your bosom." "For with the same measure that ye mete withal shall it be measured to you again."

Dear brethren and sisters, cannot even the poorest of us do as much as this?—"And whosoever shall give to drink unto one of these little ones a cup of cold water only in the name of a disciple, verily I say unto you, he shall in no wise lose his reward." Furthermore, "But whoso hath this world's goods and seeth his brother have need, and shutteth up his bowels of compassion from him, how dwelleth the love of God in him?" Brothers, sisters, is there none to search out all causes? "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." "Behold the judge standeth before the door."

To perfect the argument, we shall now admit that the sentence is correctly punctuated: that Christ did say to the penitent, believing thief, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day shalt thou be with me in paradise;" that Christ and the thief did both die on and in that same Jewish day in which they were placed upon the cross, and still maintain that neither Christ nor the thief are or have been in paradise, but will be in strict accordance with, and in fulfillment of Christ's affirmation, "to-day."

Adam Clarke, in his Butterworth's Concordance, says that "day is put for (1) light (Gen. 1: 5), and (2) Time in general, (Luke 19: 42.) He beheld the city and wept over it, saying, "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which" . . . This is equivalent to, If you had "to-day" known, which is at least your time, even if thou hadst known the thing which, etc. (3) For GOSPEL TIMES. (Rom. 13: 12, 13.) "The night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us walk honestly, as in the day." 2 Cor. 6: 2. "I have heard thee in a time accepted and in a day of salvation,—NOW is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation." Heb. 3: 13. "Exhort one another daily, while—so long as—it is called to-day." 15, "While—so long as—it is said, to-day if you will hear his voice." 4: 7, "Again, he limiteth a certain day, saying in David (Psa. 95: 7), To-day, (comma after day) after so long a time;" as it is said, To-day . . . harden not your hearts." 9, "There remaineth therefore a rest (day, a Sabbath) to the people of God." 11, "Let us labor therefore to enter into that rest (into that day of rest, into that Sabbath day,) called after so long a time by David and Paul, "to-day."

(5) The time when (after) Christ came in the flesh. Jno. 8: 56. "Abraham rejoiced to see my day." (6) Light of truth. 1 Cor. 3: 13. "Every man's work shall be made manifest; for the day shall declare it." (8) A short time. Deut. 9: 1. "Thou art to pass over Jordan this day." Rev. 18: 8. "Her plagues shall come in one day." (9) Put for "glory." Prov. 4: 18. "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Phil. 1: 6. "Being confident . . . . that he who hath begun a good work in you will perform it until the day of Jesus Christ." See also v. 10, and 1 Cor. 1: 8. "Who shall confirm you unto the end, that ye may be blameless in the day of our Lord Jesus Christ." See also v. 55, and 2 Cor. 1: 14, 1 Thess. 5: 23. "I pray God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." 1 Tim. 6: 15. "Which in his time he shall show, who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords," i. e., "in the day," at "the coming," in "the times" of Jesus Christ, in "the end" of the "gospel day," the "day of salvation," the "atonement day," the "perfect day," the "day of glory," the "limited certain day," called "to-day," when "the night is past," when the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdom" of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign forever and ever." Rev. 11: 15, 10: 5, says, "reign on the earth."

Now it is self evident from these passages collated, that the "times of Christ" constitute "the day of the Lord Jesus," "the day" of "his coming," "the day" of his salvation.—Heb. 9: 28. The "to-day," after so long a time, in which day there remaineth a rest; for God's people, when Christ shall come into his kingdom, and "gather out of it all things that offend, and them that do iniquity, and shall cast them into a furnace of fire; there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth;' "Then shall the righteous shine forth, (i. e., come forth like the sun's rays shining from behind a cloud when it is parted,) as the sun in the kingdom of their father."

"Who hath ears to hear let him hear." Now that was the time, that was the hour, that was the day of which "the thief" spoke when he prayed to Jesus saying, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." And speaking in response to that prayer, of that day, our Savior might properly, forcibly and truthfully say, "Verily I say unto thee, to-day (or, as Joseph Benson has it in his comment on Luke 23: 43, p. 501, "This day"—of which you have just spoken, the day of my coming—this day) thou shalt be with me in paradise."

But there is not a necessity, even, for the explanatory clause above, for King David, said by Peter to be a prophet, in his time called the entire epoch, from Joshua to the second coming of Christ, including his "reign on the earth," "To-day." Paul, in Hebrews, centuries of years after David, and some thirty odd after Christ's death, speaking of the same time, still called it "to-day."

The day of salvation in former, present and future times, is called "to-day," on the same principle that any hour out of a given twenty-four in solar time is called to-day, and by the same figure of speech—synecdoche—where a part is put for the whole. Under the law and the prophets it was styled to-day, because they testified of Christ who "was to come," who, under the gospel, "has come," to redeem sinners, and in (not after) the day of salvation "will come again," "without a sin-offering," to save saints. Abraham saw it and rejoiced. David was in it and "was glad." Paul departed before it closed, and "his eyes were opened to its light." Moses called it "this day." David called it "to-day." Paul called it to-day." Writers, speakers, editors, theologians, eighteen hundred years after, are still calling it "to-day"; and all christians affirm that it is not yet ended, and a great many, far too many, are making a very, very long day of it yet; for they say it cannot end until Christ comes, and Christ, they say, cannot come for some thousands of years yet. Ah! "My Lord delayeth his coming."

But all admit that when he does come, the "to-day" of David, of Paul, of the men of the nineteenth century, will end, and Christ will have come into his kingdom, and with him the saints will come, with him "the times of the restitution will come, with him will come the glory, with him will come the judgment, with him God's wrath will come upon every soul of man that doeth evil;" with him will come the time when, sitting upon his throne, he "will make all things new," and "paradise lost" will then be paradise restored; and there Christ will be, and there the saints will be, and there, too, will He be, who on the cross prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom;" and still the "to-day" of David, the "to-day" of Paul, the "to-day" of Christ will not yet have ended; for he must reign in his day, until all enemies are put under his feet, and the glory of God shall cover the earth as the waters of the sea cover the vast abyss. So Christ could well say, "to-day" thou shalt be with me in paradise. Oh, my Lord, remember poor me, too, when thou comest into thy kingdom, that I, also, may be with thee in paradise.

We are done with "the thief."

THE HIGH PRIEST.

Once a year the high priest offered the sacrifice of atonement for the sins of Israel. With the blood of a goat, on which had been laid their sins, he entered into the Holy of Holies to make intercession for the people. None but the high priest was permitted to enter into the inner sanctuary, and he must be pure, or he would lose his life; for no unclean person could enter the most holy place and live. And when he had made an end of intercession and reconciliation in the holy place, he came out into the outer tabernacle, finished the work of atonement, sanctified and blessed the people, and sent their sins away on the head of the scape-goat into the land of forgetfulness, and the glory of God appeared. Where were the people, and in what position did he find them when he came out? They were praying without, waiting and watching for his coming forth to bless them. Perhaps they became weary sometimes, waiting for his return; but as long as they knew that he was alive, they also knew that he was making intercession for them, and had reason to expect he would come forth with the blessing. But could they tell whether he was alive? and did they know when he was about to come out of the holy place? Let us see.

The robe of the high priest was curiously adorned with bells and pomegranates. What were the bells for? That the "sound" might "be heard when he" went "in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he" came "out." When he was in there sprinkling the blood of atonement upon the mercy seat, and ministering before the Lord, the people could hear the tinkling of the bells and knew their high-priest was alive. And when he started to come out, they could easily tell that the sound was approaching nearer and nearer. But they must be within hearing distance. If they ceased to wait, and watch, and listen, and wandered off into the wilderness, saying, he will not yet come forth, they would get beyond the sound of the sweet tinkling of the bells, and would not know when he was coming out, and would lose the blessing. See the host of Israel, gathered together before the tabernacle, in the attitude of prayer, probably with their faces to the ground, waiting and anxiously listening to those tinkling bells. The priest is quiet and solemn in his movements, for he is in the presence of God—a holy place. The bells make but little noise, but by listening earnestly, the people can catch now and then the tinkling sound, just enough to assure them that the priest still lives. They are weary and long for his coming, but still they patiently wait. By and by, the bells begin to sound louder; they turn their ears and listen more intently. The sound comes nearer, they look up; nearer still—they lift up their heads and watch eagerly the door or entrance of the tabernacle. The curtain lifts, the glory begins to shine. The priest—the mediator of the old covenant—comes out, and stretching out his hands, in God's name, he blesses them.

Then comes their joy. Their waiting is ended. The blood of the atonement has been sprinkled upon the mercy seat; their sins have been borne away into the land of forgetfulness; they are sanctified and blessed, and the glory of God is revealed. A shout of praise, more acceptable to God than their sweetest incense, ascends to heaven from that great congregation. They are now prepared to enjoy a Sabbath of rest and the feast of tabernacles. ENTIRE SANCTIFICATION.

The belief that such a high attainment in christian holiness as this caption indicates, was once a distinctive feature in the theology of a large denomination of christians. I well remember, when a boy, how much it was discussed. I was reared under the folds of another and somewhat different denomination, nearly, if not quite, as large. Consequently, my mind was biassed against that doctrine as something unattainable in this life. I was instructed to fight against this doctrine, and another also,—a somewhat distinctive feature of the denomination first alluded to,—viz: "falling from grace." I hear very little said about either of these doctrines now.

In subsequent life I was thrown into a society where the doctrine of "entire sanctification" was revived and insisted on, as not only practicable, but imperiously demanded of all those who professed faith in the gospel of Christ. This was not among those attached to the denomination first alluded to, but in the denomination in which I was educated. After I had lost all denominational preferences, I was disposed to look at it candidly in its new dress. I had before this espoused a somewhat new doctrine, called "entire consecration," which I thought made larger drafts upon practical life than I had ever seen presented by the professors of the elder doctrine; they were no doubt sisters; but I believed the "elder would serve the younger" ere long.

Still further on in life, my lot, for a time, was cast into the very focus, or the central fires, from which this new "entire sanctification emanated. I was somewhat disposed to doubt the entirety of the work; but to the extent it had progressed, the fruits were indeed grateful to the last. Without any mere figure of speech, I will state in what these fruits consisted. It had produced a religious community; not exactly like that following the day of Pentecost, but the most like it of anything I had ever seen, or have yet read of. No one stopped to inquire if "aught of the things which he possessed was his own." The grand and only object seemed to be to found, nourish and sustain an institution which should give free and equal chances for a christian education; no matter whether the student be rich or poor, male or female, white or black. Could any one blame me for loving such a community as that with the deepest ardor? And yet I was not blinded to any remaining fault. I could not admit that they were "entirely sanctified."

I was in possession of a very severe test of the doctrine of sanctification here so favorably exhibited; and if I had not believed it furnished me by the word of God, I would never have used it as a probe. If these lines ever meet the eye of a reader of the Crisis possessing a tender spot similar to the one to which this probe was applied, I hope he will not think it designed for him; but only allow me to make it in this connection, so as to complete the illustration for which I set out. I was not thinking of this point when I started. Let me be fairly understood. I wish to admit that there may be noble attainments in christian sanctification, while the subjects of this blessed work are not aware of remaining defects, which, if they were, would go at once for the remedy, and apply it. A happy thought has now taken possession of my pen. There are a plenty of incidents for carrying out my illustration, leaving out the point I was rushing into with so little consideration of the consequences. It was a very strong point, but I will omit it. I have a plenty of others at hand, equally pertinent to my object.

But to return. You will ask, what was lacking in that community and institution? Why not accord to the people and professors the attainment their cherished doctrine implies? Well, one strong reason was, they ignored the teachings of God's prophets. How can men or women be entirely sanctified, who leave out of their theology and out of their affections the return of that blessed Lord they claim to imitate? It is impossible. A man or woman, who is entirely sanctified, will not only be "looking for," but "hasting unto the coming" of the One they love above all other beings.

But just here I must put in one thing in favor of this community, which should not have been omitted in its proper place. And now I must move softly, or I shall touch some tender feelings by the contrast. As much as I loved this people, I love the Advent people more; not because I have been better treated in the Advent family, for the reverse is the fact. My stronger affinities for the latter family arise from the fact that they love the appearing of our blessed Lord. But this family have never allowed one half the freedom I was allowed in the community described above. They knew me to be an Adventist of the millenarian type. They had Baptists, Methodists, Congregationalists, and Presbyterians, many people, and students. But you could never have learned this fact by one shade of difference in the treatment which each received. All was as free as in an apostolic church meeting. Put that down to their credit.

While this was the general fact, and while I was perfectly free to talk with the people, or students, and even with the professors, the subject of prophecy was discussed throughout. I went to the President, who was less hostile than others to the subject in general. He readily allowed it was of some importance; but there must be a "millennium before the Lord comes." I went to the professor of theology:—"I don't know any thing at all on the subject." But you have some opinion on the subject. "None at all; there [illegible] many different opinions about the matter, I can form no opinion of my own." But you are a professor and teacher of theology; there is some difference of opinions in theology; how do you get an opinion of your own on that subject? "Go to Bro. C.; he is professor of Hebrew Exegesis; he has looked into the subject of prophecy some; I leave it all with him." Yes, I am well aware of his view; but the pith of the question with him I have agreed to leave out for the present. I will, however, give some of the points in my encounter with the professor of Hebrew Exegesis on one other point. He told me I "could not understand the prophets of the Old Testament, unless I understood the usus loquendi of the Hebrews. I told him I had availed myself of information from the best Hebrew scholars on the few disputed points in reference to the original. I supposed the English reader should be allowed, with such aid, to understand the general scope of prophecy. No, "we must understand the usus loquendi of the Hebrews themselves." I told him there was with me, then, but one alternative. I should not stop to learn the Hebrew language, but would fall back upon the usus loquendi of the Lord himself, and take my chance. There was no dispute about the Lord's use of language for six thousand years. It was fair to presume the same use of language would be continued for one thousand years more, at least.

This brother had taken a high stand in defense of the doctrine of entire sanctification. On a public occasion, when as usual there was a warm, free and brotherly discussion on all points, with both clergymen and laymen (all the professors were among the former class), the subject of entire sanctification was a prominent topic. I brought forward the claims of "entire consecration," and endeavored to get such claims in a little ahead of entire sanctification. Whether I succeeded or not, this brother discovered, or thought he did, that the jury were leaning toward a verdict in my favor. That result must be avoided if possible. Having exhausted his other arguments without producing the desired effect upon such a large, free, and popular jury, he turned upon me with the argumentum ad hominem. A resort to "personalities" was so entirely discarded in that community, that if the doctrine of "entire sanctification" received no damage from their use on that occasion, one of its advocates made a less fortunate escape. I remain a friend of that doctrine, nevertheless. D. CAMPBELL.

SATANIC LITERATURE; or, SNAKES IN THE GRASS.—No. 2.

"Nothing but leaves—no garnered sheaves
Of life's fair, ripened grain;
Words, idle words for earnest deeds!
We sow our seeds—lo! tares and weeds;
We reap, with toil and pain,
Nothing but leaves."

"The prince of the power of the air, the spirit that worketh in the children of disobedience," has many agents in his employ. Among these none are more efficient than writers and distributers of bad books and papers. A book or paper lives not only while its author lives, but long after the hand which wrote it has turned to dust, and if it is a bad book or periodical is one of the most malignant forces on the earth. Hence those who are bent on serving the devil most effectually put corrupt and corrupting sentiments into type, or finding them there, give them currency in the community.

There is much of this latter work going on, not only in our large cities, but in our manufacturing villages and farming towns. Persons not satisfied with being poisoned themselves, are diligently poisoning others; not satisfied with going to hell alone, are inducing as many others as possible to go with them. Could we reach any such, we would ring in their ears a startling note. We would tell them—God will hold you accountable, and a fearful account will you have to render. Nor this only; you will meet those whom you have corrupted, and forever receive their execrations. They will say, you brought us here; but for you, truth and not error would have been our guide, and we should have been led upwards, and not hither. You ruined us, ruined us forever.

Friends, you that traffic in these literary serpents, the popular, fascinating weeklies and monthlies that are flooding and cursing our land, mark well the words of Christ, "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." Rumsellers find this passage literally true—the curses they impart often return tenfold upon their own pates, into their own bosoms. Very many children of those who traffic in liquid death and distilled damnation become inebriates, bloated sots, and find a drunkard's grave. Fathers, mothers, sons and daughters, all find a common hell of weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. So may it be with these dealers in intellectual poisons, that intoxicate the mind, corrupt the heart, pollute the soul—sink it lower than the grave! "He that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption." "They have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind."—Hosea 8: 7.

Editors, beloved, are you aware of the mischief you are doing in giving favorable notice of these popular works of fiction? The man that writes novels, may look for novel readers in his own family. And that same novel writer, publisher, seller and puffer, may meet the curses of his children, 'where the worm dieth not and the fire is not quenched.'

Such recruiting sergeants of the devil should be avoided by the young as their worst enemies. They should shrink from them as from contact with pestilence. If known in any community, they should be marked by all the good people there as a nuisance, and be frowned upon; and it should be understood that whoever countenances them in any way, [illegible] or by contributing to their support, are 'partakers of their sins,' and unless they repent and do works meet for repentance, will finally be 'partaker of their plagues.'"

"The brand of guilt is on your brow;
The price of blood is in your hand;
Ye feed yourselves from human woe;
Ye trample on each social band."

SHORT SERMONS.

"For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—JOHN 3: 16.

Let us notice first the love of God here spoken of. It is free and totally unmerited on our part. When man sinned, Christ was promised,—"And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel."—Gen. 3: 15. Salvation was freely offered. "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price."—Isa. 55: 1. "In the last day, that great day of the feast, Jesus stood and cried, saying, If any man thirst, let him come unto me and drink."—John 7: 37. What infinite love is here manifested after man had sinned and disobeyed God. Jesus died for us, and offered us salvation free. Will we accept this offered mercy, or reject it to our own condemnation?

SECOND. We must believe on Jesus, receive him as our Savior, to secure the blessings promised. "He that believeth on me, as the Scripture hath said, out of his belly shall flow rivers of living water."—John 7: 38. "But whosoever drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst; but the water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—John 4: 14.

THIRD. "Should not perish." Precious promise, made to us on the condition that we believe on Jesus, receive him as our Savior, obey his commands, and yield our hearts in sweet submission to his will. What is it to perish? First, it is not to die a natural death, for this is the lot of all, both saint and sinner; but it is to be a partaker of "the second death." "And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death."—Rev. 20: 14. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."—Rom. 6: 23. "Then when lust hath conceived it bringeth forth sin; and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."—James 1: 15. Shall we sin and receive death, or obey, and receive eternal life?

FOURTH. "But have everlasting life." "Whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life."—John 3: 15. "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10. Will we be faithful and receive the reward of eternal life in the kingdom of our Savior?

DIALOGUE

BETWEEN PETER AND A DISCIPLE.

Disciple. What did you say those prophets were searching for in that first letter you wrote?

Peter. I was telling you how diligent the prophets were in searching out the salvation of God at the appearing of Christ.

D. But you said something about the suffering of Christ.

P. Yes, I said Christ was "put to death in the flesh."

D. Well, Peter, what did you mean to have us understand about the time?

P. I told you there was a time, or a manner of time, that those prophets were searching out, in which even angels were interested.

D. Did they find it out?

P. No. It was revealed unto them, that they were not ministered unto themselves, but unto us, to whom this special grace shall be brought, at or just before the revelation of Jesus Christ.

D. But were they so earnest to know the time when the Savior would be born, or the time when this great salvation would be wrought out by the death of Christ?

P. Oh, it was the time of the death of Christ and the glory, that caused this earnest inquiry.

D. But some of our brethren say that the time of which they prophesied, and of which they were searching so diligently, was for the birth of Christ, and not his sufferings, and I thought they were mistaken.

P. Most certainly they are; for, as I told you in my letter, "the spirit of Christ which was in them" caused them to search diligently for the time of the "SUFFERINGS of Christ, and the glory that should follow."

D. I am glad of this explanation Peter, for many of the brethren will receive your testimony, and no longer misapply the prophetic time of Christ's sufferings, to his birth.

More anon. H. PRATT.

☞ It should be the aim, from day to day, of every one to make some improvement in self or surroundings, by well directed efforts, for it is often that earnest striving results in vast good to mankind.

THE CONVERT'S FIRST SPEECH.

A first speech is no very easy thing to most of people. Washington Irving hid his under his plate at the public dinner, and being too much frightened to draw it forth, he stumbled a moment and sat down—speechless. Several eminent pulpit orators have made but a sorry figure with their earliest discourses. Yet we have listened to admirable addresses delivered by laymen under the glowing inspiration of a newly awakened love of Jesus. There is a world of home truth in the following off-hand talk of a man just born into the new life:

"I never made a speech, good friends, before. And now it it is not I that speaks, but the grace of God within me. There are perplexed and anxious souls in this room, and perhaps my experience may help them to find the way of salvation. Probably God will not save any one of them just exactly as he saved me; but you need what no one can be saved without, and that is a new heart.

I was first awakened by a business friend who called into my store, and said with a warm grasp of my hand, 'Friend H——, I long to see you a christian. Come to our meeting to-night.' I have always had a high respect for Mr. B——'s piety, and so his words carried weight with me. For fifteen years not a living being had ever talked to me directly about my soul. How christians could keep their mouths closed when they really believed that I was on the road to hell, I never could understand. But their silence was no excuse for my sin. For several days after Mr. B——'s invitation I determined to avoid the meetings for fear that the truth might disturb my guilty security; once I dodged out of the back door of my counting-room to avoid a talk with my friend B——, who came in to look after my soul. My alarm was a proof of the Spirit's striving with me.

I was not ready to abandon church-going in order to keep out of God's reach; so I went on Sabbath morning two weeks ago. The text struck me like a rifle-shot; it was 'Be sure your sin will find you out.' I sat through that terrific cannonade of truth as the poor rebels at Hilton Head, cooped up in a prison of fire, went through the tornado of shot and shells. How guilty I felt; I wondered whether everybody in the house did not fix their eyes on me, and say, 'Now, sir, you are detected.' Generally I like to sing, but the last hymn was too much for me; my heart was in my throat, I could not lisp a line. When I reached home I prayed God would forgive me for having turned an Irish beggar-woman rudely from my door the day before; for I was feeling myself such a beggar before God that I began to have a sympathy for all outcast needy wretches.

My conviction took on chiefly one form. It was my rejection of Jesus Christ that crushed me down. A voice seemed to say to me, 'You have crucified me!' I took up my mother's old copy of Bunyan to read, and opened to the account of 'Evangelist's meeting Christian in his distress and saying to him, 'See that you refuse not him that speaketh.' I spent the evening over the wonderful book. Every word went through me like a knife. I tried to pray, but a hot heavy pressure lay upon me as if a red hot iron bar were pressed against my brain.

The next morning I went to a friend and paid up a debt too long due; but conscience said, 'Why not pay your debts to Christ?' A collector for a Mission school called at my store, and I quite surprised him by handing him a $50 bill. I was trying to compromise with God by giving money; but something said, 'Why not give Christ your heart?'

For two weeks I attended prayer-meetings—listened to good counsels from God's people, rose to be prayed for, but I got no relief. My transient hopes passed away in smoke. But last evening when I went to my room I took out a bundle of letters my good mother (God bless her precious sleeping dust!) wrote to me at boarding-school. I opened to one page on which she wrote—'My dear boy, you will never begin to live till you give your heart to Jesus.' The letter fell out of my hand, and the thought crushed down on me that I had been all my life hating the Savior, who loved and redeemed my mother! I got up, and locked the door with a snap, and said, 'Now, wicked world, stay out; I will never leave this room until I have laid my soul down at Jesus' feet.'

Delicacy forbids me to speak much of those hours of wrestling alone with the angel of the covenant. I don't think I ever really prayed till last night. The burden of my prayer was,—'O Christ, if thou art not ashamed to take such a man as I am, here I am, in all my guilt and wretchedness. For two weeks I have tried to save myself, and thou hast been wonderfully forbearing with me, while I made the foolish trial. I give up. I lay my heart down before the cross, and say, O be merciful to me a sinner. My great sin has been that I have for forty years refused and rejected thee. I repent of that long, long wickedness, and give myself away; 'tis all that I can do.'

Towards morning I fell asleep. I woke up, and looking out of my window I saw the sun, and it seemed to shine brighter than it ever did before. I came down stairs as light-hearted as a lark. I said to myself, 'Isn't it Sunday? I wish it was; I, want to go to church and sing praises.' I loved everybody I saw, and when I got to my store people said, 'H——, 'how happy you look to-day—what's up?' I told them that I ought to look happy, for my heavenly Father had been making me immensely rich.

This, good friends, is all I have to say about what looks to me like conversion. Certainly something has changed—either the world or I, for I do not feel towards it as I used to. I would like to go to work if you have something for me to do. I feel as if a little child could lead me by the little finger. Friends, let me come into the ranks as a raw recruit; I want to see some service before I die, for the best part of my life is gone already."—The Evangelist.

A Good Creature of God.—How frequently do we hear slaves to rum, tobacco, or some other deadly poison, reiterate impudently, Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksiaving; and they would persuade us that what was made in the stiil-pot was a creature of God. In one sense it is so, but in the same sense so is arsenic, so is oil of vitriol, so is prussic acid. Think of a fellow tossing off a glass of vitriol and excusing himself by saying that it is a creature of God.—Home Thrusts.

☞ It is not enough that you are praised by the good; you have failed somewhere in duty if you are not cursed by the bad.

JOURNAL PARAGRAPHS.

We spent the Lord's day, Sept. 24th, in Biddeford, Me., where we found a very healthy church. Bro. Wm. H. Mitchell has labored there, and his efforts have been much blessed, in connection with others. We have not seen a church in some time that appeared to be more in earnest to lead true christian lives. We found it easy preaching. What a difference we feel when talking to a people who are anxious to hear and obey the word of life, from what we do when preaching to a cold, formal, worldly-minded church. In the first case, it is like pitching hay with the wind; and in the latter against it. The first is delightful labor; the second a toilsome task, as when a beast of burden is over-loaded, and on a hard road. We know it is often said of the preacher, "He had a hard time of it." No wonder. No one was praying for him,—his hearers sat as critics, filled with the spirit of the world. Had Jesus been there, it would have been said of him, as on another occasion, "He did not many mighty works there because of unbelief."

Some appear to suppose that when the minister has "a dry time," that the fault is his. This may be true in many cases; but it is oftener, we think, the fault of the church. This is shown from the fact that in some places the preachers always feel free; while in others all preachers have a "hard time."

If congregations would pray more for the preacher, and pay less attention to his faults, he would preach much better, the church would receive far greater benefit, and every thing would go on more prosperously. As soon as criticism begins, decline must follow. The whole spirit of it is opposed to the Spirit of Christ, and the sweet influences of his love. Many have lost ground in this way, while at the same time they have crippled the influence of their preacher, besides adding much to his burdens. Let the past suffice for this ruinous course, and a happy change will be felt in many places.

The church in Biddeford is one where all feel free and at home while preaching the word. We enjoyed our visit with them. Three rose for prayers, and others are almost persuaded to be christians. While there we met Bro. Munger, returning from his eastern trip. He spoke encouragingly relative to the places he had visited. In some localities he found the enemy strongly entrenched, and ready for a bold resistance; but the truth of the Lord prevailed, wounding some, and healing others. We found our Bro. in good courage, ready for new conflicts. This is no time for cowards in the army of the Lord. We need bold, self-denying men, wholly consecrated to him. None others can expect to have success in these last hours of peril. Our enemies are in earnest; and shall we be less awake? We are rejoiced to find some who see the dangers of the hour, and who have courage to sound the alarm, though friends and a cold church may cry "croaker," "cynic," "bigot," "superstitious," "deluded," or "fanatic." Remember, "when they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." This is no time for the cry of "peace;" but emphatically an hour when all christians should prepare for a most determined opposition from the enemies of their hope. Every great truth of the Bible is being assailed with a most deadly hostility; and faint efforts, and conservative measures are only calculated to stimulate the opposers with more zeal and brighter hopes of success. These enemies of the cross must be met by those whose motto is "Victory, or death." No retreat or compromise can be allowed in any case. Dear Brn. in the ministry, let us raise the standard higher, and boldly spread the banner of the Lord to the breeze. Our last conflict is at hand. Be brave for Jesus.

A PILGRIM'S NOTES.

Monday, Sept. 25th, we left Biddeford, Me., en route for Dixfield, Me., to attend a discussion to-morrow evening. When we arrived at Sumner Flat, we were met by Bro. O. Kimball, formerly of Concord, N. H., who was waiting to take us to his quiet home at Canton Mills, seven miles from Sumner. We found him and his companion strong in the Lord, waiting for the consummation of the blessed hope. We had a very pleasant visit with them. In the evening, we had a meeting in the Baptist and Universalist house, which was well filled with an attentive audience. We found "an ear to hear"; and the word was well received. This place is about twenty-three miles from Mechanic Falls. We think it is a good field for faithful laborers in the Lord.

Tuesday, Sept. 26th, we had a pleasant ride with Bro. Kimball, by the side of the Androscoggin river, ten miles, to Dixfield, arriving at ten A. M. It is a fertile valley, hemmed in by surrounding hills. Dixfield is a pleasant village on the banks of the Androscoggin. Some of the scenery is quite romantic. We found the people kind and hospitable. We could not learn as there had been any preaching there by those who believe the doctrine we advocate.

Our Discussion

commenced at one o'clock in the afternoon. Our opponent was a Universalist minister by the name of O. Johnson, residing in Jay Hill. We learn that he is very highly esteemed by the people in this section, and has great influence over them; consequently a large number are Universalists, or sympathizers with that denomination. Our discussion was in their house, which is a good one, and very pleasantly located on a hill overlooking the village.

The following was the proposition presented to us for discussion:—"Are the doctrines as taught by modern Adventists taught in the Bible?"

After due consideration, we concluded to take up first the subject of future punishment. This point we discussed during four sessions of two hours each, closing Wednesday P. M. We had hoped to have taken up other points of doctrine, but this seemed to be satisfactory. The audiences were large, intelligent, and very attentive and orderly. The discussion was pleasant, and, we think, a glorious success in favor of the truth, whose friends rejoiced in the Lord.

We have not room for any lengthy report of the debate, and will only refer to a few points. In our first speech we laid down the following propositions:—

1. The wicked will be punished.
2. They will be punished upon the earth.
3. They will not be punished till after the second coming of Christ, which is yet future.
4. The punishment of the wicked will be eternal death.

Our opponent admitted the first proposition. In relation to the second and third, he claimed that those who died in their sins would be corrected and disciplined in the spirit-world till all would be saved. This was his great point. But his whole proof appeared to be, because he wished to have it so; and therefore it ought and would be so. We pressed him repeatedly, and very earnestly, to produce one passage of scripture which taught that a man who died in his sins should have opportunity after death to reform and become a christian. After much searching, he mentioned one passage in Eph. 1: 9, 10, of which he said, he thought it had "a little shade" of evidence in favor of such an opinion, though he was aware that it had not much strength. He remarked that perhaps he should be able to find some other passage; but no more were presented in his subsequent speeches, though he was frequently urged to give them; hence we concluded that he agreed with us, that none such were in the Bible. When we came to look at his proof text in Eph. 1: 9, 10, it was seen that the passage referred only to those "in Christ," who are to be gathered "together in one" body "in the dispensation of the fulness of times." We found this passage had been his Gibralter proof, but on careful examination, his position in relation to it was found to be like that of the little child which had seized hold of the blade of a sharp knife,—in great danger of serious results.

After admitting, as the Bible teaches, that some men die in their sins, and failing to find any scripture that taught another opportunity for them to repent in the future world, of course his remaining task was like an effort to row a boat up over the Niagara,—an utter failure. But he made one more struggle, in the following manner:

He stated that Jesus said to his disciples,—"Ye shall die in your sins," and then argued that if the disciples died in their sins, and were saved, as they would be; so, others who should die in their sins would also be saved. We asked him to give chapter and verse, where it was recorded that Jesus said to his disciples, "Ye shall die in your sins." After considerable searching, he rose up to read the passage, but hesitated,—said he thought he had it, but concluded it was in some other chapter. One then spoke from a distant part of the house and said it was in John 8: 21. He then turned to it, looked at it some time, closed the book without reading the passage, or saying any thing about it. In our next speech, we took occasion to present the passage, which reads as follows:—"Then said Jesus again unto them [the Pharisees], I go my way, and ye shall seek me, and shall die in your sins; and whither I go ye cannot come." This was a fatal blow to his position, and no further efforts were made to present a passage which teaches that those who die in their sins will have any opportunity to obtain pardon in the future life. As he admitted that men will not be saved "in" their "sins," and could find no Bible evidence that the Lord would give them a second probation, of course it followed that the Bible does not teach universal salvation.

We then brought forward the plain "thus saith the Lord," saying, "all the wicked will he destroy." He scarcely made even an attempt to meet the many positive scriptures which were presented to prove the eternal death and destruction of the wicked; but said, if he had "time," he thought he could show they might be made to harmonize with his position. We concluded, if he could do nothing towards it in two days, when that was his special business, it would take more "time" than will be allotted to us in this life to secure such a result.

He made an effort to show that Peter's burning day, spoken of in 2 Pet. 3: 10, and the "new earth," mentioned in the 13th ver., are already in the past. This, of course, was a most signal failure, though a labored effort was made in a written sermon which he read. In our reply we turned to Rev. 21: 1–5, and read John's description of the new heavens and earth of which Jesus tells the revelator, through his angel, that in the "new earth" there will be "no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain." As he claimed that the new earth state began some eighteen hundred years ago, we inquired why it was that the sea remained? and if there had been no death, sorrow, crying, nor pain, since then? We left him to think on these things, and take "time" to harmonize them with his position.

In order to sustain his position, he asserted that the Revelation of St. John was written in A. D. 69, and applied to the destruction of Jerusalem; and that no part of it is yet to be accomplished. We then referred him to the prophecy relative to the leopard beast, in the 13th chapter, and inquired if that was all accomplished at the destruction of Jerusalem? also Rev. 17th chapter, concerning the scarlet-colored beast and the woman riding upon it, and if that mystical Babylon on "the seven hills"–Rome–had been "thrown down," and could be "found no more at all," as declared in the 18th chap.? We could get no reply. The reason was obvious; facts were all opposed to the position taken by our opponent. These things were seen by the unprejudiced, and resulted in an urgent invitation, from some of his principal friends and supporters, for some more meetings; with which we complied, and preached three evenings, in the Universalist house, to large and very attentive congregations. Many warm friends were made, who showed us much kindness. We are highly gratified with the results of the discussion. Many saw the wide difference between truth and error clearer than ever before, and rejoiced to see the light. As the counterfeit bill is more clearly shown when placed beside the genuine; so error, when contrasted with truth in open debate, appears much more hideous than when alone, with its hypocritical varnish, by which its deformities are concealed. By the help of the Lord, we love to tear off its mask, and let the people see its ugly look. Thank the Lord for the counterfeit detector—the Bible. It continually grows more precious.

We expect much rich fruit will result from the discussion in Dixfield. To the Lord be all the glory.

REMEMBER HIM.

I have just received a letter from our beloved brother in Christ, L. Boutell, and am afflicted to learn that his daughter is very sick with the typhoid fever, and his wife is so feeble as to be incapable of rendering any assistance in this hour, when a mother's aid is so much needed. Our brother has watched day and night for one week. Pray for him, and let it be said as it was of one in Acts 10: 4. The Lord bless and sustain the dear brother in this hour of adversity, is the prayer of thy Bro. in the bonds of the gospel,

S. S. Brewer.

P. S.—I have taken the responsibility of giving the friends of our beloved brother the above information, without his knowledge or solicitation. His address is Groton, Mass.

WATCHING AND WAITING.

Beloved Brn. and Srs.:—How cheering is the thought that each day brings us so much nearer redemption, nearer our Savior's blessed coming. My heart grows sad sometimes, as I look around and see with what desperation Satan is gathering his hosts for the final conflict; and my heart aches as I see what a change has taken place in this village. I am informed that once there was a large number here who were watching for our King's coming; but being disappointed in 1843, they have "fallen asleep," and there are now but few here who have remained faithful on the watch-towers of Zion. But it is cheering to know that there are a few scattered through this section who have the armor on, waiting for Jesus to redeem his people. This event is near at hand; much nearer, I fear, than some anticipate.

A sure sign of its nearness is the present activity of Satan, who, knowing that his time is short, is marshaling his army with renewed wrath, to make his last assault on God's people. Now, christian brethren, is the time for us to awake, have our lamps trimmed, and marshal our army to welcome our Savior. Let us each put on the armor of faith, and counteract the movements of Satan by rallying beneath our banner, and recruit for the army of Jesus. Let every christian turn recruiting officer; go out into the highways of this world, and scatter the truth broadcast; go to the sick with words of comfort, and point them to the Lamb who died to save them; speak words of kindness to the poor and oppressed, and go to that poor downcast, wandering one, and bring him into our army. Go to those who are "sleeping," and bid them awake, for the King is near. Marshal them on the battlements of Zion; and, with our lamps trimmed and burning, let us resolutely meet the assaults of Satan, and wait till Jesus shall come and Satan shall be bound and cast in the bottomless pit. Then

"Let Zion wake the lofty strain—
Live, King of kings! forever reign!"

If this should meet the eye of any of the brethren in this village, or vicinity, I should like to hear from them. Let us muster our hosts, rally to our post, and again raise the banner of Jesus in this section. The King is near; let us prepare to meet him. Let me hear from you, brethren, in this section. Let us sound the trumpet and awake those who have fallen asleep, and prepare for the coming of our Redeemer. Pray for me.

Your brother in Christ, waiting for the Redeemer's coming. Wm. H. Spencer.

THE BEST ROBE.

When the poor prodigal returned to his father, begging to be received as a hired servant, the father says, "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him." And when we, poor sinners, come repenting and forsaking all our sins, our Father says, "Bring forth the best robe and put it on him." Will any of us dare refuse to wear this robe? To be sure, we are unworthy; but it is the command of God that we appear before him clothed in the righteousness of Christ.

This is the only way for us to obey the command,—"Be ye holy." O for simple, childike faith and obedience! Obey from the heart; cast away all the filthy rags of self-righteousness, and just submit to be clothed with the best robe. This is the righteousness of faith. Believe the blessed Savior when he says, "ye are clean every whit." Then the "irrepressible conflict" between good and evil will cease in you. A statesman once said, "This country cannot remain half slave, and half free." Apply this to the case of your own heart. "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

O come, and accept the fullness of the blessing. F. H. Chamberlain.

WORK FOR ALL.

Where? In the tract field. A world is to be enlightened; tracts to be made and scattered, and the good seed sown broadcast everywhere, that the angels of God, in the Great Day, may reap an abundant harvest. It is a good work—a great work; and somebody is to do it. You may have a hand in it if you will. Will you?

But what can I do?

You can do all that you have the ability and the means to do. God has given you "talents" of some kind; and, be they one, two, or five, he expects you to use them, wisely and well, so as to gain other talents for the Master when he returns.

Have you the pen of a ready writer, through which to utter "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn?" Consecrate that pen to God, and use it for his glory. Let it be, like an unfailing fountain-pen, ever ready, full and flowing, with words of wisdom, warning and salvation. Write! Write tracts; tracts to scatter everywhere; tracts that shall do men good and save. The King of glory will reward you, and write your name among his immortals.

Have you money? Give it to the Lord, to print what the others write. Devote your means to the great end for which it was given you—the spread of truth and the good of his cause—and he will repay you, by and by, an hundred fold.

Have you time? Use it to scatter freely what the pen has written and the money printed. Be a co-worker with them, and with the Lord. Give him your time, and he will give you eternity.

And you,—shut up perhaps at home, feeble and sick, without talents, or means, or opportunity,—what can you do? Pray! Pray for wisdom and power to the writer, liberality to the giver, and blessings on the work of the distributer; and soon the hand that makes you immortal will give you unfailing health and joy.

Yes, there is work for all; and, in the name of the Great Worker, let all work! with pen, purse, and hand, with the tongue of persuasion, and the heart and lips of prayer,—till the working time is over, and the sweet day of rest comes. W. B. H.

FOR THE POOR.

Dorcas Wilcox, of Avon, N. Y., wrote the following lines just before she died, aged eighty-five:—

We receive the Crisis with much love,
'Tis the olive leaf of Noah's dove;
It brings out treasures new and old,
Refreshing to the hungry soul.

We love it because it loves the poor,
And goes quite free into their door;
It comforts mourners, cheers the sad,
And makes the pilgrim's heart feel glad.

And now I'm eighty-five or more,
I send two dollars for the poor;
Dear brother, do as seems you good,
As a good steward of the Lord.

TEACHERS FOR THE FREEDMEN.

Those persons who may be interested to go as teachers among the freedmen, under the patronage of the Board of the American Advent Mission Society, will make application to the Board, by letter or otherwise, and also give references for character and qualifications for the work. Address Wm. B. Herron, Secretary of the Board, No. 167 Hanover Street. Joshua V. Himes,

President Amer. Adv. Miss. Society.

WHO WILL HELP?

Bro. H. K. Flagg is going South to preach to the Freedmen, wherever doors may open. He has had sickness in his family some five months the past spring and summer, which has brought him somewhat in debt, from which he wishes to be freed, so that he can go at once where the Lord calls him. He goes, not under the patronage of the Missionary Society, but, according to his own choice, independently, trusting in the Lord to help him and pay his way; and is willing to leave all for the sake of the gospel of Christ and the salvation of the poor freedmen.

Who will help him after a godly sort? There is a way in which you can do it and receive an equivalent, or you can do it without an equivalent if you prefer. He has some fifteen hundred pamphlets—"The Saints' Harvest"—of forty-eight pages each, giving an exposition of "the abomination and daily sacrifice," as spoken of by Daniel and our Savior, which he is anxious to dispose of before he goes. By buying these you will take the burden of debt from his shoulders, and aid him on his way. They can be had for eight cents, postage paid, or seventy cents a dozen. Address H. K. Flagg, Crisis Office, Boston, Mass. He will be here Oct. 12th to the 16th, and fill all orders then. W. B. H.

AUTHORS AND PRINTERS.

To those who are inclined to grumble because a slight mistake may happen to occur in an illegibly written article, we would commend the following, from the New York Daybook:—

"I have seen the arguments of lawyers, in high repute as scholars, sent to the printer in their own hand writing, with many words—especially technical and foreign terms—abbreviated, words mis-spelled, and few or no points, and those few, if any, entirely out of place. I have seen sermons that were sent to be published without points or capitals to designate the division of sentences—sermons which, if published with the imperfections of the manuscript, would have disgraced the authors, and the printer would have been treated with scorn and contempt, as an illiterate blockhead, as a fellow better fitted to be a woodsawyer than a printer. No one would believe that such gross and palpable faults were owing to the ignorance or carelessness of an author. And no one but a practical printer knows how many hours the compositor, and after him the proof reader, is compelled to spend in reducing to a readable condition manuscripts that the writer himself would be puzzled to read.

The above, in whole or in part, will apply to at least two-thirds of the writers for the press. Many who have something of a reputation as authors, can neither punctuate, spell nor write grammatically—to say nothing of their sprawling penmanship. And, as might be expected, these are generally the ones that find the most fault, which is no small annoyance, and we have sometimes wished it were a penal offence to correct an author's manuscript."

For the World's Crisis.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

After a perplexing week at the Wilbraham campmeeting, as usual, I took a trip down east, among the hills and valleys, to get away from noise and confusion, to rest, by holding ten to twelve meetings a week, for six or eight weeks, which is much easier than to attend one campmeeting at Wilbraham, which was the largest I have ever attended in that town. I leased the first ground nearly twenty years ago for a campmeeting, and have attended every year since; and this year was characterized for union in effort and sentiment. There was but little strife to present new, scattering views, and but little difficulty in electing officers, and doing the great amount of business that is done. As the Second Advent convention meets at the same time, it makes it difficult to preserve harmony, especially when we have those among us that follow us for the sake of the loaves and fishes, and deny the name, and yet try to bag the ship. This class was not so prominent or prosperous this year, which accounts for dispatching the business quicker.

After two days settling up, and picking up lost things, I started for Alton Bay campmeeting. The first I noticed of importance was the loss of my valise, with all my clothes and books, in Boston, which set me back and to thinking whether to go home after more, or go on. After thinking I had no more at home, I might as well go on. On going to the ticket office, I found we had to pay more for our tickets than was advertised. This was another thing I could n't help; but on getting to the ground I found such good warm friends, I forgot my valise, and entered into the work I love, i. e., telling the people the Lord is soon coming, which privilege I had as soon as I arrived, to a large, attentive congregation. This meeting was good and well attended, and nearly all seemed to be willing to work for the benefit of the body. This meeting will soon be like a boy who outgrew his boots, unless wisdom dictates a new policy. This is the place for a meeting in that region, and experience will lead to some important alterations for the better.

Portland. Found the church on the rock, and a good congregation to hear. I was under the necessity of borrowing a shirt, as all mine were stolen with my valise; and a woman gave me her carpet bag to carry it in, saying she did n't believe what I preached, but admired my independence.

Brunswick. Found Bro. Storer's good family at home. Good time in the evening preaching about the "hope." Livermore. Found them somewhat scattered, but doing well under the labors of Bro. Hanscomb. While there went three miles to a Methodist campmeeting. Heard their Thursday preaching at two P. M., considered to be their best. Text, the cloud of witnesses, in Heb. 12 These witnesses were the spirits of those prophets mentioned in the eleventh chapter prompting the apostles to duty, and the spirits of the apostles and of our friends who have died were prompting us to duty, etc., etc. I got enough of modern Methodism, and left. How this people have fallen within a few years from the doctrines of their fathers! This preacher undertook to fire his last charge at Spiritualism, and his gun kicked him over; who wondered at it?

Brittain's Mills. Had some of all sorts out, probably not all pleased who believed they had immortal souls, but our people rejoiced with me in the blessed hope.

Canton Mills, in Satan's seat. Two families only as lights. They got the Universalist house, and I had a blessed time in presenting the "unknown God" to them. Some of the sore-footed left when Spiritualism and Universalism yoked together. It will take the Universalist preacher and his father some time to right things there, for it was evident the seed caught. I would like to have stayed and watered it.

Dixfield Centre. Another similar place and congregation. Universalism, rum, and the devil took the lead. But I had freedom in speaking. The brethren came from Carthage and helped, where I preached the Sabbath before. The work was genuine there last spring. They are able to hold the ground against any attack from outside influences. Bro. Wheeler is doing well with his new strong church.

Next to Peru, where there are only two sisters, and but one Advent preacher ever preached in the house before. The people seemed astonished, but gave me liberty in presenting the prophetic signs. One of these had not heard an Advent sermon for ten years, yet she was alive, and brought a young child ten miles, got up and spoke, and cried and rejoiced for that privilege. Such scenes pay better than money.

"Variety is the spice of life." In going from North Jay across the country to Bryant's Pond, thirty to forty miles, I saw some of the most dismal parts of the world; log houses in the woods, where it would take a lifetime to clear up a farm; then not one acre of level land; school-houses in the woods; neighbors a mile apart; post-offices in bee-hives—and I saw one in a hollow tree. Who could help noticing things by the way like this? Acres of wood to give away for cuttting. I saw large lots of good timber piled up to burn; corn growing between logs where the land was never plowed. The hoot owl was the morning whistle. The cats and foxes were their main enemies. The spinning-wheel under full speed was parlor piano and music. Their locks were a chair set against the door; and yet my valise was safer there than in a city with locks and lighted streets, with watchmen at every corner. One dwelt safely in the wilderness, and slept in the woods.

After two such weeks, I got out of the wilderness down to Bryant's Pond, where I saw a paper, only three days old, which was a treat. Had a meeting in the Baptist church Friday eve. A large audience for that place; a blessed time presenting the signs. The brethren rejoiced; but after meeting, what a stir among old backslidden members, and one preacher, like the old prophet under the oak. See 1 Kings 13. This old preacher had once preached the coming of the Lord, and had been enticed back, and was in the right place to join with the Spiritualists and other immortal-soulists in the cry, "Great is the goddess Diana of the Ephesians!" I left them scolding, rejoicing that God's word would yet stir hypocrites.

Next to Mechanic Falls, where there is a small company striving for life. They have gained a good foothold, and others begin to see the light in spite of all the mist and darkness thrown by sectarians.

West Poland. An old fortification that has stood the attacks of former days. There are smaller forts in that region, well manned, and plenty of ammunition, especially Fort Casco, on Mabrey Hill. God has done a wonderful work there. Bro. Libby is setting pickets in other places in that region. It was encouraging to see what good fruits sprung from a little seed sown there last fall. Good strong men and women, who had been believers in universal salvation, embraced the truth and burned their books, and gave their jewelry to the cause of God in scattering light to others. This is a fertile spot. I hope they will watch against tare sowers, for they always pick for a place where somebody else has broken up the ground, and got the good seed well started.

They said to me as I was coming away, "How can we tell who will give us the right kind of food?"

Such as are old experienced soldiers, who have had the character of gathering instead of scattering. You will need to be careful. Not all who preach are recognized as those gathering with the Second Adventists. Some are the heralds of death instead of life, for death follows in their wake. They care more about pushing a point than they do to feed the flock. Hungry sheep will eat sorrel, and get sick or poisoned. Be careful about receiving young pretended preachers, for there are some starting out who are not competent to instruct, and would be likely to put in a wild gourd, and this puts death in the pot, and children get poisoned. We want young preachers; but we want them known and recommended by some one the children can confide in.

At your stage of experience, you do not want a dose of the Age to Come, nor the seventh-day Sabbath, nor the non-resurrection of the wicked, nor tongue talking, nor feet washing. It will only serve to divide you, and break that sweet christian harmony you now enjoy. Keep up your prayer meetings, and be not too anxious to have preaching regularly, unless it seems to come along easily, then it will be more likely to be in the order of God. The Lord is soon coming, and we need grace, more than knowledge of what is going on in this world of confusion and strife, about words of no profit, so prevalent now-a-days.

If this were to be my last advice to the flock, I should not alter it, for I have had forty-two years experience this fall in the cause of God's work, and am encouraged to see the truth taking effect in new places during the last four weeks labor. I feel more like breaking up new ground than cultivating the old. I may go out west, but it is not yet decided. If I should, I cannot come east in December as early as I promised; but watch as well as pray, and I will not forget you. Yours in full hope,

Hiram Munger.

WHERE DO SOULS COME FROM?

It is a very easy matter to assert that the human soul is immortal, but a little harder one to give its origin. It is obvious, however, that if it is an intelligent entity, existing independent of the body, it must be either "pre-existent," "transmitted," or created at birth." No other position can be taken, as all must admit. Which of the above will the advocates of "soul-entity-ism" choose? Either will involve them in difficulties from which it will be hard to extricate themselves. For if the soul is pre-existent—as a distinct entity—why do we not call to mind some things which transpired prior to being imprisoned in the body? Why, we might inquire, were we ever thus imprisoned in tenements of clay? Why were we not left to range the blissful fields of God's unbounded empire, instead of being encumbered with these old earthly clods? Would it not be unjust in Jehovah to thus confine an innocent soul, and then, if peradventure through the weakness of the flesh it occupies it blunders along "a few brief years in carelessness and security," doom it to eternal woe?

And not only this, but if the soul pre-existed, it favors the idea of transmigration! For if it pre-existed in any form, who knows but what it occupied another body? And if it did how natural to suppose it might another still—after leaving this. Yes, dear reader, you, if this theory be true, may in a short time find yourself crawling around in the body of a skunk or a woodchuck!

But if it is not pre-existent, it is either "created at birth," or "transmitted"; and if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible, hence not immortal! And if created at birth then Jehovah must be daily creating souls, not only for legitimate children, but also for illegitimates! Thus is the blasphemous charge brought against God of sanctioning adultery! And not only this, but as it is estimated that "over eighty thousand children are born daily," and contended that "over half of the human family will ultimately be damned," Jehovah must be daily employed in creating over forty thousand candidates for hell fire!! Who dare occupy such a position? Who dare thus slander the Supreme Ruler of the universe? And yet those who claim that the soul—as a distinct entity—is created at birth, do occupy just such a position, and do thus slander God, even though it be done through ignorance.

The position I shall take is, that the soul is transmitted; not as as superadded entity, but as a soul—a Bible soul! In Exodus 1: 5, we read: "All the souls that came out of the loins of Jacob were seventy souls." This proves beyond all cavil that the soul is transmitted; and, as we have already remarked, if transmitted it is divisible, and if divisible it is destructible; and this is also easily proved by the same kind of evidence: "Save me from them that persecute me, and deliver me; lest they tear my soul (not body) like a lion, rending it in pieces."—Psa. 7: 2. If the soul were indestructible, it could not be torn to pieces. How would one look trying to tear in pieces an indivisible, indestructible ghost? Joshua 11: 11.—"And they smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them; there were none left to breathe." Joshua must have understood the tactic of ghost fighting, if he smote indivisible ghosts with a sword! This not only proves the destructibility of the soul, but it also proves that it lives by breathing; and this is in accordance with Gen. 2: 7.—"And the Lord God formed man out of the ground, breathed into him (a ghost man?) the breath of life, and MAN became (what he was not before) a living soul." He was not a living soul until the breath of life entered his nostrils; and how natural then it is to suppose that he will not be a living soul after the breath of life leaves him.

Now, we again ask, which position shall we take—that the soul is pre-existent, created at birth, or transmitted? We feel that we are ready to answer: It is transmitted (Exo. 1: 5), therefore destructible (Psa. 7: 2; Josh. 11: 11). And if this evidence can be relied upon, the doctrine of immortal-soulism sinks forever into dark oblivion, where the first propagator of it will soon follow. It has no foundation in the Bible, reason or philosophy, but is the corner stone of nearly every false system of religion that has ever contaminated christendom. It is the fruits of Satan's lie; a bold issue against Jehovah's declaration—"The soul that sinneth IT shall die." Death is a cessation of life; not life in unspeakable agony, or any thing short of extinction of being; and the individual who tries to controvert it is replying against God!

Beware, therefore, how you try to ignore the plain declarations of the transcript of his holy will—"the wages of sin is death;" and John foresaw a time "when there will be no more death; but if the wicked were to die the death that never dies, they would be dying eternally, and hence there would be death eternally. John doubtless foresaw the time when the old mother of harlots would meet her final doom, and with her go the filthy rags so dearly cherished by her apostate daughters.

"HE THAT WATERETH SHALL BE WATERED ALSO."

The idea of watering presupposes the existence of water, and also a medium for its application, both which are essential. Water possesses certain peculiarities which are the same under all circumstances. For instance, a stream of water can never rise higher than its fountain. "A fountain cannot at the same time send forth sweet water and bitter." "Still waters run deep."

Water is often used to represent the spirit possessed by the christian, and in which accommodated sense the above statements seem equally true; as may be observed, for instance, from the statements and actions of persons at our campmeetings from year to year. Our text states those are to be watered who water; hence it is no wonder some are habitually dry, and destitute at campmeeting time, for they never disburse any water, and all they ever seem to possess they absorb from others, and which quantity is so small it lasts but a short time; for no stream can rise higher than its fountain, and their fountain being human, their stream must of course be fitful and unsteady while it flows, and they be obliged to remain dry a large part of the year. While, did they but rely on the fountain opened for the house of David, and for the inhabitants of Jerusalem to wash in, it would prove to them a well of water, springing up into everlasting life; nor would they be obliged to repair to Wilbraham to draw. And as a fountain cannot send forth sweet waters and bitter, no more could they serve God and mammon alternately, being in the Spirit, full of zeal, praying earnestly, shouting loudly, giving liberally, one month, and lacking all the next; but would, like the still running deep waters, move quietly and unostentatiously about their Master's business. Whether they be observed at home or abroad, in the family or social circle; at the conference or campmeeting, there is a power in such lives; an irresistible influence accompanies such persons. They are the ones who water, and are watered in return.

Correspondence.

From Sr. P. W. Covey.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—Many of you have had the privilege of meeting in the tented grove—a privilege which I should have enjoyed much. I hope and trust you have been endued with power from on high. How little it avails to have the form of godliness without the power; but how little of the power we see manifested now-a-days. It is all pride and popularity. I am heartily sick of it. I do not speak in reference to Advent churches (as I do not have the privilege of meeting with those of like precious faith). I do hope it is not so among those who profess to be looking and longing for the Nobleman's return.

Brethren and sisters, I am hungry for "meat in due season." I have heard but two Advent sermons for over three years; but my husband and myself still love "the joyful sound." We take the Crisis, and are much interested in its contents. One man, a Baptist, says it is the best religious paper he ever saw. I do pray that you who write for it may be guided by the Holy Spirit, that good food, which will enable the children to grow up into Christ in all things, may be dispensed to the household of faith. If we ever enter the "pearly gates," we must be in earnest. Nothing but the power of God can keep us in the paths of righteousness in these days of peril. Will you pray for the scattered ones, that when Jesus comes we may all be gathered into the fold?

PRUSHA W. COVEY.

From Bro. H. McClary.

DEAR BRETHREN:—I am still in my Master's service, going on little errands for him. The message is the same that Paul gave to his son Timothy, to put the brethren in remembrance of these things, that I may be a good minister of Jesus Christ. Last Sabbath, while I was trying to stir up their pure minds by way of remembrance, I was led to think I had provoked some of them to love and good works. One man arose and said that he was not troubled about the Lord's coming, for we did not know that he would come for a thousand years yet. A minister arose and said he wanted to say just one word on that point. It was with him as it was with the old Methodist sister. She thought it was far better to have the pay ready when a note becomes due, than to know when it becomes due.

I am more and more settled and grounded in the faith when I see people so afraid to hear any thing about Jesus coming back to set up his kingdom on this earth, and the signs that are to take place just before his coming. I do not think it strange concerning the fiery trials that are to try us, as though some strange thing happened. God will with these trials make a way of escape, that we may be able to bear them.

I am spreading the truth through this western region and over these prairies and bluffs, by circulating your tracts, papers, and books, and preaching from house to house, and from grove to grove. I go on my own hook, like Lorenzo Dow, without purse or scrip, or two coats. I need your prayers, brethren. Sectarianism, spiritualism, and immortal-soulism, run high; also, sin is the order of the day. Men are not contented here. Going West, West, West, heaping up treasures for the last days.

I am now in Hamilton, Minnesota. Wheat, oats and potatoes bid fair for an abundant crop in this State. The season has been too wet and cold for corn. A great many hundreds of bushels of grain are wasted here for want of granaries. Wheat is fifty cents per bushel, oats and corn thirty cents. Four cents' worth of food is sufficient for a laboring man here. I have to repeat Christ's words as often as I do in the East: "Be not overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and the cares of this world," that the day may not come upon them unawares.

H. MCCLARY.

From Sr. M. W. Whitman.

BRO. GRANT:—I have been a reader of your excellent paper for over four years. It has been meat and drink for me, for we have no preaching here only once in a while, and that is from some of the popular preachers. I have never heard an Advent sermon in my life. I will tell you how I got my light on this glorious religion. I got the life of Cyrus and read that, and then I got hold of some old papers of one of my neighbors, and I read in it some of the prophecy of Daniel, but there was neither beginning nor end, so I could not tell who was the writer of it, but I think now that it was Bro. Wm. Miller; but still I was not satisfied. So I took my Bible and read the whole book of Daniel, but I did not get the true light. So I told Bro. Smith, and he told me that he could give me light, and he gave me a number of the Crisis, and some tracts. I believe in all the Crisis says of the sleep of the dead, and the final destruction of the wicked. The Bible is now a new book to me, for, what I read in the Crisis, I can go to the Bible and find there.

It was always a mystery to me to know that "the soul that sinneth it shall die," and then hear the preaching that the soul should live parallel with eternity in torment; but, thanks be to God that that veil is drawn from me; that I can see and know and understand the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. The persecution I received when I came out in the truth was trying. How the people pointed their fingers at me, and wanted to know if I had any more tracts with me; but I thank God that I am worthy to stand shame and persecution for Christ's sake.

I find some who believe in the sleep of the dead, and some that Christ will soon come. I have distributed quite a lot of tracts that I got from Bro. O. D. Eastman, when he was here; and I received some through Bro Smith, and have distributed all of them.

Yours in the hope of the coming of Jesus,

MARIA W. WHITMAN.

From Sr. M. L. Durand.

BRO. GRANT:—After leaving the New Preston meeting, we accompanied Bro. G. Humphreyville, of Northfield, to his truly hospitable home, where everything love could prompt was done for the comfort of my poor sick husband. Loving hands vied with each other in doing what loving hearts suggested, and we felt in our hearts peace dwelt there. He continued worse. A physician was called, who, doubting if genuine fever and ague could originate in Conn., called it a kind of intermittent. Medicine sanctified by prayer was blest of God, and in a few days a decided change for the better was perceptible, and after nearly two weeks he was able to sit up two or three hours at a time, twice a day. How glad we were!

But a relapse came, the chills returned, and he resolved to start at once for home, which we did on Saturday, Sept. 23d. Arriving at Waterbury, he was too much fatigued to ride further, and we stopped over night at his kind brother's house, and this afternoon we arrived home after an absence of nearly three weeks; and although every body has been so kind and good to us, we are to-night thanking God we are "home again."

I wish I could say to the dear friends who are so prayerfully remembering us, He is better, but I must wait at least till the prostration of fatigue shall have passed, and the disease controlled, which our physician thinks can be accomplished very soon; and as I am watching him during these midnight hours, I can see plainly the medicine administered is having the effect designed, and I do believe God will, for Jesus' sake, answer prayer; and he is mighty to save.

Continue to pray for us. Your sister in tribulation,

M. L. DURAND.

BRO. GRANT:—I am well out here in Mich. I have been trying to preach the kingdom of heaven at hand. I have found some opposition from church members. In one instance they carried their opposition so far as to go to the school-house in which we were to hold meetings, before time, on Lord's day morning, and nailed down all the windows, and then locked the door. But, thanks to God, they did not prevail against us. We got the key, after waiting an hour or so in the snow; but the trustees gave permission to use the house, and authority to get the key. The people stood by me, and I gave the Scriptures in proof of my position. The Lord is helping me, and raising me up friends. I rejoice that I was counted worthy to suffer for my Lord. I believe that good will come out of it. Amen. Enough that the servant be as his master, and the disciple as his Lord. Yours in hope of life eternal,

From Bro. W. H. Cornell.

BRO. GRANT:—The Crisis comes weekly ladened with its (to us) precious truths. To us it is as apples of gold in pictures of silver. We prize it next to our Bible; and when we read the correspondence, we feel encouraged, and by the help of God we will meet its contributors in the coming kingdom. It is now almost nine years since I first knew there were any within the State who were looking for the second coming of Christ to reward his saints on the earth. In this immediate vicinity the Crisis is looked upon as worse than waste paper, and those who are looking forward to the resurrection as the time when the people of God shall receive their reward, as fanatics; they scoff at the idea of Christ's second coming. My prayer is, that they may yet be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

Elder P. W. Hough preached for us last winter three times. There was a good impression. Some began to think what he advanced was reasonable and biblical. The enemy of righteousness was aroused, and has since been busy; but I think his most successful weapon will be to keep the people away from hearing the truth.

Hoping to reap the reward of the righteous at the coming of Christ, I remain your Bro. in Christ,

BRO. GRANT:—During the time I have been in California, the Crisis, though I took it when east, has been the source of still greater comfort to me here. Seeing nor hearing of any Adventists, those of like precious faith, far or near, I have always hailed its coming with pleasure. Like many others I did not know how to appreciate the privilege of listening to Advent preaching until deprived of it.

I was glad to see a notice of Bro. P. A. Smith's coming to this State. Many times I have been on the point of appealing to the preaching brethren to come here. There may be places where their efforts are as much needed, but certainly none where they are needed more. Your sister in Christ,

Obituaries.

WILCOX. Dorcas Wilcox, mother of Elias Wilcox, of Avon, N. Y., died at the residence of her son-in-law, Luther Billings, in Eagle Harbor, N. Y., August 14th, 1865, aged eighty-five years.

She was born in Rhode Island, and emigrated with her husband and children to Western New York in 1805, settling in what is now called Rush, Monroe County, N. Y., from whence, in 1828, they removed to Gaines, Orleans County. She united with the Baptist church about 1806, remaining in fellowship with that church until about 1838, when the church having become extinct, she united with the Wesleyans. In 1843 she heard the glad tidings of the kingdom of God at hand, and in 1853 she, after long, patient, and laborious investigation of the subject, fully embraced the faith and hope of the kingdom of God at hand.

Her health continued good till near her death, at which time, being on a visit to her daughter, she fell while walking the room, and died of heart disease, without a groan, leaving numerous children, grandchildren, and friends, to sorrow for her, yet not as those who have no hope.

A sermon was preached at her funeral by Elder C. W. Low, from Job 17: 15.

Shortly before her death, she wrote these lines for her children:

"To friends and children, one and all,
I make this last and dying call;
Strive to be found at Christ's right hand,
When we before his judgment stand."

GREAT BRITAIN.

On invitation of Lord Fermoy, a meeting of more than fifteen magistrates took place in Cork to consider the security of the public peace as menaced by the Fenian movement. The proceedings were private, but the Cork Examiner says they resulted in the unanimous adoption of a memorial to the Government praying for an immediate increase of the police and military force of the country.

That the existence of a secret organization is dangerous to the public peace was generally admitted, and it was supposed that the adoption of the proposed steps would be sufficient to maintain public order.

On Friday evening, the 15th, in Dublin, a large force of police proceeded from the Castle to Parliament street, where they divided into two bodies, one at either end of the street. Some detectives then knocked at the door of the paper called the Irish People, an alleged Fenian organ, but were refused admission. The police then broke open the door, took possession of the premises, and secured twelve or fourteen prisoners, said not to be compositors, and conveyed them to the Castle.

The police retained possession of the premises. There is no information as to the cause of the seizure, but there are rumors of concealed arms and documents with the names of the leaders, but they are not generally credited. The government was supposed to be acting on information. The police kept the street clear and there was no disturbance. The Irish People is a weekly journal, and was about to be published that evening.

The Indian news is unimportant.

The reported fall of Pekin is unconfirmed.

The correspondent of the London Times at Biarritz, France, mentions the discovery of a reputed plot against the Emperor, either on his way to San Sebastian or on his return to Bayonne. The parties concerned were Italians, including a brother or cousin of Orsini. Precautionary measures were taken, and the Queen of Spain insisted on accompanying the Emperor and Empress to the railroad station, notwithstanding it was night, in order that she might share any risk run by her guests.

Russia officially declares that she will maintain a non-intervention policy in the Schleswig-Holstein question.

The cholera had increased so much at Marseilles that the Mayor had summoned a meeting of physicians to concert measures of relief.

It is stated that Donald McKay, the well known American ship builder, is in close communication with the Admiralty on the subject of torpedoes, which are to be laid down in the channels to English harbors in the case of war.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Sept. 27. Charleston papers of the 23d are received. The following clause of the Constitution was adopted by the Convention by a vote of 98 to 8:

"Slaves in South Carolina, having been de facto emancipated by the action of the United States, neither slavery nor involuntary servitude, except as punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted, shall be re-established in this State."

The ordinance repealing the ordinance of secession was then ratified.

On the 22d inst. a vote was taken on the proposition to make the basis of representation of the State rest upon the whole population, irrespective of color, and was rejected by a large majority, leaving the clause making the white population alone the basis of representation.

New York, Sept. 29. Henry Grinnell, Esq., has received a highly interesting letter from Capt. Hall, the Arctic explorer. He has discovered that in all probability three of the men of Sir John Franklin's Arctic expedition yet survive, and are living among the Innuits. One of these supposed survivors is said to be Crosier, who succeeded Sir John Franklin in command of the expedition.

Poughkeepsie, N. Y., Sep. 27. The barn and stables of D. P. Wheeler's hotel at Washington Hollow were burned last night. The Dutchess County Fair had opened the day before, and many valuable horses were in the stables, eighteen of which were burned, including one team worth $3000, belonging to James Kelley. Several persons slept in the barn. Three boys are missing, one of whom is known to have been burned to death. Another who escaped, badly burned, says the three were asleep when he got out.

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 27. A gang of thirty or forty guerrillas, near Springfield, Robertson county, yesterday, commenced indiscriminate robbery and murder upon the residents of that locality. Thomas J. Paine was killed, his house robbed, and family outraged.

At Adams' station on the Kentucky and Edgefield Road, they plundered all whom they caught. Robert Dorsey was hung to a tree and then dragged on the ground until one of his eyes was torn from its socket. William Adams was severely beaten by the robbers. The exact number of the band is not known. It is believed that Harper, who for some time past has been in that vicinity, is their leader.

Providence, R. I., Oct. 1. Rev. Dr. Francis Wayland, who was for more than twenty-eight years President of Brown University, was prostrated by a paralytic stroke on Tuesday last, and died on Saturday afternoon at five o'clock, aged sixty-nine years.

THE FENIAN MOVEMENT IN IRELAND.—A letter from Dublin published in the New York Herald, speaking of the Fenian movement, which gives the English government so much solicitude, says there is no doubt whatever that the Irish peasantry will co-operate with their trans-Atlantic brethren if the design of the latter is to liberate Ireland from English control. It says they are prepared to "dare and do" all that men of quick perception, resolute hearts, stalwart arms and a hereditary love of war and wish for glory can do to restore the independence of their country, and unite it in still closer bonds of friendship, commerce and communication with the United States, which now shelter a representative of almost every family in Ireland in their broad domain. The writer says that this determination imbues all classes of religionists, and that the Presbyterians and Church of England Protestants of middle rank—the stock from which such men as Andrew Jackson have had their origin—do not regard this Fenian movement with any thing like the disfavor with which they have looked upon the action of the other societies which have worked for Ireland since the disbandment of the Volunteers of 1782, as they are convinced that if the American government should at any time recognize the movement, and it should prove successful, liberty of conscience would be fully respected, and the rights of property secured by the operation of our constitution. It seems that there are plenty of arms in the hands of the people, who have been furtively supplying themselves for some years past; and that many a sturdy harvester has left the English shore with his bundle hung upon a gun barrel that looked extremely like a cudgel. The drillings go on without interruption; and although the government has sent additional police forces into some districts, the expense of which must be paid by an increased taxation of the inhabitants, the government hoping that the tax payers would drive out or inform on the Fenians as a means of saving their pockets, no such result has as yet been experienced. The letter we abstract says:

"The peasantry, being full of hope, evince their sentiments in their songs and rustic poetry. These effusions are, in point of composition, far above the standard of the old ballads of the land, and possess excellent political hits at the declining military and naval power of England, as well as allusions to the advancing commerce and greatness both of America and France. Listening to these songs, you perceive at once that the people are well informed on every thing connected with the late war in the United States; that they approve of the emancipation of the negroes, and fully comprehend the reasons for the faithless action of England, both to North and South. One song sets out by asserting that 'John Brown's knapsack was No. 98,' and the inference is deduced that as 1798 was the year of the great Irish rebellion, one of the fruits of 'Old John's' little movement to Virginia will be found in the freedom of Ireland, and as knapsack 'No. 98' freed the black man, American knapsacks will yet contain the renewed charter of the rights of the white man of Erin. Another of the songs ends with the refrain of 'Vive la Gloria,' and appears to be a combination of the 'Marseillaise' and 'Hail Columbia.' It goes on to inform the world that, with the aid of America and the friendship of France, Irishmen will return 'marching along' to plant the 'Sunburst' flag beside the Stars and Stripes in Ireland. In fact, the popular poetry of Ireland to-day verifies the correctness of the patriotic exclamation,—'Give me the making of the songs of a people, and I care not who rules them.'"

The total available force the English government can send to Ireland is estimated to be below 75,000 men. The strength of the armed Fenians is calculated at about 140,000. The troops, it is said, are not to be relied on—the most of the Irishmen being of the Fenian brotherhood. The correspondent says that the Sacred College at Rome has had the subject of the movement under consideration, and that the direction from the Pope to the Irish clergy is to let it alone for the present.—Journal.

Fort Laramie, Sept. 26. Information was received to-day from Gen. Conner's 8th column, under Col. Cole, to the 21st inst. It has been encamped near Fort Conner since the 20th. He has lost 600 horses and 200 mules which were frozen to death in one night, on the 1st of September. He was attacked by a war party of Sioux, Cherokees and Wapahoes on Powder river. They were repulsed with heavy loss. Our loss was only four killed and two wounded. The Indians appeared in force and were driven ten miles. The next day the engagement was renewed and lasted until noon. The Indians were again defeated with great slaughter, their loss being from 200 to 600 killed and wounded. The Indians fled in every direction. Our troops were unable to pursue on account of the poor condition of our stock. Our loss was one killed and one officer and two men wounded. The Indians lost a large number of horses.

The Indians again attacked our troops on the 8th, and after a short and spirited engagement were totally routed and beautifully cleaned out. Their force was estimated at 3000. They lost many of their principal chiefs. Our total reported losses in the three engagements were seven killed, and one officer and two men wounded. Another battle was expected on Powder river, but the Indians suddenly disappeared.

CHOLERA IN TENNESSEE.—The Nashville Press says that cholera amongst cattle, which generally precedes the cholera amongst the human race, is prevailing throughout Tennessee. Cattle and hogs are dying off at a fearful rate, and a few cases closely resembling cholera have made their appearance in Nashville. Several cases of cholera have occurred at Memphis.

☞ An Italian letter says that the commission appointed by the Italian Minister of public works to decide upon the best point for a tunnel through the Swiss Alps, and especially with regard to the interests of Italian commerce, has decided in favor of the St. Gothard. It is estimated that the work will require eight years, and 80,000,000 francs (£3,200,000.)

☞ To show the gigantic scale on which the war supplies were obtained, there remains on hand in one item 1,500,000 pairs of new shoes. The Quartermaster's Department have already sold 89,000 horses and mules, which have produced upward of six million dollars.

Notices.

Special Notice.

It will be twenty-five years, the 15th of October next, since the first organized conference of Adventists was held in Chardon street Chapel, in Boston.

I have been invited by the committee of the Advent church of Lowell street Chapel, Boston, to preach for them on the twenty-fifth anniversary of this conference. They say that "a discourse having reference to the past history and present prospects of the cause would do good. It would bring together many of the friends from the neighboring towns and cities, who have been long identified with the cause, and some of them for a quarter of a century. Your old friends will be happy to hear you on your past experience and labor with Father Miller and others, in proclaiming, 'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him.' Many of us still believe that God has been with us from the first, and that this truth will soon have a glorious ending. It is a good time now, 'mid the defection from the truth, that would upturn Adventism, to review the old landmarks, and show what position we should now occupy as Adventists, and take fresh courage in this glorious campaign."

Agreeably to this general invitation, I shall spend the Sabbath (October 15) with the Advent church in Lowell street. I will not promise much, but hope so to improve the day as to cheer the hearts of the waiting ones, and give a new impulse to the glorious cause.

I shall spend the following Sabbath (Oct. 22) with the brethren in No. 18 Cooper Institute, New York. I hope for a large gathering of the tried and faithful.

I shall return from this meeting and go South as soon as arrangements can be made, with a view to open new fields of missionary labor among the Freedmen.

J. V. HIMES.

Discussion at Portland, Me.

We, the undersigned, have agreed to hold a public discussion in the city of Portland, Me., at the Second Advent Hall on Congress street, commencing Monday evening, Nov. 7th, at 8 oclock, and continuing through eight consecutive afternoon and evening sessions of two hours each, unless concluded earlier by mutual consent of the parties. Afternoon sessions at 2 o'clock, and evening at 7.

Question:—Is the seventh day Sabbath, observed by God's people prior to the crucifixion of Christ, still binding upon mankind?

Affirmative, M. E. CORNELL.
Negative, T. M. PREBLE.

Maine Ministerial Conference.

The Maine Ministerial Conference will be held at Augusta, Me., at the north parish, to commence Oct 26th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. We are anxious to see all of our brethren in the ministry at this conference. The brethren will do all they can to make us comfortable and happy. Call on Brn. Allen Church or James Dudley. We should be happy to see any of our preaching brethren from other States who may feel it to be a privilege to meet with us.

ISRAEL DAMMAN,
R. R. YORK, } Committee.
ISAAC WIGHT,

Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire.

The annual session of this Conference will be held at Lake Village, N. H., commencing Oct. 12th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope there will be a full attendance, both of ministers and delegates from churches throughout the State. In the meantime let prayers go up to God for his blessing to rest upon us during its session.

ALBION ROSS, President.
A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

We would call the attention of our preaching brethren who are members of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire to the following: The constitution requires that "the ministers shall report themselves personally, or by letter, and the churches by delegates duly appointed thereby," at its annual session. Let this be remembered.

A. ROSS,
A. W. SIBLEY.

Conference.

It is proposed to hold a conference at the chapel in North Norway, Me., commencing Oct. 5th, and continuing through the week and over the following Lord's day. Particulars hereafter. We purpose to be present, the Lord willing. A cordial invitation is extended to all to come.

M. GRANT.

CHRIST SHALL BE MY GUIDE.

AIR—"Maggie sitting by my side."

"Storms can appal me never"
When by faith I soar,
"Fair weather lingers ever"
On the distant shore.

CHORUS.

Roll on, ye dark waves,
O'er the troubled tide
I heed not your anger,
Christ shall be my guide.
He'll give deliverance,
And soon this earth restore,
Glorious land of promise,
Where storms shall come no more.

Earth's joys are but a bubble,
Flitting from my view;
The gales are filled with care and trouble,
From her dying crew.
CHORUS, last line—Where troubles come no more.

Death may lay us in the dust,
And count us with the slain,
God our hope, in whom we trust,
Has promised life again.
CHORUS, last line—Where death shall come no more.

Tears may fall and sorrows gather
O'er the pilgrim here,
Still rejoice in Christ our Savior,
Full redemption's near.
CHORUS, last line—'Tis even at the door.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

DEAR BRO. GRANT—I reached home last evening at ten o'clock, from my long journey, nearly to the city of Cracow. I had three special objects in view in making this journey. First, according to the kind invitation of German Advent brethren in Wurtemberg, to visit them and make their acquaintance; second, to spread the light of the coming of Christ as occasion might offer; and, third, to rescue my youngest brother, on whom Russian tyranny has exercised its rage for several years, and whom I had not seen for twenty-three years. I reached Kirschenhordhof, near Stuttgard, the capital of Wurtemberg, July 6th, where the kind brethren had been looking for me several days, and where I was received with much christian kindness and affection. I remained there four days, and spoke on Sunday to a large congregation, on my christian experience, views and faith. Several Advent christian families have there formed themselves into a colony for the purpose of aiding each other, and laboring more efficiently to spread the truth they believe. They seem to be perfectly united in love, and are very pleasantly situated; have a good chapel, a school with excellent professors, well educated in Greek, Latin, German, French and English, and some speak Italian.

I was especially happy to form the acquaintance of Bro. Hardegg, who is chief director, and his very kind family. Bro. Hoffman is pastor, a very intelligent, well educated, religious man. Bro. Paulus is editor of the little sheet they publish, and also Professor of Languages, and has much influence there; and Dr. Sanders is the physician. I shall never forget the kindness of this dear brother and his interesting, intelligent family. These brethren, with Bro. Adolph Grater, an evangelist, and others, form what they term "The Spiritual Temple Committee," and spread the doctrine of the advent of Christ as they have opportunity.

Monday morning, July 10th, Brn. Hardegg, A. Grater, Dr. Sanders and his son, who is preparing for the ministry, and several others, accompanied me to Stuttgard, and very nobly assisted me with means for the rest of my journey. I passed through the kingdoms of Wurtemberg, Bavaria, Saxony, Prussia, to the frontier of Cracow, old and very familiar territory to me. With my American passport I passed freely from place to place, and was everywhere received and treated with much respect.

In the city of Dresden I spent over two weeks, and found some old friends, and formed many new acquaintances with Germans, Poles, Prussians and French, to whom I explained the fulfillment of prophecy and warned them of the soon coming of Christ. Two Polish gentlemen from the Grand Duchy of Posen, of high education, professors, were especially interested. They seemed convinced that I spoke to them the truths of the Bible, and promised to continue their examination of them, and proclaim them as they had opportunity. I conversed much with an intelligent young Prussian nobleman, who has just finished his collegiate education, and is traveling to learn languages and western civilization, and proposes to spend the winter in the United States. He told me that there was not one of the students in St. Petersburg, Moscow and Kiew, who believed in any other God but nature; and that sensuality is all the divinity they know. His disclosures of the state of society in Russia were awful. I asked him to read some parts of the prophecy of Daniel and the New Testament. He seemed struck with what he read, but said: "I am unable yet to judge, as I have never before read it, or any part of the Bible." In speaking of Russia and Poland politically, he said: "The Russian people are not the enemies of Poland, but the Emperor and officers of the army, aided by the Professors, incited the Polish youth to insurrection, and purposely prolonged it, when they might have crushed it in a month, in order to plunder and destroy the Polish nation entirely." Another Prussian gentleman informed me that once in his presence a Russian citizen remarked that it was very unwise to treat the Polish people thus—that sooner or later other nations would help them to defend their cause. An officer of the army answered: "We feel ourselves so strong that we have no fear to go against the world, and also against God and his law."

You may read before this reaches you of the German "Singerbund," or great national musical festival, which was held in Dresden July 22d, 23d, 24th and 25th. This remarkable musical festival I had the privilege of attending. For the first time in history the Germans assembled from all parts of the world to unite their voices in sweet harmony. There were delegates present from China and other parts of Asia, from Africa, from different parts of Europe and America, with the flags of the different nations to which they belong. 25,000 voices sang in concert in a new temple erected for this special purpose, and such a rich flood of music! The procession, over three hours in length, passed through the principal streets of the city, each delegation with its flag. I saw several from the United States. It was very beautiful and imposing indeed; but permit me, dear brethren, to make an observation on the subject. If such a company could assemble from different parts of the world as representatives who are waiting for the fifth and everlasting kingdom, I should rejoice—should shout aloud with joy. But I look upon such large assemblies as this as upon the assemblage of birds in autumn for their departure to warmer climes: by instinct they know the season. So at present these grand assemblages of the nations seem to me to betoken the time of departure, or that the closing season of time is at hand. But I trust we shall soon be in the procession, not of 25,000, but 144,000, of all nations, tongues and languages, who shall sing with spiritual voices to God, and make melody of which we cannot now conceive. May the Lord help us to be there.

In the little city of Pratibor, near the frontier of Cracow, where I waited four days for my brother, I visited one day the depot, which was filled with people who were waiting for the cars. Two intelligent Prussian ladies, from Berlin, were selling Bibles and tracts. I entered into conversation with them, and asked them if they were true christians, followers of Jesus. They said they believed they were. I then asked them if they knew our Master was soon coming. They said they knew nothing of it. I then talked over two hours, being listened to with much attention by all present, Prussian officers included. The subject was new to all, and the ladies desired more light upon it. They sold many Bibles and tracts that day. May the blessing of God attend the word spoken.

I used most of the time while riding in the cars in speaking to the passengers on the solemn truths to which my life is devoted, relating to the fifth and everlasting kingdom, usually hanging up the prophetical chart, which was new to all. I was listened to with respectful attention, and many seemed very solemn. Several asked me for a copy of the chart and tracts, but unfortunately I had none to give them.

From Lauzanne to Newfchatel (in Switzerland), I found a great field of labor, and by the grace of God I purpose, after visiting all these valleys, to spend the winter there, and do what I can to publish the everlasting gospel. I was happy on returning home with my brother to find my family in good health, and also to find a letter from my dear Bro. Jones. He says:—"Soon after my arrival in Leghorn, I became acquainted with a young minister, a great smoker. He said he tried for a week to break himself of the habit of smoking, but it was too strong for him; he could not resist the temptation any longer. All my labor with him was for naught."

I would here remark that Bro. Jones has also been a great smoker; but two days before his baptism he conquered that filthy habit and ranged himself with those who strive to overcome all that increases our natural tendency to the animal. Bro. Jones says further:—"The people with whom I board think I have very strange ideas upon religion, and asked me if I did not get them from the American preacher at St. Jean. I told them I had learned of you, and believed you a gentleman and a christian. I have spoken with the Scotch minister, D. D., on different subjects of Bible truth, but found but little sympathy with our views."

I feel rejoiced that Bro. Jones, though young in the faith, is trying to do what he can to spread the light in the thick darkness by which he is surrounded. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for this dear brother, who I believe to be truly worthy of our confidence.

With much respect and affection, I am your fellow-laborer, M. B. CZECHOWSKI.

CHRONOLOGY.—No. 9.

(Concluded.)

In the former numbers we have endeavored to produce and arrange the well-established facts of reliable historians, that give light on the time of our Lord's birth, the length of his earthly ministry, and the date of his death. We aim not to establish any theory of our own, of prophetic interpretation, but to show the defects of systems that have disappointed us in the past. If the advocates of any present theory of Daniel's "seventy weeks" feel obliged to be our opponents in the conclusions we have drawn from the pages of Scripture and history, I trust they will see that their arguments have not been misrepresented, and that no reflection has been made unfavorable to their intelligence or piety. We have embraced "time theories" in times past, and in two instances were cast down very low, as if God's word had failed. We think we have a right to utter our convictions on this subject, not for the purpose of opposing the Bible doctrine of prophetic time, but to protest against the formation of a theory of definite time, by an application of the historian's testimony, in such a manner as to make him contradict the whole tenor of his pages.

Again we behold the preachers of prophetic time; some declaring that the prophetic numbers have ended, and that they are divinely authorized to call the people of God to a peculiar position in the new dispensation which has succeeded. Others are following the oft-exploded plan of making the "seventy weeks" end seven years after the crucifixion, and professing to prove that Jesus died many years later than any point that has been assigned for that event by christian historians, either ancient or modern. And yet another presents an argument to show that the seventy weeks are an independent prophetic number, ending at the destruction of Jerusalem. The seven years of that war are understood to be the fulfillment of Dan. 9: 27, and was the confirmation of the curse announced on Mount Ebal, Deut. 27: 13; 28: 25. The "weeks" of Dan. 9: 25, 26, are shown to refer to the birth and death of our Savior.

I feel unwilling that either the piety or learning of any man shall be my foundation of faith in definite time for the future. The Lord will give me a divine conviction of all that he wills I should believe and testify. Heb. 11: 1. I believe I possess such an evidence concerning our Savior's near approach, as I view the "signs" that are unmistakable as the budding fig tree's indication of summer. As far as I understand the exposition of Bro. Thurman, it commends itself to my judgment more than any other. If it is of the Lord, I hope to feel the full assurance of it by his Holy Spirit.

If Josephus is truthful, I feel assured of the following things, viz:—

"Messiah the Prince" was manifested in the flesh of humanity prior to B. C. 4.

Messiah's earthly ministry did not exceed four years.

Messiah was "cut off" by crucifixion in A. D. 30 of the present vulgar era.

Any theory that denies these propositions I esteem to be no better than a reed shaken with the wind.

I close as I began, uttering implicit confidence in my Jewish historian. I believe God raised him up, and protected him, that he might record the fulfillment of the curse of Mt. Ebal on that nation that rejected the warning of holy prophets, and murdered his well-beloved Son.

The work of Dr. Jarvis also looks to me like a special appointment of Providence, that the church, in this day, might have light on the times of the Lord's birth and death, which have such a direct bearing on the ending of prophetic periods. If I am rightly informed, it was the Dr.'s intention to write a church history, but he died when he had finished his book of chronology. Perhaps such a satisfactory work on the subject of which it treats never was written in any other age. It bears intrinsic evidence of being the labor of his own hands and brain, with the blessing of God upon him, and not a mere echo of another chronologist. He has gathered fragments of truth from every quarter. It is but a few years since the book was written. Does it not look as if the Lord's hand specially directed it?

Dear brethren, we are on the eve of the great day of "reconstruction"; not such an one as worldly politicians are dreaming of, but the time of restitution foretold by all the holy prophets. The poor Africans of our land, who have been nominally released from bondage, are one of the signs of the times. Vain is the help of man! Vain are the temporal millennium prospects of the professed church, that ignores the declaration of the sure word of prophecy. The suffering children of slavery will cease from hoping for help from the arm of man. "Ethiopia shall soon stretch out her hands to God." And God, whose ears are open to the cries of the innocent, will arise, and the enemies of righteousness shall be scattered. Soon shall a shout be heard that shall cause the governments of earth to fall like the walls of Jericho. "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever." O, thou blessed Savior, shall I, and the brethren and sisters who read these lines, be with thee, and forever behold thy glory?

"To spend eternity
In God's unclouded light,
Beholding and resembling Thee,
From sorrow, sin, and frailty free,
O! too transporting sight!
Prospect too fair
For flesh to bear!
Haste, haste, my Lord, and soon transport me there."

THE GIFT OF SPEECH.

"The tongue is a fire, a world of iniquity, . . . and setteth on fire the course of nature."—JAMES 3: 6.

The gift of speech, like all other powers we possess, was given us by our Creator for wise and good purposes, for the glory of God, for our enjoyment and the welfare of community. But the speech and conversation of man has been greatly abused by using jovial and profane words; words that are lascivious and licentious. Such words should never be spoken, neither should they be countenanced in any society. Our conversation should be carried on in a godly and friendly manner in all our intercourse with each other. This is our reasonable duty; and it should be our daily delight to talk upon holy things, which are for the glory of God, and for the best good of our fellow men. And thus our conversation should be cheerful, and guided by the dictates of truth and love; and more especially if we would enjoy that happiness for which the organ of speech was designed.

Human happiness has no perfect joy, nor security, nor loveliness in our conversation, unless we speak that which is for the glory of God and the welfare of those with whom we converse. Therefore, let us see that our conversation is guided and strengthened by real piety and religious liberty, and that we are sincere in all our conversation, and upright in all our professions.

It is not enough, dear christian, that we cherish that faith which once was delivered to the saints, but we should mould our lives after the pattern which this faith furnishes us. In all our thoughts, words and works, we should be governed by the holy dictates of the gospel of Christ. The great Author of our being has ordered it so, that we cannot find any lasting comfort or happiness short of a well ordered life and a godly conversation. In a godly conversation we find a great blessing, for love will then flow genially, and so fervently as to animate the soul with intrinsic joy and praise to Him who has given us such gifts, wherewith we can converse with each other, and tell of the wonderful blessings that flow from God's bountiful hand.

Surely, a godly conversation will lead the mind to contemplate "true and undefiled religion." And when this religion is well understood and practised, it will cause the soul to rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory. For surely there can be nothing so well calculated to impart a feeling of satisfaction to the soul, and a lasting comfort to the mind of man, as a belief in and practice of pure and undefiled religion. Give religion a place at the helm of our actions, and she will surely guide our frail bark over the raging billows and quicksands of sin, and at our journey's end land us unharmed in the haven of eternal rest, where storms and tempests shall never rise to mar our happiness. Yea, where the soul's calm sunshine endureth forever.

True religion! how well adapted to our varied wants, yet how lightly it is appreciated by the majority of mankind. Would they lay out but one-half of the zeal they now exhibit for the promotion of their man-made creeds in a false theology, which dishonors God and degrades man, and use the same for the extension of the mild and life-giving doctrine of the Prince of Peace—what a mighty change—what a revolution should we witness in the social condition of man. The now uncultivated wastes of the wilderness would soon be made to bud and blossom as the rose; and the vineyard of our blessed Lord would extend and flourish, even to the utmost ends of the earth. Oh, how long shall the human mind be confined in galling shackles by the blighting influence of error! May the time soon come when error shall be no more—when superstition shall be done away—when the gospel of Jesus Christ shall shed its brightning influence over the whole moral world. May its truths be sent forth into all the earth, and their fire electrify and enlighten every mind, heal and console every heart, enlighten the darkest ignorance, dispel the blackest superstition, and raise the mind to that station for which it was designed.

Dearly beloved, I have spoken thus far upon the gift of speech, and the practical part of the christian religion. But there must be a beginning to substantiate them, if we would wish to carry them out for the glory of God and our own happiness. In the first place, in order to do this, we should commune with our own hearts, and see what manner of spirit we are of. If we have an evil spirit within, we should cast it out. But if we find within us a good spirit, retain it, and walk by its dictates. Self-examination will not only enable man to discover his own weakness, and that he is going the downward road, but will enable him to avoid the quicksands of temptation, which are leading him towards the gulf of misery. If he is wise it will cause him to retrace his steps, and take the straight and narrow path that leads to everlasting life.

Let us examine ourselves faithfully, that we may not fall into those errors that destroy our peace. Let us be found among the wise—those who are walking cautiously, steadfastly and godly in the path of righteousness, and God will bless our efforts, and finally save us in his glorious kingdom, where peace and happiness shall ever reign.

"Blest is the man who shuns the place
Where sinners love to meet;
Who fears to tread their wicked ways,
And hates the scoffer's seat."

Fisherville, N. H. J. ELKINS.

HAPPINESS.

It cannot be found in this life. I never saw any one who ever found it. I know a man who says "all the comfort he takes is in cock-fighting!" Some take comfort in getting drunk; some in gambling; some in making money; some in spending it. Some seem to take most comfort in making others uncomfortable, in tantalizing their feelings, sneering at their troubles, scolding and sputtering continually at every little straw that the wind blows across their path, and stopping to have a fight with, or to make wry faces to every little snarling cur that snaps and yelps across the way. Now what is the use of making so much fuss about what can't be helped? You can't make folks see through your glasses—you can't see through theirs. You can't grind their noses on your grind-stone. They have rights as well as you, and you have faults as well as they. They can see in you as much, perhaps, as you see in them.

Suppose you are poor, and things don't go as you wish. You are not alone. You feel dissatisfied, and you always will. Said a great ruler of the East: "Fifty years have I reigned. Riches, honors, all that men desired have been lavished upon me by Heaven. In this long space of apparent felicity, I have calculated the number of days in which I have been really happy; they amount to fourteen." Now if this great man, who had all he desired seemingly, only could count fourteen happy days in fifty years' time, why do you fret and make everybody around you miserable? What if you have not made as much money as you wish? "The richest man has no definite idea of a fortune, and is more eager to double his million, than he was to turn his first dollar."

What is the use to worry at every little thing that turns up? Suppose somebody cheats you out of some money? Do not act as if it was the only god you ever heard of or cared for, and so bring the charge true against you as it is against many, viz., that "mammon has become our national saint, and to him we must bow the head and bend the knee. This idol of our hearts so absorbs our worship, that there is no time to spare for other reverence."

Money is only fit to use to do good with. If God prospers others more than you, they are answerable to him for the use they make of that prosperity. It is none of your business, and you have no right to envy them. If he prospers you, it is your duty to use what is entrusted to your care for his glory. You have no right to consider yourself any better on that account, or to turn up the scornful lip at others less favored in this respect. God is no respecter of persons. He is not partial. He is just, and to him we all must answer personally. So let us beware how we live, what we say and do, and seek for lasting happiness in the future life "by patient continuance in well doing."

J. N. BERRY.

LOVE.

"If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar; for he that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen? And this commandment have we from him, that he who loveth God love his brother also."—1 JOHN 4: 20, 21.

"He that saith he is in the light, and hateth his brother, is in darkness even until now. He that loveth his brother abideth in the light, and there is no occasion of stumbling in him. But he that hateth his brother is in darkness, and walketh in darkness, and knoweth not whither he goeth, because that darkness hath blinded his eyes."—1 JOHN: 2-11.

As the beloved disciple wrote this plain language by inspiration, there can be no possibility of being saved when Jesus comes in his kingdom, unless we are made perfect in love. O that God by his Spirit would fasten this truth like a nail in a sure place, and indelibly impress upon our minds that unless we rid ourselves of all the works of the flesh, which are hatred, variance, etc., notwithstanding we may understand all doctrine, it will be said to us, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity."

Jesus says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." "Many will say to me in that day, Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? And then will I profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me, ye that work iniquity."

It seems this class Jesus is speaking of were ready to do great things for him, perhaps to get honor that comes from men, Pharisee-like, while at the same time they were neglecting little things equally as important, which the eye of God alone would behold. They could pray much, were professors, crying, Lord, Lord, who prophesy, cast out devils, do many wonderful works in his name; yet after all he will say, "I never knew you; depart from me." How disappointed will such be, after having done so much for Jesus, to hear it said, Ye are none of mine; depart.

Brethren and sisters, shall you and I be among them? We shall, unless we make very straight paths for our feet. Take God's word by which to square our lives, and hew off all the uneven places, as does the carpenter in his work, till we fetch our lives, as he does his timber, right up to the mark. May God help us so to do.

Let us not be like the bankrupt, afraid to look into our accounts, and neglect to do so because so much remains unsettled that we cannot pay it. Our Advocate stands ready, saying, Come to my terms, and I will cancel all. Come unto me, and all that long account shall be forgiven. He is ready, not only to forgive us our sins, but to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. What amazing condescension!

Jesus says, "Ye have heard that it hath been said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy. But I say unto you, love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you." This is one of the commands of Jesus. How are we going to disobey this command and be held guiltless? If we keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, we are guilty of all, or are held by the law as criminals, guilty in the sight of God, and consequently among those to whom it will be said, Depart. Paul says, "Though I speak with the tongues of men and of angels, and have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal." What a lack of charity, or love, do we oftentimes see manifest in those who claim to believe Jesus is soon coming to reward us according to the deeds done in the body. If, perchance, a brother sees a little differently on some minor points of doctrine, not essential to his salvation, he is ready to pounce upon him like a vulture upon its prey. Such a bitterness we see manifest, when the word of God says, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be done away from among you, with all malice, and be ye kind one to another, tender hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you." The devil sees it just as effectually serve his purpose to make us a little too zealous, overreach the mark, and indulge in hatred, being stumbling blocks, thereby making infidels, as in any other way. Let us not be ignorant of his devices, but leave no unguarded spot, keeping the heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life.

The grace of God has a softening influence, subduing us, giving us a meek and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of God of great price. Entire consecration does the work for us. Our wills have to be put on the altar, also, with every thing else. Sister, is that will of yours subdued, so that you can say, Not my will? Let us be determined to have our own way in one thing—to serve the Lord, by the assistance of his grace, if the devil and all his force are combined against us. I feel the necessity of having the heart firmly fixed in these last days, when the devil has come down in great wrath, knowing his time is short. A few faint desires will not do in these perilous times. We must be well freighted with grace, or we shall be wrecked.

There is great danger of being wrecked while we indulge in fretting because of evil doers; but let us remember it is written, "Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." Let us make up our minds to endure hardship as good soldiers, looking all the time to Jesus, instead of looking to the failings of others. It is the only way to stand amid these perils. But God will keep us, if we cling to him. We need a deep, thorough work. Let us gird on the armor still more closely. A few more battles and victory is ours. How cheering the prospect. Almost home. By the grace of God, I expect to be among those who come up out of great tribulation, having washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. CHARLOTTE CASE.

MISSIONARY SCENES.

Tuesday, Sept. 5th. Left home this morning at half past seven for the mission field in the "five points" of Philadelphia. On the way called on two brethren, and had a few minutes conversation upon things pertaining to "the kingdom of God." Felt strengthened for the labors of the day. First, called at our headquarters in the kitchen, up in the alley on Gaskill St., which is now named Salvation Court, where precious souls are made immortal by faith in Jesus' blood. Met a few of the "lambs of the flock," who are pressing forward to the Celestial city. Next, visited a large number of S. School children and their parents.

BEDFORD STREET. Visited Sr.——, who lives on Nugent's Court. Three weeks ago she had no hope in Christ, but to-day is rejoicing in the Holy Spirit. Surrounded by all that is vile and loathsome, living in a single room that is low, small, dark, dirty, damp, and nearly destitute of furniture, dressed in rags herself, a bed-tick over her shoulders to keep her warm, a victim of consumption, life fast ebbing away, our sister amid all these untoward circumstances has obtained the pearl of great price. Sang some songs of praise, and offered prayer to "the widow's God and the Father of the fatherless," spoke a few words of comfort, and left that poor black woman to visit other sick ones.

Black Horse Alley comes next. Passing through this alley, went into a crazy building, up dark stairways, which were worn full of holes, to the garret. In that wretched garret, so low I could stand up straight at the ridge of the roof only, I found a young mulatto woman sick, in consumption. There was no bed, no stove, no furniture, and no comforts of any kind in that wretched place. That poor young woman was lying upon the floor, with a carpet bag for a pillow. How sad the scene. Saddest of all, this intelligent woman, for such she was, knew not of the love of Jesus. I presented to her the love of God in the gift of his dear Son. I told her that she was perishing, and that Jesus wanted to save her. The tears began to flow, the heart began to soften, and when I called upon the name of our precious Savior, the Lord came into that lonely garret to that lost one, and she went to Jesus' feet. Left her there. Conversed with other occupants of the house in different rooms on my way down stairs. Some were intoxicated, and were swearing terribly. Reproved them kindly, when they ceased their cursing and listened to the story of the cross. One white woman, nearly destitute of clothing, informed me that she had been intoxicated, and while in that state had been robbed of nearly all her clothing. A common occurrence in these parts.

Passed up Bedford Street to Seventh. At the corner of the two streets, upon the sidewalk, lay a man and two women, bareheaded, barearmed, and barefooted, asleep and beastly intoxicated. Standing near by were many others with cut faces and swollen heads, whose language was the language of hell. These persons were Irish Catholics.

SEVENTH STREET.—The first thing that attracted my attention was a fight in a rum-shop between two drunken colored women. One of the party had a stave not less than seven feet long, four inches wide, and an inch thick, with which she beat her enemy, who fell backwards out of the store to the sidewalk, where she rolled into the gutter. She then got up, and clinched her assailant, while at the same time blood was flowing from her face and mouth. At last they were separated. Every day there are more or less of these street fights, and sometimes policemen get severely handled while trying to quell the disturbances.

ST. MARY'S STREET.—Passing through Seventh went into St. Mary's Street, which is one of the notorious sections of the city. Called at "blind Susan's home. Found her rejoicing in the Lord. Last winter she was one of the vile characters of Bedford street. Early last spring she gave her heart to the Lord, and has retained her integrity from that day to this. How great the triumphs of the grace of God. Others in the same neighborhood are rejoicing in the Lord, who were once living in the most abandoned manner.

Thus I labored throughout the forenoon. I do not present this portion of my journal as containing more of interest than that of any other day, for the scenes I have described are of every day occurrence, and greatly multiplied at times. I merely write for the encouragement of God's children, that they may rejoice with me in the triumphs of the cross.

Yours in Christ, F. H. BURBANK.

EVIL SPEAKING.

This is a vice almost universal, even among those who profess godliness. It meets you every where. You cannot be in the company of even those considered good people long, without hearing something to the prejudice of some absent brother or sister. Some report or insinuation, or suspicion is breathed into your ear calculated to shake your confidence in some follower of Jesus. A reform in this matter is loudly demanded. The command is, "Speak not evil one of another, brethren." If you have hitherto disregarded this command, ask for pardon and commence a reformation from this hour. The man who is on his way to heaven is described as "He that taketh not up a report against his neighbor." No matter under whose patronage he finds the report going about, he does not take it up, he lets it die, as all false and slanderous reports will when let alone.

A brother called at our house whom we had long known as an uncompromising follower of Jesus. We had heard that some differences had arisen between him and the pastor and some of the brethren of the church to which he belonged, and rumor said he had withdrawn from the church. We inquired "How the preacher was getting along." He replied "First rate, the Lord is with him, and he is doing a good work." "How are brothers A. and B. doing?" "Never better." And so he had a good word, without any insinuations, for every one of whom he spoke. I said that brother might go on professing holiness and I would stand by him. With such a person you feel safe. He will not betray you. There is no danger that he will, after sharing your hospitalities, and professing for you the strongest friendship, go away and report untrue and unkind things to your injury. "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man and able also to bridle the whole body."—Earnest Christian.

DON'T KILL THE BIRDS.

Don't kill the birds—the little birds
That sing about your door,
Soon as the joyous spring has come,
And chilling storms are o'er.
The little birds, how sweet they sing!
O! let them joyous live;
And never seek to take the life
That you can never give.

Don't kill the birds—the pretty birds
That play among the trees:
'T would make the earth a cheerless place,
Should we dispense with these.
The little birds—how fond they play!
Do not disturb their sport;
But let them warble forth their songs
Till winter cuts them short.

Don't kill the birds—the happy birds
That bless the field and grove;
So innocent to look upon,
They claim our warmest love.
The happy birds, the tuneful birds,
How pleasant 'tis to see!
No spot can be a cheerless place
Where'er their presence be.

THE BOOT ON THE WRONG FOOT.

Jem Hasty had many good traits of character. He was generous when he happened to have the means, obliging and kind upon impulse; but like his name, he was hasty. He could not stop to see a thing fully, to do a thing thoroughly, and seldom to speak of a thing accurately. But he was always considering these little things as too small, and "of no consequence." The consequence, of course, was, that he was always getting into trouble himself, and putting others to trouble. It was a small affair to be particular about buttoning his shirt collar; and so, in the midst of company, or in church, his collar must start up and come off, and then he would jerk it on again with so much strength as to tear off the button. He had his garden so planted and subdued one year that he began to take pride in it; but one evening he hurried through the gate, aware that he had not latched it; but it was a small affair, and "of no consequence." The result was, the next morning he found some strange hogs in the garden, and they had rooted up everything, even the choicest flowers. If he was going a journey, ten to one he would get packed and leave out of his carpet-bag the most important thing which he would need. Many a time the poor horse went supperless, and the pig stood calling for food, just because Jem considered such things "of no consequence."

But at last Jem received a lesson which really did make an impression on him. He was to go to the great city to enter a large mercantile house. But as he would be the youngest clerk, he knew he must be on his feet all day, and run and do a multitude of errands. His trunk was sent down to the depot the night before, and he was to get up early and walk down to take the cars. As he took off his boots, he set them where he knew he could find them, even in the dark. But in setting them up, he noticed that he put the right boot where the left ought to be. "No matter, thought he, "I shall remember it in the morning, and can change them when I put them on. It's of no consequence." So he lay and thought how he would enjoy himself in the great city, where there are omnibuses and carts, and jams and crowds of men, and a world of business, and he would one day come back a great, rich merchant, and bring father and mother and the sisters such presents as would astonish them. By the time he got through with these waking dreams his candle, which he ought to have blown out, was all burned down. "No matter," said he, "I can dress myself just as well in the dark."

When the morning came it was cold and dark, and the ground was frozen. He overslept, and at the call of his father had to spring from the bed and hasten to the cars, or he would be too late. Up he sprang, and dressed himself in almost no time. His boots seemed to go on hard, but on they went. He started, and walked and ran over the rough frozen ground, and actually reached the platform barely in season to get into the cars. But how he had run and toiled! And now he began to feel that his boots hurt him. His feet were sore, and they ached, and all at once it flashed upon him that, in consequence of his haste and carelessness, he had got the wrong boot on the wrong leg! But his feet were wedged in, and in the cars, without a bootjack, he found it impossible to get them off. All day he lived in agony, and when he reached the city his feet were blistered, and corns were started, and troubles for years to come were laid up for him. He had no time to rest and heal his poor, abused feet, and for a very long time he suffered for that which he thought "of no consequence." But it was a good lesson for poor Jem. He began to see that little things which seem "of no consequence" at the time, may have great results in the future, and it made him a cautious, careful man, after long years of discipline.

Now, we all have some weakness—some spot at which we are very likely to fail. It is one thing in one man, and another thing in another. What shall we do to prevent the consequences of these frailties? I answer, do three things:—

1. Set a double watch over the easily-besetting sin every day and every hour.
2. Strive very hard to recover, if you trip.
3. Ask your heavenly Father to help you, and to keep you. It belongs to children to attend to this, for many a child feels like Jem Hasty, that it is "of no consequence," when in fact the results may be terrible, even for years to come. Many a character is ruined, and the hopes of all his friends are crushed by no greater mistake than putting the boot on the wrong leg!—Rev. John Todd, D. D.

A THORN IN THE PILLOW.

Walter could not sleep. The curtain was drawn aside from the window, and through the opening he could see the stars,—a pleasant sight at other times, but now they all seemed to look sadly down on him. He heard the sound of the waterfall up by the old mill, and though he often said its murmuring was like music, and helped him to go to sleep every night, yet now it disturbed him: it was like the voices of people talking low together, and about him, too; and he wished he could stop it.

He turned his pillow over, and tried to arrange the quilt better; but his kind mother had done everything that could be done to make her boy's bed comfortable before she left him for the night, and all the changes he made brought no rest. He had never been so uneasy on that bed.

What was the matter with Walter? There was a little thorn in his pillow—not just like those you see on thorn bushes, but a kind which gives one even more pain than they can. And how came it there? Perhaps we shall learn from Walter. He heard the pleasant voices of the family in the parlor below. "I ought to tell mother," he thought; "but I don't want to."

The waterfall kept on murmuring, and he could almost hear himself accused of something in the sound. The stars looked in at the window more sadly than before. Walter thought again, "I ought to tell her, and I will!"

He got up from his bed, went gently down the stairs, and tapping at the parlor door, called for his mother. She came, wondering what brought her boy there when she had supposed he was sleeping quietly. At his request she went back with him, and Walter confessed; "I promised you I wouldn't take any more fruit this morning, mother; but after you left the table, I did take a bunch of grapes and three apples, and hid them in my box in the nursery, and there they are now. I'm sorry, mother, and I want you to forgive me. I couldn't go to sleep, because I had disobeyed you, and told a lie too."

This was the thorn. The grapes and apples—disobedience and falsehood—had set it in his pillow. As his mother laid her hand lovingly upon his head after this confession, and told him she freely forgave him, and that she was glad her son had not concealed this wrong-doing from her, the tears of penitence began to fall. Walter knew he had sinned against another dear Friend of children, and kneeling by his mother he asked forgiveness of Jesus. He asked that Friend evermore to be his guide, and help him to overcome whenever tempted. His mother snugly tucked him into bed once more. The stars twinkled brightly. The waterfall sang its good night song, and Walter slept—for the little thorn was gone out of his pillow.

Did any of you ever have such thorns in your pillow? I am afraid so. That which seems a very small sin is apt to plant them; and disobedience to dear parents, and unkind words, have perhaps set more thorns in little children's pillows than anything else. It may be that some are growing in your pillow to-day. Think a moment. If any are there, try to get them out now. Don't wait, as Walter did, till you lay your head down on them to night.—The Quiver.

A PRINTER.—What a curious being a printer is. He stands when he sets, and sets when he stands, and when he wishes to set with ease he always stands erect. It is, however, the nature of the case which causes him to stand.

I'VE SEEN THEM FADE!

I've seen them fade! the things of earth,
How soon they pass away!
Like morning flowers which fold their leaves,
And droop ere close of day.

The loved of earth! they pass away,
Tie after tie is riven;
O God! my aching heart seeks rest,
Sweet rest, in Jesus given.

The faithful ones! where are they now,
Who love to meet so well,
And talk of Jesus' dying love,
And of God's goodness tell?

Ah! where are they? Echo alone
Gives back the answering—where?
Save here and there a lonely one,
Sad and oppressed with care.

Those silent walls, that vacant sound,
How sad the tale they tell,
Where oft was raised the fervent prayer,
And music sweet did swell.

Zion doth mourn; ah! well she may,
For desolate her feasts;
Few prize thy wondrous love, O God!
Thy goodness infinite!

Shepherd of Israel, thou art near
The weakest of thy fold;
Thine ears are open to their cries,
Thou wilt their steps uphold.

Take courage, then, ye anxious ones,
Nor faint, nor be dismayed;
God is your refuge and your strength,
And evermore thine aid.

THE GREAT CONCERN.

"What shall I do to be saved?" is a momentous question. Though least cherished, it is the great question of life, towering heaven-high above all others. May God help us to consider it well.

To be saved relates principally to the future world. The jailer, who originally propounded the question, referred to his eternal well-being, and not to his temporal safety. The young man who came to Christ inquired expressly what good thing he should do that he might have "eternal life." The dying thief prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom." Indeed, the Scriptures generally sustain the fact that there will be a day of reckoning at some future period, when we shall all be justified or condemned, according as our works shall have been.

The great question then is, what shall we do that we may meet that day in peace, and be saved in the kingdom? The answer of the Savior to the young man was, "Keep the commandments." Paul replied to the inquiring jailer, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Peter commanded the awakened multitudes, on the day of Pentecost, to "repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ." He afterwards exhorted the people in these words, "Repent and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out." Christ also makes it necessary that we be "converted and become as little children;" that we be "born again." Both he and his apostles teach, too, that we must "confess our sins," pray for ourselves, and for one another, and not merely say, "Lord, Lord," but "do the will of our Father, which is in heaven."

The points to be gained are, first, forgiveness of our sins. It is a foundation axiom in religion, that we have all sinned, not seminally in Adam only, but personally and wickedly. Now in all good governments, sin must be either pardoned or punished. It will not do to let the law be trampled in the dust with impunity. Offences must be noticed and met in some way that shall be honorable to the government and equitable to the subject. God has therefore provided for the pardon of sinners, so that he can be just and yet the justifier of such as properly repent and believe in his son Jesus Christ. Therefore we are urged to those duties that our "sins may be blotted out," and that we may stand accepted before God. Thus our sins are cancelled, so that if we do our duty in future there will be nothing against us in the day of judgment. We shall stand as clear from condemnation as though we had never sinned, having been fully forgiven by the great Lawgiver and Judge himself.

Now mark the wisdom of the plan. The law required that the sinner should die. Christ interposed for his release, conceded the justice of the sentence, and asks for pity; and, that the law might not be dishonored, but rather magnified by the extension of mercy, submitted to the death on the cross. By this means he procured for the sinner an offer of pardon and salvation, on the condition that he repent, humbling himself in the dust, confessing his sins, and turning away from them to do that which is lawful and right; and that he believe not in the merit of his own works or sufferings, but in the atonement and merit of the blessed Savior. Thus the plan secures the honor of the law and of the government; humbles the sinner, and saves him from merited punishment in a way to improve his character and turn his heart to God in gratitude and love. And it provides still further, that if any man sin after that he has obtained forgiveness, "we have an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous," through whom we may again be restored to the divine favor.

Another point to be secured is holiness of character, or harmony with God. "Ye must be born again" is an abiding truth; for, said Jesus, "except ye be converted and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Outward morality is not enough; nor is orthodoxy in sentiment, though accompanied with amiability of disposition. There is a deeper, purer work necessary; a work of the Holy Spirit, without which no man can see the Lord. The necessity for it lies in the perversity of the human heart, and the purity of the heavenly state. The heart is corrupted. It is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked." Its every imagination is evil, producing evil thoughts and desires. It is "enmity against God," opposed to his holy and heavenly nature, to his government and service, and is in love and fellowship with that which he hates.

There is, therefore, no element of affinity between the two, and of course there could be no happiness for the sinner in the presence of God. Hence the necessity of a change of mind in order to his dwelling with God in peace. Besides, heaven is a holy place, its inhabitants are holy,—also, its duties and pleasures. There is nothing congenial to the carnal mind in all its domains. Nothing in which it can be interested. Heaven is, therefore, no agreeable place for those who have nothing heavenly in their dispositions. The necessity for a change in the sinner's mind and heart, in order to the enjoyment of so high a destiny, is, therefore, undeniable. Approaching the judgment as he now is, he cannot go to heaven because guilty and condemned; he would not go if he could, because he is averse to its nature and economy. The change, then, which the impenitent need, is, first, legal blotting out of the handwriting against them, and changing their relations from that of condemned to pardoned sinners; secondly, it is moral and spiritual, renewing the heart and changing the whole current of the affections from the world to God, and from sin to holiness. The first places us in a state of acceptance with God, being no longer condemned; the last assimilates us to his character,—in other words, creates us anew in Christ Jesus, in the image of God. The former saves us from fear, the latter inflames us with love; and, both the legal and spiritual obstacles to our salvation being thus happily removed, we "rejoice in the hope of the glory of God." Having the Spirit to witness with our spirits that we are the children of God, we know that we are heirs of God, heirs to an inheritance that is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away, reserved in heaven for us; and our "hope maketh not ashamed, because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, which is given un to us."

This change, it will be perceived, is radical, reaching deep into the heart, and producing a state of feeling and a prospect altogether new. It is not in work only, but in power, and in much assurance. Love is now not a mere theoretic principle, but a living, burning, controling emotion. It fixes the heart on God, and his real people, with an intensity of affection which cannot be mistaken. There is joy, too, which the world knoweth not; and "peace like a river." O, how heavenly! how divine! and a hope,—not the poor, lifeless manufacture of human sophistry, invented for the comfort of timid sinners,—which is like "an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, entering into that within the veil." How glorious! how satisfactory! While the sinner's hope emboldens him to sin on, because God is good, or because he fancies there is no hell, "he that hath this hope in him purifieth him self even as he is pure." It inspires him to shun everyevil way, and to cleave closer and closer to the cross.

This change begets a desire that others, also, may become the "partakers of like precious faith." It leads its subjects out into the world, preaching, or exhorting and praying, as the Lord may direct, and his providence permit. But, inspired by this new life, the heart prompts us to do good; it sighs to bless man, as the true mother longs for the well-being of her children. The love of Christ "constrains" us, said the apostle. It led him to wish himself accursed for the sake of his brethren after the flesh. He was willing to make great sacrifices, if he could only save his countrymen. He "travailed in birth" for the Galatians till Christ was formed in them. He labored "night and day with tears," and exposed himself to dangers and deaths for the good of others, and rejoiced that he was accounted worthy of such honor.

This work is, therefore, something more than a purpose—more than a practice; it is a new life, affiliating the heart to God, to his people, to his work and worship. But this is not the end of the matter. Having been thus "born again," and "tasted that the Lord is gracious," it remains for you to go on unto perfection. All evangelical christians agree that there are higher attainments to be sought. A real convert is only a child at best. He is required to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth," that he may become a man. "Henceforth," says St. Paul, "be no more children tossed to and fro, but speaking the truth in love, grow up into him in all things, which is the head, even Christ." You are expected to increase in knowledge and faith, and love, and wisdom, and patience; and, indeed, in all the christian graces which enter into the composition of a finished "man in Christ Jesus."

Too many who have been made partakers of this heavenly experience die in infancy, while not a few fall under delusions that neutralize their energies, and send them halting to the grave. All these evils are to be resisted. If you will avoid them you must think for yourself, not captiously, not to find faults in standard principles, nor to magnify little apparent absurdities into fundamental objections; but think soberly, prayerfully, cautiously, looking first to maintain your standing with God, and to do good. Above all things keep humble, simple, honest. "Be filled with the Spirit." This is heaven's command. For your future advisers select those who live near the cross. Others are blind and can do you no good. Though they may be old professors, they will lead you in paths of darkness and carnal security. Consult the living and not the dead, though he be but a child. Pray much. Secret prayer is the medium of communication with God. "Enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret, and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly.

"Sweet is the prayer whose holy stream
In earnest pleading flows;
Devotion dwells upon the theme,
And warm and warmer glows."

And may you be "like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season," whose leaf "shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper."

THE ARGUMENTUM AD HOMINEM.

There can be no objection to the use of this argument, when kept free from personalities or unmanly insinuations; or when used in defense of truth or justice. I wish to illustrate a strong case, when this mode of argument was used freely. It was in New York, in the winter of 1843, which only needs to be written to recall scenes of deep interest. The writer resided in that city the summer and autumn of 1844, and the winter following, and witnessed all the movements of the "tenth day of the seventh month" of that memorable Jewish year. But the winter first named witnessed scenes, if not so exciting, seldom surpassed by depth of feeling. Those days are not to be despised because the world could discover no good. Lessons were there learned never to be forgotten.

In the winter of '43, the theological professor of a western college was preaching in New York, to a church under the pastoral care of one of his model students. The church were not possessed of a church edifice, and held meetings in Niblo's old theatre. I heard the professor preach one of his peculiar sermons one evening, in which occurred this sentence: "Any one having made a choice, or formed an opinion in view of, or on a moral subject, could not sit down to read the Bible impartially on that subject." I may not have framed the sentence just as he did, but have embraced the idea. Every one, he said, would read the Bible with a prejudiced or biased mind, just in proportion to the strength of their choice of an opinion on any moral subject. I thought this was an important assertion, and resolved to test its truth by application of the argumentum ad hominem.

At the close of the service I had a pleasant interview with the professor, and agreed upon a meeting with him and the young parson the next afternoon, at their study. I took for my text the idea alluded to, and studied a sermon on it, to present to the elder and younger preachers at our appointed interview. I spent the most of the next day at the office of the "Midnight Cry"—a paper then in its glory—and amid comers and goers, of old associates in the reforms of that day. Never but once before had I witnessed such depth of religious feeling as was there manifested; and the instance alluded to was in the theological class room, presided over by the professor I am now speaking of. At that time, studies and recitations were suspended for days, and strong men prostrated for hours together.

At my appointed interview I was prompt to the minute. A few moments were spent in casual remarks about the religious excitements in the city at that time; and then I commenced with the Professor on the subject we had often conferred upon together when he was at home. Before commencing my contemplated sermon, I wished to draw distinctly before his mind the point I was at.

Speaking of the excitement caused by the views of Mr. Miller in that city at the time, and the rapid spread of those views in the vicinity of New York, I asked him if he had compared those views with the more popular theories so prevalent in community; to which he made no satisfactory reply. I then prepared to state a few of the distinctive features of the three most prominent theories of a Millennium.

I would first speak of the most popular theory, of which Daniel Whitby was the father. A believer in this is called a "Millenist." Whitby said himself that his theory was founded upon a new hypothesis. He owned it to be a departure from the views of the apostles and martyrs. In the theory and spirit of this view, our churches were born into—baptized into—and "have lived, moved, and had their being" in it. The main feature in this theory is a spiritual exposition of the language of prophecy—a millennium before the Lord comes, and a shadowy, indefinite heaven, leaving it almost a matter of indifference whether there be any resurrection or not. Since this theory of Daniel Whitby has been doctored a little by Moses Stuart, Congregational ministers in good and regular standing have published books in which the doctrine of the resurrection is ignored.

The next view I will instance is called the "millenarian." I will state it as I have its distinctive features from a circle of ministers and laymen of this city—the "Literalist"—published by another association in Philadelphia, and the standard works of English Millenarians. The association in New York has existed since the visit of Joseph Wolf, the converted Jew, to this country. I have attended their meeting in New York, and understand their views, I think. This class, as a whole, may not agree in all the particulars I shall state, but I have no fear of misrepresenting any very essential feature. They believe our Lord will come before the Millennium; that there will be two distinct aspects of our Lord's appearing represented by emblems diverse from each other. The strongest of these emblems represent our Lord as coming in the most public manner possible, and in a "time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation," nor ever will be hereafter.

The other class of emblems represent him as coming when the world is rapt in midnight darkness—coming secretly, like a thief in the night—suddenly and all pervading, like the flash of "lightning coming out of the east and shining unto the west." That at this silent coming he attends the wedding which the Father gives his Son. That he takes his bride into her heavenly mansion, where he has prepared for her a "chamber, in which she may hide herself until the storm be over past." That his stalwart soldiers—the martyrs and the strong living ones "who look for his appearing"—will take with him the "rod of iron," and help dash the wicked nations in pieces.

These Millenarians see no other way to harmonize all that the prophets and apostles have given on this great subject, but to allow as many distinctions and classifications as God's word has represented does harmonize all. I must cut this matter short, and abandon the chief object of our meeting. Mr. Miller's view does not allow of all these, and many other distinctions which I cannot name now. His great feature is, the coming of Christ before the Millennium, but does not allow that after this coming Jesus will re-organize the ten tribes of Israel; or that there will be any subjects of the kingdom in the flesh. His view makes very little, if any distinction in the order of the reservation of the righteous; but that all will be kings, and priests unto God, etc. I must hasten.

Now, Professor, how do you regard this matter?

"I have no opinion on the subject," he answers.

I was aware you formerly occupied that position, but hoped that amid all the present excitement on the subject you had thought better of the matter. Which of the futures I have so imperfectly drawn should you think the Bible lends the most support to?

"I have no choice in the matter."

There! my sermon falls to the ground! You furnished me a text last evening, and I had arranged a short sermon for this occasion with considerable care. You said a man who had a choice could not read the Bible impartially, and I was about to try and see if you had not chosen the popular view on the millennium, and that that choice stood in the way of your arriving at the truth.

It is a rare quality of mind for a man to be so exactly balanced on a point of so much importance, and would afford you unusual facilities for the acquisition of the truth, had you but the disposition to use that advantage. But you have now furnished me another text, and I must have the privilege of sermonizing a little. You clergymen must not monopolize all of that good thing. You must indulge the laymen a little. I have chosen for my subject "Political Economy." I know you have some opinion on that subject, for you have a Professor of Political Economy at your institution. And here I have a little private claim to present. That professor you obtained through my instrumentality. He was an especial friend of mine from early manhood. Having acquired a competency in this world's goods, and being an enthusiastic disciple of Adman Smith, he proposed to me to procure for him the appointment. I was successful, and at his first course of lectures he converted you all, professors and students. So you cannot ignore "Political Economy" at so easy a rate as you do that of prophecy. Now for my application; for the sermon must be short.

The American Bible Society, and the British and Foreign Society, expend vast amounts of money annually in the multiplicating of Bibles. Now I propose there be a system of greater economy adopted. A system which will not only save money, but extend the usefulness of those institutions almost incalculably. Here is a Bible (I took one in my hand). I will gather up about what would be a fair proportion of the prophetic parts of the Old and New Testament; and it would leave you only a tolerable sized pamphlet. That is all you need. Now this larger portion, which our theological professors know nothing about, nor care any thing about,—for they have no choice in the matter,—I say this large portion should be left out as useless; it cannot be of service to the heathen, or to the masses of the destitute in our own community, so long as our theological professors and teachers have no use for it.

It would require a mathematician of only small attainments to estimate the vast economy of this plan, and the additional extent of usefulness, if the forementioned societies will adopt this plan. You will observe, I have not taken into account the estimate God has placed upon his word, or the possible offence he may have already taken at the slight heretofore cast upon his neglected prophets. We are told he is a God jealous of his honor. I leave all that for him to settle, as his appointed day of receiving is near at hand. Says Bro. C——, "I have thought of that!" But seeing his Master was in a tight place, he turned the argumentum ad hominem upon me,—it was my turn now,—in the following manner:

"Are you not a non-resistant? And have not the Eastern non-resistants discredited the Bible?"

Well, this was rather a home thrust upon some of my early friends in the reforms of the day. My reply was, I could not be held responsible for the sins of my early associates. I sincerely regretted every liability that existed to that charge. My erring friends made a great mistake, for the want of due discrimination. They found the theology of the day opposed to every effort to lighten the burden of the poor, down-trodden bondmen. They should have discriminated between theology and the Bible. Some of them failed to do this; hence the error with which you charge them. I was enabled to make the necessary discrimination. I threw theology overboard, and saved the Bible unharmed.

But to the other charge, so far as it relates to myself personally, my reply is, I am a non-resistant."—I "have so learned Christ." He "like a sheep was dumb before his shearers." I have been to prison in defense of this doctrine, and hope I should, like Paul, be "ready not only to go to prison, but to death also," if brought to the test. I am aware it would require far more courage than to face the cannon's mouth. I should have the same grace of God to look to for strength which has been so precious in all other trials.

But, Bro. C——, there may come a change of circumstances ere long. You know we are only to "follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth." He has a short work to do under the emblematic character of the "Lion of the tribe of Judah." You may think that is "God's strange work," and probably it is; but it must and will be done. Jesus has promised some of his friends that they should aid him in that work. I should rejoice to be among that special few, and would lay aside the attributes of the Lamb so long as my Master did so, and seize a "rod of iron," and help "dash his enemies in pieces."

Bro. C—— rose from his seat, swung his arms, and exclaimed:

"If Christ is presented to us in those two aspects, I will not worship him."

The cool, sagacious "Master in Israel" was startled at the boldness of his disciple.

"Why, Brother C— ! Why, Brother C——! you go too far."

Let Brother C—— alone, I said; he is an honest man. Ninety-nine out of every hundred of our popular theologians, if brought to the test, would feel the same; although they lack the courage to give utterance to those feelings.

Such was the belief of this writer in 1843. He has not had occasion to change that belief since, though there has been a glorious change in the application of theology as applied to the condition of bondmen. Would to God theology could be purged from its awful taint of infidelity in its application to the Lord Jesus Christ. D. Campbell.

THE HIGH PRIEST.

(Concluded.)

Christ is our High Priest. He hath entered into the holy place; not the holy place made with hands, which was but a figure of the true; but into heaven itself, to appear in the presence of God to make intercession for us. "Not by the blood of goats and of calves, but by his own blood he entered in once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us." He does not offer himself often, and enter in once a year, as the high priest did with the blood of others; but once for all hath he offered himself a sacrifice for sins, and thus become the Mediator of the New Covenant. Having offered one sacrifice forever, he passed into the Holiest of all, and is now there praying the Father for us. Can any man but the High Priest enter there? Christ said to his disciples, "Whither I go ye cannot come." "But unto them that look for him, will he appear the second time without sin unto salvation." Yes, he is coming out again, to sanctify and bless his people.

The ceremony of atonement was not finished, and the people sanctified and blessed, until after the priest came out of the holy of holies. So the work of redemption will not be complete until Christ comes forth from the presence of the Father. Then he will cleanse his people from all the effects of sin; redeem them from the whole penalty of the law; free them from the curse; ransom them from the power of death; drive out all evil; cleanse the whole encampment, and bless and "forever perfect them that are sanctified." How do we know that he is alive? He said he would send the Comforter, which should testify of him. If we have the presence of the Comforter, we may know our High Priest is still alive.

Can we know when he is coming out to bless the people? If they knew in the type, we may certainly know something about it in the antitype. Christ told his disciples the Comforter was the Spirit of Truth, and when he was come he should guide them into all truth; he should teach them all things, and show them things to come. Ah! John got a few lessons about the "things to come" down there in the isle of Patmos. He was to write the things that were to be hereafter. Christ gave his disciples one edition of the signs that were to precede his coming. John got another edition.

But if we want to know when our High Priest is coming back, we must wait and watch. If we would know "what is to come," we must listen to the antitypical bells—the whisperings of the "spirit of truth." If we wander off into the wilderness of sin, and neglect to watch the signs which he has given us, and give no heed to the warning voice of the Spirit, but say, "My Lord delayeth his coming," he will come in an hour when we think not, and we shall lose the blessing. What is the blessing? Immortality—eternal life! O how the glory of God will appear when the High Priest parts the vail, rolls the curtain together, and comes forth from the inner sanctuary! How the waiting ones will rejoice!

For eighteen hundred years the true church has been waiting and watching. Myriads have fallen asleep while waiting, their last look directed toward the door of the sanctuary. Did they look in vain? No; for unto them who have looked for him he will appear, and will redeem them from the power of the grave. "We that are alive shall not prevent them that are asleep." They too shall behold him, and together with the living receive the final benediction, the crowning blessing—eternal salvation; and sit down to a feast of tabernacles—the marriage supper of the Lamb, and enjoy a Sabbath of rest in the kingdom of God forever.

O ye weary, waiting ones, look up! The High Priest has about finished his intercession. The bells are sounding nearer! The whispers of the Comforter grow louder. The signs are in the past. Gather yourselves together before the door of the tabernacle. Let no questions divide, distract, and scatter you now. Gather close together, with hearts filled with pure love for God and each other. Closer yet! Prepare yourselves for the blessing. What an awful thing it would be to lose it! Hark! I hear a voice,—"Behold, I come quickly, and my reward is with me." Even so, come, Lord Jesus. B. P. French.

CHRISTIAN FAMILY LIFE.

TRAINING OF CHILDREN THE PRINCIPAL CONDITION OF SUCCESS.

If we examine more closely what, at the present day, is called piety, in a special sense, our surprise at the poor success that attends the training of children will be greatly diminished. For it is particularly in this that the difference between a christianity which consists merely in profession, and one which manifests itself in the power of example, is most apparent. If there be hypocrisy in the parent, much will certainly occur in the development of the child to condemn it. If the piety of the parent be unsound and sickly, which is the case with the prevailing religious tendencies of the age, by what, we may ask, can the malady be more certainly known than by the morbid results of training? It must be openly confessed that our austere ancestors laid a better foundation, even with their dry morality, than many of the pious-minded, in our day, with their verbose, religious sentimentalism, combined with absurd management and instability of character.

Hence we would say to every one who inquires concerning the principles and particular mode of the training of children, first be yourself that to which you would train others; be it with all your heart. If what you require of your children be in any way contradicted by your own conduct in secret, you need look for no success, no blessing; but, on the contrary, be assured that your efforts in the training of children will prove abortive, and only reflect dishonor upon yourself. There are many parents who, without being religious themselves, would yet like to bring up their children in the ways of religion, like that class of statesmen who, whilst they regard religion an excellent thing for the people, allow a different rule of action for themselves. From parents and children of this description nothing can be expected; they can only be pitied.

Before you assume the responsibility of training up others, be yourself, first of all, trained of God. This is the fundamental condition, and must be complied with, if your labors in behalf of your children are to be successful. And yet, nothing is more common than to meet with parents who, whilst they are living in violation of the law of God, entertain the foolish and presumptuous expectation of raising obedient children. Ernest, the pious Duke of Gotha, was wont to say, "A ruler who would have obedient subjects, should himself be obedient to God." But as there are rulers who expect loyalty from their subjects, whilst they themselves renounce allegiance to the King of kings; so also are there many fathers laboring under a similar delusion. But as that mode of governing undermines all obedience, loosens all ties, and is a certain means for preparing a people for revolution, so also is this mode of training nothing but a source of ever-increasing disorder. But this fundamental condition, so salutary in its effects on education, is not only disregarded in practice; it is frequently set aside even in the theory. Macchiavelli's system in politics is practically applied, by many, in pedagogical science.

It is unreasonable to expect our labors to be attended with moral success, as long as we do not ourselves render submission to the requirements of the moral law. For should children once entertain even only a suspicion as to our sincerity, all our admonitions, precepts, and disciplinary regulations will fail to produce the desired effect. Let no one presume it an easy thing to keep his own transgressions of the divine commandments concealed from the knowledge of his children. They take many a look at that which transpires behind the scene, and though their reasoning powers may lack activity, they have an intuitive perception that something is not right.

But such an attempt is not only foolish, it is also presumptuous. For, supposing it possible to guard the child against the evil influences of our inconsistent and deceptive conduct, what then? We have, indeed, succeeded in deceiving a child, but we have not succeeded in deceiving God. We presume to accomplish a moral master-piece, without having the Author of all morality on our side. We act as if the fountain of blessing were not in God, but in ourselves. We labor as if we could dispense with Him who is alone able to influence the heart; as if the moral law, by which he governs the world, had been surrendered to our keeping. We bid defiance to him, and if we had intended to demolish the works of our own hands, we could not have taken a more effectual plan to do it. * * *

In view of all this we are comforted and encouraged by the thought that it is God who trains by our instrumentality. This he will surely do, if we will only comply with this one fundamental condition, namely, permit ourselves to be taught of him. He trains us by his providence. And to permit him to do this, we must submit patiently to his severe dispensations, be grateful to him for the good we enjoy, and bear willingly the burdens our domestic and other relations may lay upon us. Yea, more, we must permit him to discipline our own hearts, and impart to us his consolations. We must listen to him as often as his Spirit corrects, either by his servants or his word. We must seek and hold fast the consolations of his grace, which are vouchsafed to us either in the sanctuary or during the secret intercourse of our hearts with him. This is meant by being trained of God. The wisdom which he displays in training up men is the most exalted and the only perfect. From him alone can we learn how to do it aright. What human systems and books can communicate to us on the subject is very little. It lacks vitality. It is knowledge, but not wisdom. Wisdom is something that is ever present, something that accompanies him who is imbued with it wherever he goes, something that maintains a vigorous growth within him. It is active even under new and trying circumstances; it can only come from above; it is only to be acquired in the school of the Spirit. Christ alone can change our pedagogical knowledge into wisdom. Whoever does not permit himself to be taught by him, can be benefited neither by any other educational system, nor by what we have written.—From the German of Thiersch.

MORE ABOUT JOSEPHUS.

The attempt to prove that Jesus our Lord and the Roman emperor Tiberius died in the same year, is a great undertaking, and if it is successful, it establishes the fact that Josephus is not a reliable historian. Pilate, at whose bar the Lord was condemned to die, continued in office only ten years. Ant., B. 18, 4. He was appointed governor of Judea at the beginning of the twelfth year of Tiberius' sole reign. B. 18, 2. Tiberius reigned alone twenty-two years and a half. B. 18, 6. All this we learn from Josephus. From the twelfth to the twenty-first of Tiberius we have Pilate's ten years. Here we see that Tiberius lived one year and a half after Pilate was dismissed. Now as Jesus died under Pilate, he must have died a year and a half before Tiberius, even if he did not suffer till the last year of that governor of Judea. These are the logical deductions of the historian's testimony, and if he has written a paragraph which necessarily contradicts them, he is not reliable authority.

2nd. The attempt to prove that Caiaphas, the high priest, was dismissed from office between the time of Jesus' death and the following Pentecost, obliges those who make the effort to reject Josephus' testimony concerning the succession of high priests. Josephus says that Jonathan the son of Annas took Caiaphas' place, and Jonathan was succeeded by his brother Theophilus. Ant., B. 18, 5. "Nay," replies our objector, "the Bible and Josephus do not agree. Acts 4: 6 proves that Annas succeeded Caiaphas."

But here I may be asked to explain the paragraph of Josephus which declares that Pilate on his dismissal "made haste to Rome, but before he could get to Rome Tiberius was dead." I acknowledge that the paragraph reads as though but a few weeks could have elapsed from Pilate's discharge till Tiberius died. But should we not rather seek to harmonize the seeming difficulty of a single sentence, than to invalidate the entire record of the historian by insisting on an inference which renders his authority null and void?

Jarvis, on p. 369, has noticed this seeming difficulty, and accounts for it by offering several considerations, among which is the fact of Tiberius' failing health, which caused him to be absent from Rome, and travel from place to place for improvement. And as Pilate had nothing to lose, but everything to gain, by keeping out of the emperor's sight, we may reasonably suppose he took advantage of every circumstance to do so. But I fear it is useless for me to try to convince some with any harmonious solution of the matter, for if they will persistently contend that Acts 4: 6 proves that Annas succeeded Caiaphas, how can I hope to convince them in that which is more obscure?

Annas and Caiaphas held the same position officially in Acts 4: 6, that they did in Luke 3: 2 and John 18: 13, and no change occurred with them between John Baptist's ministry and Christ's ascension. To say that the mere fact of Annas being particularly called high priest, in Acts 4: 6, is contrary proof, opposes the judgment of every standard commentator; and I will venture to affirm, it opposes the judgment of ninety-nine of every hundred intelligent readers of the Crisis. I submit the case to them. John Lyle.

FAITH.

I believe that the faith which was once delivered to the saints is just as good as it was when it was delivered. I believe that apostacy and unbelief in ages past deprived them of its exercise. I believe it is the privilege of the church to be benefited by it here in these last days. How lovely she will appear in her bridal robe in the sight of her bridegroom! Are any hesitating to put on the dress because it is out of date? Thank God, it is not soiled, if it is old-fashioned.

O Lord, increase my faith, make me humble and obedient, is my daily prayer. I can see that he is leading me through the wilderness way, saying, This is the way; walk ye in it. Mary E. Blodgett.

THE DEALINGS OF GOD.

"Come, all ye that fear the Lord, and I will declare what he hath done for my soul."

This is the language of one after God's own heart. It is the language of every christian believer; for being justified of God, we have peace through our Lord Jesus Christ. "For we know we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren." But as some will have it, we cannot have this abiding witness within ourselves that we please God. To such characters the text will not apply. Therefore we must leave them to grope their way in the dark, and take warning by such, to walk in the light while we have it, lest darkness come upon us.

Perhaps it would not be unprofitable were I to relate my experience of the dealings of God in by-gone days. In so doing I must refer the reader to the days of my childhood. I do not remember any conviction for sin worthy of remark until I was ten years of age, when I grew terrified at the thoughts of death, being clothed in impenetrable mystery; for I was taught to believe that man had an immortal soul, and hence must have an endless existence, either in happiness or misery. I had not learned the difference between suffering the vengeance of eternal fire, and suffering eternally in fire. I saw I was a grievous sinner, and without the blood of Christ to wash away my sins I must perish. I found that none but the pure in heart can see God. I felt were I to remain impenitent I must taste the bitter pangs of the second death. I prayed and wept night and day, and was giving up to despair. I felt the die was cast, and I was sealed a reprobate. But how sudden the change. All glory to God, I discovered superlative worth and a transcendant glory and excellency in the Lord Jesus; an infinite fulness in him, sufficient for all my wants, enough to satisfy the boundless desire of my soul.

For the most part of the time for twenty-nine years I felt an inward peace deep down in the heart, which passes all language to express. I felt that there was an invisible hand upon me, and the presence of the Lord gave me rest; and were the mountains to be hurled into the sea, the heaven and earth mingle together, I should not be moved. But God showed me at length that there were higher attainments to be enjoyed; that I must make full consecration of all to God; that self must be denied, and all that I had and could call my own must be given up as a living sacrifice upon the altar. The words of the Savior would often occur to me,—"Father, sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth." I began to feel distress for the blessing of perfect love. My prayer was, Scatter the last remains of sin, and seal me thine. Make me all glorious within, a temple built by God. I well remember the time and place I received this blessing. It was at a camp-meeting, near Burlington, on the Lake shore. When I came on the ground I felt that sacred awe

"Which dares not move,
And all the silent heaven of love."

At that time, on that consecrated spot, the hand of God touched me the second time, and I was made whole. I felt a sinking into God. While in the attitude of prayer, my soul was made like the chariot of Aminadab. Bright visions of eternal day opened to my view. I had new apprehensions of God, such as I never had before. I felt I was taken into the arms of my Savior. Tongue cannot express nor language paint the beauty, the glory, the excellency I saw in my Redeemer.

How long this state of things remained I cannot tell; but when I became sensible I was an inhabitant of earth, I felt such exceeding tenderness and love to all mankind, and such an intense longing after perishing souls. But at length I saw I must fight if I would reign, and these weapons must not be carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds. I saw the foe approaching nearer, and it was wisdom to be in readiness to meet him. But I found by close examination I had not the right weapons. I thought the word of the Lord was yea and amen, but I found it clashed, if the preaching of the present day was right. I had been reading an eminent divine, so called, who said that if the joys of the righteous increased, the miseries of the damned would increase; and if the miseries of the damned increased in the smallest ratio, the time would come, the never ending ages of eternity would bring about that period, when one individual person would be capable of enduring more than all the race of Adam now united.

As I was brought up in the belief that the doctrine preached to our first parents was true, that man as he fell from the hands of his Creator was immortal and could never die, I swallowed it down as a sweet morsel, as did our mother Eve the forbidden fruit; but found it to be a bitter pill. O God, thought I, is this the good news of the kingdom, that Christ came to establish on the earth? I pondered over it not a little. I had no one to teach me to the contrary. I sunk at last in despair. The church saw it, for I was brought so low I became a mere skeleton; and all this to show me that I was embracing false doctrine. Have I been persecuted because I wanted to get at the truth? That is best known to my Maker.

I believe we have got the truth, and may the Lord help us to hold on to it with an undying grasp. The Spiritualist may threaten us. I know a lion unchained is terrible to meet, but if he approaches too near, we will take the "sword of the Lord and of Gideon." This sword hath two edges, cuts both ways. I have not been permitted to use it; for I have been chained down by those who lord it over God's heritage; and if these lines meet the eye of any one of like condition, I say, "Come out from Babylon, that ye be not partaker of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." LOIS BECRAFT.

A REMARKABLE CONFIRMATION.—Sir Henry Rawlinson has been distinguished for his success in deciphering the arrowhead inscriptions brought to light by the modern explorations of Nineveh and Babylon, though all scholars have not accepted his interpretations. Twelve years ago he read on a Nineveh monument that two Assyrian kings, one of whom was contemporary with Jehu, the king of Israel, visited a cave at the source of the Tigris, and there inscribed their names. Mr. Taylor, the English Consul at Diarbekir, recently discovered this cave from which the Tigris flows, and there found the inscription of the two kings preserved on the rocks to the present time. This remarkable discovery establishes, beyond doubt, the authenticity of those old writings which have thrown so much light upon Scripture history.—Exchange.

A WORD TO OUR FRIENDS.

None but those who have occupied the position can appreciate the perplexities of an editor of a religious paper. He cannot avoid the censure of some whom he would delight to please if he could, and be true to his trust. For instance, those who may hold any peculiar views—what some call "hobbies," feel very anxious to have them published to the world as soon as possible, that they may be examined and embraced, believing them to be almost essential to salvation; whereas, if they are published, they would be to most of the readers of the paper as disagreeable as a swill pail in the parlor, when their best company were about to enter; they would feel we cannot let our company in till that swill pail is removed; so they would not let their friends read the paper, but hide it from them, "so long as persons holding such strange notions are allowed to parade their hobbies in its columns." Yet the one who wrote the article may be a dear Bro. in Christ,—perhaps a special friend of the editor; but would it be right to allow his personal respect for the man to control him in such a case? Certainly not. But if he does not insert the article, he must incur the censure of his dear Bro. in Christ, who thinks it is time to have "a free paper," or an editor that will publish what is sent to him; while at the same time, if it were published, nine-tenths of the readers will say, "if such articles are to be allowed in the paper, I don't want it any longer;—please discontinue my paper."

At the same time that this brother is trying to get his "peculiar views" into the paper, and feeling so grieved because he cannot succeed, there are lying on the editor's table a dozen excellent articles with which all would be pleased; such as the church need to comfort, enlighten and strengthen them, and by their side as many other articles that he knows but few would wish to read, and which would be disagreeable to the most of the readers. What shall the editor do in such a case? There is not room for both. Which should be published? We think but one answer would be given by every one, except each individual who had sent an article, who would probably think his communication should go in; all the rest would say, put in that which will feed the flock of God, what is best adapted to their present and future good. But this course will not please all. Very true. All who have sent their "peculiar views" will probably say, "we will not support a paper that will not publish our articles;" and the great body of readers holding the opposite views will say, "we will not write for a paper that will publish such views."

We say such a position is often very perplexing, and one feels the need of more than human wisdom. If all writers felt like a Bro. who said;—"Clip, trim, blot out, add to, or burn up, just as you think for the glory of God, and the good of the cause we love," what a heavy burden would be removed from an editor's load of perplexities.

The following from the Gospel Visitor for September, expresses our own feelings so fully, that we adopt them as a supplement to what we have already said:—

"We are always pleased to receive communications, even if we cannot insert them. When brethren and friends write for our Magazine, it shows a friendly feeling to us, and a disposition to help in the work in which we are engaged; and a knowledge of this is encouraging to us. And feeling it a duty, as well as a privilege and pleasure, to reciprocate kindness, we on our part would like to encourage our friends in such labors as may promote their own improvement, and be useful to others; and it is always unpleasant to have to decline publishing articles sent us by those who feel like contributing to our work. And among the many trying and perplexing labors an editor has to perform, this is not the least. But he must sometimes do it.

It is reasonable to suppose that an editor would commonly know better what is most acceptable, edifying, and useful to his readers in general, than his contributors would. We think if we know ourselves, our object in conducting the Gospel Visitor is to do good. For the Lord knows we feel deeply impressed with the necessity of improvement within as well as without the church. And in inserting articles, or in declining to insert them, we try to have reference to the probable effects that the articles will have upon our readers in doing them good.

We are fully aware of the light in which writers generally look upon their productions. As parents are generally very partial to their own children, and think they are better than those of their neighbors, so do writers too often feel towards their literary productions; and after they have spent some time upon their labors, to have them refused, requires more patience and meekness to preserve a proper serenity of mind than poor human nature usually possesses, and the editor is severely censured.

We have frequently received articles upon very good subjects, the ideas of which we are fully agreed with; but they needed much correction, and we have taken them up again and again to correct them, but becoming discouraged at this, we have then attempted to transcribe them, but finding it impossible to get the writer's ideas in many places, we have been compelled, although we were reluctant to do so, to lay them aside. . . . .

We think it not amiss to remind our contributors and correspondents, as well as our readers in general, of these things; and may we not with the apostle say, 'I speak as to wise men; judge ye what I say.' We think if these things were properly considered, and an editor's position fully appreciated, he would often receive sympathy when otherwise he may receive censure, and be prayed for when he is condemned. We shall try and not abuse the discretionary power our responsible position requires we shall exercise; and if we do not, we hope there will be no offence given.

We are thankful to our friends for their past contributions, and we shall be happy still to receive their favors in the form of communications, letters containing news from the churches upon any points that may be thought interesting to our readers, and selections. Do not write with a pencil, but with a pen, and, if possible, with good ink. Do not crowd your words or lines. Every communication must be accompanied by the writer's name, to be entitled to proper attention."

We purpose to do the best we can for the general good of the church; but we are well aware that when we have thus done, we shall not please all. Pray for us that we may please the Lord. We can afford to bear much censure, if we can only please him.

NEW WORKS.

We have received three new tracts from the pen of Bro. H. L. Hastings, entitled "The Contrast between the Law and the Gospel; or, the Jewish and the Christian Dispensations"; "My Father's House"; and "Bethlehem." The latter is an interesting tract, in rhyme, for children. Those acquainted with Bro. Hastings' works will need no recommendation from our pen to convince them of their real practical value.

"JERUSALEM IN GLOOM AND GLORY, with a review of the Rev. G. B. Bucher's 'Objections to Error.' By J. M. Orrock, Pastor of the Advent Church, Waterloo, C. E."

The above mentioned work is well written, and a good one to scatter among those who do not understand the "gospel of the kingdom." It may be had at the Advent Herald office, 46 Kneeland Street, Boston, Mass.

BUILDING OF JERUSALEM.

We think the true light now shines upon "the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem;" and that a careful, candid examination of the subject is all that is wanting to satisfy those who are searching for truth. When we turn to the prophecy in Dan. 9: 25, it is very evident that there is reference to only one commandment; for the Scripture reads,—"Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." Observe, it does not read commandments, in the plural number, but one specific commandment. It should also be remembered that it was a fixed rule with the Medes and Persians that when a law was made by them, it must not be repealed, but remain in force till executed. Hence, after the commandment was issued to restore and build the city, if the one who issued it did not live to execute it, his successors must see that it should be fully executed.

The commandment relating to the rebuilding of the city could come from only one individual, because he was specified by the prophet. Let us turn and read it: "Thus saith the Lord thy Redeemer, . . . that confirmeth the word of his servant, . . . that saith of Cyrus, he is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure; even saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid." "I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways; he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts." Isa. 44: 24–28; 45: 13. We can see no chance to doubt that this is the prophecy that refers to the commandment which must be given by Cyrus to "build" the "city" of Jerusalem. No one else can possibly fulfill this prophecy, because the one who is to do it is called by name. This fact, we think, for ever settles the matter, that Cyrus must say "to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, thy foundation shall be laid." If the Lord had spoken indefinitely, and said, a certain king shall say "to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple thy foundation shall be laid; "and he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives;" then, whoever gave the commandment would fulfill the prophecy. But observe, the one who issues the commandment to "build" the "city" is the same one who "shall let go my captives, . . . saith the Lord of hosts." But Cyrus was the one, as all admit, who "let go" the "captives, not for price nor reward; "consequently, he was the one who issued the commandment to "build" the "city," according to the prophecy of Isaiah.

Cyrus died in seven years after he let the captives go, and had given a "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem;" and as the work of building the city was not then accomplished, and his decree could not be revoked, the succeeding Persian kings were obliged to let the work go on till it was completed in the thirty-second year of Artaxerxes, at which time the sixty-two weeks of Dan. 9: 25 begin, and close just before the "Messiah" was "cut off," or crucified, April 6th, A. D. 30.

The work of Artaxerxes was to complete the wall around Jerusalem. The building of the wall was not the building of the city. Suppose a city and its walls were destroyed, and one should give a commandment to build the wall, would any one understand that the one who contracted to build the wall should also build the city; or that restoring the wall was building the city? Certainly not. The wall was built for the protection of the city. Again, if one gives a commandment to build a city, such a commandment would not necessarily include a wall, because many cities have no walls about them. The Lord said of Cyrus, "He shall build my city." Would any one think of calling the walls the city—Jerusalem? They were what encompassed Jerusalem; but they were never called the city. What does the prophecy say?—"Know, therefore, and understand, that from the going forth from the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem," [not the wall around the city, which was the work of Artaxerxes,] "unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks; the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in troublous times." The last part of this prophecy shows that the wall must be built "in troublous times," which was accomplished under Nehemiah during the reign of Artaxerxes. But the commandment which was issued by Cyrus, to build Jerusalem, B. C. 448, we think must be the one from which to date the sixty-nine weeks of Dan. 9: 25.

The most important part of the city,—of more consequence than all the rest, was the house of the Lord, the temple; hence Cyrus in his commandment, makes special reference to that, as we should suppose he would.

If the temple could be rebuilt, the main thing would be accomplished. The building of the houses for the people was a small affair compared with "the house of the Lord God of Israel." That had been the wonder of the world before its destruction. Jerusalem without that would be but a desolation to the Jews. The building of the temple was the great work in restoring Jerusalem, and was not accomplished till the "sixth year of the reign of Darius the king," sixteen years after Cyrus gave the commandment. As this was the chief work in the rebuilding of the city, we should reasonably expect that Cyrus would use just such language as he did in Ezra 1: 1–5.

After a careful and prayerful examination of this subject, we see no room for doubt in the case, that Dan. 9: 25 was fulfilled by the decree of Cyrus, B. C. 488.

A NEW DISPENSATION.

It is said by its friends that "Spiritualism is a new dispensation." [Speech of J. S. Loveland, at the Spiritualist's convention, in Boston, May 30th, 1865.] The following preamble and resolutions, presented in the afternoon session, at the convention just referred to, May 30th, will give the reader some idea of the "new dispensation:"—

"Whereas, The Popular Theology of Christendom, in its fundamental dogmas, ignores the self-evident truths and facts of human nature in regard to our relations to one another, to God, and immortality; and by so doing it directly tends to darken reason, to stupefy conscience, to bewilder our moral perception, and render the mind incapable of distinguishing between truth and error, and right and wrong; therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sacred duty of all friends of progress to guard their children against the stultifying and demoralizing tendency of that theology, and to be more earnest and constant in their efforts to bring them under the influence of purer, nobler and more rational and practical ideas of God and immortality, and of their relations and duties to their fellow-beings.

Resolved, That, as Spiritualists our ideas of man, of his nature and destiny, are more in accordance with facts, and therefore better adapted to promote his purity, elevation and happiness in all relations, than those entertained by the devotees of the Popular Theology; therefore we should spare no pains to disseminate these ideas, and to bring men and women, in their domestic, social, commercial, ecclesiastical and governmental relations, under their influence.

Resolved, That the superiority of our ideas of man, of God and immortality over those entertained by the adherents of the Popular Theology, ought to be and will be judged by our superior earnestness, wisdom and unselfish devotion in our efforts to save ourselves and our fellow beings from the evils that result from wrong doing."

The one offered the resolutions, then spoke in defense of them as follows, as published in the Banner of Light June 10th, 1865:—

"He said every Spiritualist should be a propagandist, and seek to root out every vestige of the stultifying and demoralizing tenets of the Popular Theology. 'I know from forty years experience that everything that is vile under heaven has been sanctioned thereby, and found refuge therein. It is to be placed on a par with the mythology of Hindostan. In proof of this, he instanced the dogmas of Immaculate Conception, the Vicarious Atonement, Salvation by Grace, Eternal Hell, and the infallibility of the Bible."

We can see from the foregoing the character and spirit of the "new dispensation," which is being inaugurated by the Spiritualists.

INCONTINENT.

When describing the last days, Paul says the people will be "incontinent." A very casual observer cannot help seeing that this is one of the striking characteristscs of these times. How many once happy homes are desolated every week by the seducer, or by some new lover, who steals away the affections of a dear companion. The teaching of the spirits on this point is being carried into practice by many who deny that they are in sympathy with Spiritualism. They claim it is right to follow their "affinities." This was one of the traits of character among the Sodomites, just before their destruction. Licentiousness and incontinence was then a prevailing sin, as it is in the present day. While the faithful wife, or husband, is at home passing lonely hours, the companion is ravished in the arms of another lover. Cases like the following are common, excepting the elopement:—

"A 'Mr S.' of Burlington, Vt., eloped with the wives of three of the most respected citizens of Nashua, N. H. They crossed to Canada on a lumber barge, under cover of night, and were last heard of at St. Leon, C. E., closely pursued by one of the husbands."

"THE RIOT OF CRIME."

The above heading stands over an article in the Banner of Light, for Sept. 2d, 1865. We hardly expected to see such a statement from that source, because the Spiritualists claim that the world is rapidly advancing to a higher condition in morals; but "facts are stubborn things." If the world was truly growing better, as has been asserted by the Spiritualists, then the Bible must be wrong, for that most clearly declares, "that in the last days" "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse."

The following, from the Banner of Light, is in harmony with the prophecy of Paul, and gives a true view of the present state of things in the world:—

"It does really seem as if the evil spirits had combined to bring out their desired pandemonium into the popular face and eyes. The newspapers are crammed full, morning and evening, with accounts of crime and criminals, running through the entire category of both. The public conscience is daily shocked at such recitals as are made. Violence and falsehood are in their heyday. There seems to be no limits at which criminals are ready to stop.

Thoughtful persons at once put the inquiry, To what is all this owing? The question is legitimate, for there must always be a cause for marked effects. The cause, or rather the causes, lie underneath. Passion never so works out on the surface, unless it has been active in the interior first. Vice is always unseen before it is seen. Crime slumbers in the embers of the daily life, before it breaks forth into the flame that terrifies every one. There must of course be something for it to feed on, or it could not exist. Where we see exhibitions of such tawdry extravagance as we are in the habit of seeing made in public places, we infer that there must be corruption and fraud somewhere to keep it alive. Where we see exaggeration in all forms become popular, and commonly courted and run after, we cannot but think that the conscience is dull which accepts such things for genuine realities."

For the Dorcas Mission Sunday School.

This is an Advent Mission Sunday School among the poor colored people of Philadelphia. It numbers already more than one hundred boys and girls, and is rapidly increasing. They want a hundred copies of the Young Pilgrim, and are not able to pay the $35.00 a year for them. They call upon the benevolent for help. Who will give it?

DORCAS MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL.

Relative to the Home Mission in Philadelphia, of which we have before spoken, under the care and active labors of Elder F. H. Burbank, and our sisters, Mrs. H. Helginson and Mrs. Rebecca Reed, all of that city, we wish to say the Sunday school is in great need of primers and books. The room is rented at an expense which our brother assumed. If it is laid upon the hearts of any of God's dear children to send relief, we think it will be thankfully received and faithfully disbursed. That is as true missionary ground as ever was found in Burmah or Lapland.

Since the above was penned, we are delighted to see in the World's Crisis of Sept. 26th, from the pen of Bro. Burbank, that the school has so increased. It was but the third time of its meeting when we were there. We felt it to be a work on which God smiled, but the rapid success has more than realized our fondest hopes.

Address thus:—"Dorcas Mission Sunday School," care of Mrs. Catherine Thacher, 719 North Eleventh street, Philadelphia, Pa.," or either of the others herein named, if their numbers are known.

Your sister in the blessed work,

STRIFE AND CONTENTION.

How good it is to meet with a band of brothers and sisters, where love and unity prevail; where all is harmony and friendship; where each one is willing to do his part to aid the cause of Christ, and to bear each other's burdens. When this is the case, how quick you will see the church grow; but how quick you will see that church go down when strife and contention enter it.

What is the cause of this strife? The causes are various. Perhaps jealousy for office in the church; one wishing to run the thing alone, or appoint his own cabinet, and have the privilege of predominating. Others in the church may not fancy such proceedings, but want something to say themselves. Such things, you know, are quite apt to arouse the spirit of contention, and sometimes strife. Sometimes one or two in the church will use their tongues more than is absolutely necessary, talking about their neighbor brother or sister, telling what such an one has done, or what such an one ought to do, constantly keeping an uproar in the church, causing the spirit of religion to grow cold in the hearts of all concerned, and giving the world at large a chance to scoff and sneer, and say, "Well, if that is religion, I want none of it around me." And again some may not deal justly and honestly with their brother, sister, or neighbor, and some, perhaps, may not be willing to do their part in keeping up the cause of Christ, throwing too much of a burden on one or another.

All of these things cause contention, and help to keep the spirit of religion down. Now James says (Jas. 1: 27), "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world." Now we cannot enjoy this pure and undefiled religion without dealing justly one with the other, and bearing one another's burdens. Religion is the best armor in the world, but the worst cloak; for if we have pure religion we are sure to set good examples before the world, and they by seeing our good works will be led to glorify their Father which is in heaven; while on the other hand, if we wear the cloak of religion, we are sure to keep others from joining with us, and thereby throw their condemnation in part upon ourselves. Let us examine the following passages of Scripture, and live in accordance with them.

Rom. 14: 19,—"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another." Gal. 6: 1, 2,—"Brethren, if a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual restore such an one in the spirit of meekness, considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted. Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Eph. 4: 31,—"Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice." For Mark (3: 25) says, "And if an house be divided against itself, that house cannot stand." A. J. TAYLOR.

A REQUEST TO ELD. H. L. HASTINGS.

BRO. GRANT:—Through the medium of the Crisis, I wish to get this letter to Bro. Hastings, as I see he is holding a series of tent meetings, and think this the surest way to reach him. There are a few of the flock of God in Lapeer, and regions round about, who are tired of the doctrine taught by the father of lies in Eden, and endorsed by popular theology, saying, "Ye shall not surely die." And even a minister of some note declared in his discourse that God has given eternal life to the world, through Christ. Our hearts are made sad whom God has not made sad, by promising the wicked life; and as the famine is sore in this land (not of bread, but of hearing of the words of the Lord), I feel it my duty to sound the Macedonian cry in Bro. Hastings' ears, "Come over and help us." If we are included in the "regions beyond," will you, dear brother, bring this matter before God, and if the will of the Lord be so, I hope you will come in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and abide with us till you can go in peace.

We are four miles from Marathon depot, on the Syracuse and Binghamton railroad, about twelve miles south from Homer, where once was an Advent church. I think they still keep their meeting-house. Bro. Himes preached there last June. If you come, I will see that you are brought from Marathon, if you give us timely notice. And you shall not go to this warfare at your own charges. May the Lord direct in this matter, and his name have the praise.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,
STEPHEN HITCHCOCK.

SOCIAL HYMNS.

Social Hymns, original and selected, by H. L. Hastings, published by H. L. Hastings, No. 19 Lindall St., Boston. 32 mo., pp. 292. Price in cloth 30 cts.; $3.00 per dozen; $20 per 100. Paper 20 cts.; $2.00 per dozen; $14 per 100.

This little book is three times as large as the former edition. Many of the old hymns are replaced by new and better ones. The book contains nearly 300 hymns (293). Not one sixth of these can be found in the Lyre, and some of these only in an imperfect condition.

Out of the numerous hymn and tune books, new and old, English and American, collected and imported by me during the last ten or fifteen years, while arranging for the publication of my long contemplated hymn book, and hymn and tune book, I have selected some of the choicest hymns I could find. To these are added from my own stores some thirty original hymns, mostly new, and half as many more, partly original, or now for the first time adapted for the purposes of sacred song; and some others it is believed are now published in this country for the first time.

The Children's Hymns include nearly sixty hymns adapted for use in children's meetings, Sunday schools, etc., etc. These are bound with the Social Hymns, or can be furnished separately if they are desired. Price 5 cts.; 50 cts. per dozen; $3.50 per 100. The complete book will supply a need which has long been felt. It contains hymns adapted to almost all occasions of worship. There are eight Morning hymns, twelve Evening hymns, eight Baptismal hymns, twenty Communion hymns, twenty closing hymns and doxologies. Also, opening hymns, hymns before preaching, prayer meeting hymns, hymns of invitation, warning, penitence, consolation; new hymns concerning the coming of the Lord and the hope of the church, etc.

It is hoped that the hymns will be found to contain both truth and poetry, adapted to express the feelings of those who sing with the spirit and the understanding also.

Persons using the book will frequently find new hymns in unusual meters, arranged side by side with others more familiar, and to be sung in the same tunes; as for example: hymn No. 158. "My days are gliding swiftly by"; 159. "The night is wearing fast away"; 160. "And is it so,—a little while?"; 172. "There is no pain that I can bear." Also Hymn No. 173. "Come, my brethren, let us try"; 174. "What, my soul, should bow thee down"; 183. "Welcome from beneath the wave." Other hymns are adapted to tunes more or less widely known, as No. 171 to "Shawmut"; 153 to "Glory Hallelujah"; 140 to "Joys that we've tasted"; 70 to "There 'll be no sorrow there," etc., etc., while the ordinary meters are fully represented in the book.

As between one and two thousand of these books have been disposed of within a few weeks without any advertisements, and as preachers in new places have, like myself, long wanted some snug, cheap, portable book, printed in good type, so it could be read in the evening, and so small that they could carry a pocket full, and supply a whole congregation with books, and so make meetings interesting, I have thought the readers of the Crisis might be interested to know what the book was, and then they could judge of its desirableness.

Any preacher can have a copy for examination free, if he will send to me for it, and read it through. Persons who have importuned me to publish some of my rhymes, can find some of them here, unaltered, from my pen.

Any preacher, laboring in new fields, can have a dozen "Social Hymns" sent to him free, on condition that he will, 1. Distribute them among his congregation, at his meetings, that they may use them to sing. 2. Sell to those who wish to buy, and keep the rest to use again. 3. As fast as he sells a few, send the money on to me, and with it get some more, and so keep his stock good.

This book is not intended to take the place of any other book, but to be used with others, and to go where others cannot go: nor is it designed to answer the end intimated in my proposal for a Hymn and Tune Book, issued some eight years ago, and laid aside (but never relinquished), to leave the field clear for the efforts of others. That plan, with improvements, may yet be executed, when the Lord will. For the present season this must suffice. I have done what I could.

CONFERENCE REPORT.

Our Quarterly Conference, appointed at Hermon, was held Friday, August 18th, at 10 o'clock A. M. Opened by prayer and social meeting. Sermon at 2 o'clock P. M., by Bro. Jordan. Sermon Friday evening by Bro. Baker. Saturday forenoon, prayer and social meeting. Saturday afternoon, sermon by Bro. Howard. Saturday evening, sermon by Bro. Hanscom. Sunday morning, prayer and social meeting. Sunday forenoon, sermon by Bro. Jordan. Sunday afternoon, sermon by Bro. Howard. Sunday evening, sermon by Bro. Baker.

At the business meeting, Bro. Thomas Smith and Bro. Baker were appointed a committee to designate the time and place for our next quarterly meeting. Some things appeared unfavorable at the commencement of the meeting, but the Lord met with us, and as the meeting progressed the interest increased; backsliders expressed a determination to wake up. The preaching was instructive and interesting. The social meetings were well conducted.

The brethren and friends residing near the meeting-house provided well for those who attended the meeting. They each and all have our thanks for their christian kindness, and our constant prayers for their salvation.

TO THE FATHERS, MOTHERS, AND BROTHERS.

Fathers! have you erected the family altar? Do you gather your loved ones around you morning and evening to offer up your devotions to the Father of mercies for past blessings, and to beseech him to continue them; that he would cleanse your hearts, and render them fit temples for the indwelling of his Holy Spirit; that he would enable you to draw preciously near to him,—to possess in your hearts and to exhibit in your lives a measure of that kindness and good will toward all men which shone so conspicuously in the life of the blessed Jesus; that you may have that peace of mind which is above all price; that you may overcome evil with good, and thus become practically his children; that he would fit you for every good word and work, and enable you to yield that humble submission to his will which should put to silence every murmuring or repining thought under any dispensation of his providence; that you might be enabled so to discharge all those duties demanded of you in his word, that your households might be consecrated to him, and all the joys, trials and afflictions of home sanctified by the direct influences of his grace and truth; and finally, that he would direct you to the gospel of his Son, which is always his power unto salvation to every one that believeth?

"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." But if not, let me entreat you to delay it no longer; for the day is fast approaching when you will regret it that you were so overwhelmed with worldly duties as to forget your God. How can you expect the smiles of heaven if you live without God in the world? What you sow, that shall you also reap. "He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."

Mothers! let us see to it that we sow the good seed in the little hearts which God has entrusted to our keeping; for if we discharge those duties demanded of us, their little hearts will swell with the love of God, even in their infancy.

Young men and maidens! "Know ye not that he to whom ye yield yourselves servants to obey, his servants ye are to whom ye obey, whether of sin unto death, or of obedience unto righteousness?" and that "the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord"? Come to him without delay, and you shall have "that peace of mind which passeth understanding," which is like a mighty river growing broader and deeper as it rolls on toward the ocean of eternity.

"Life has but shadows, save a promise given.
Which lights the future with a fadeless ray
O! touch the sceptre, win a hope in heaven;
Come, turn ye from those vanities away."

Brothers and sisters! "Let us not sleep as do others, but let us watch and be sober," laying up a good foundation against the time to come. Let us be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might, for he it is that shall tread down our enemies. Let us strive so to live that our works shall coincide with our faith,—"that the world may take knowledge of us that we have been with Jesus." "Let us launch out, that we may swim in deep waters," and cast off every thing that shall impede our progress. Let us not be of that number who seek honor one of another; but let us seek for that which comes from God only. Finally, let us gird on the whole christian armor, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God, and our Savior Jesus Christ.

Hoping to meet you all in the kingdom, I subscribe myself yours, in the hopes of the gospel, MRS. R. W. JORDAN.

For the World's Crisis.

NON-CONFORMITY TO THE WORLD.

Jesus Christ declares in his last prayer to his Father, that his disciples are not of the world. "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." The true disciples of Christ are of God. John says, "we are of God." The people of God are a distinct people from the world; that is, they are of another party, engaged in a calling opposed to the sinful maxims, customs and fashions of the world; yea, in many things, not only the unconverted, but, lamentable to say, many of the professed disciples of Christ do not discover any impropriety, and thus plead for the unnecessary fashions of this sinful world. How often do we hear them say, There is no necessity for being so particular in our customs, dress, etc.

Here I would remark that it is a great pity, and a great injury to the cause of Christ, that there is so little uniformity in sentiment, and much more so in practice, on the subject of self-denial in the brotherhood. O that the people of God were of one mind and judgment! It is certainly our privilege and bounden duty to be in the unity of the Spirit. So says the apostle. "Endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Thus it is evident that the people of God should be as uniform in their habits and customs as possible, that there be no difference among them.

Now all those who plead for the foolish and giddy fashions of the world, must have a proud heart, and not willing to practise self-denial. "And he said unto them, Ye are they which justify yourselves before men, but God knoweth your hearts." "For that which is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."

The riches, honors, and pleasures of the world are very tempting, and that the people of God be not overcome, let them be very humble, keep down at the feet of Jesus, and they are safe.

It is very dangerous to imitate the world in its costly and unnecessary adorning of the body. The people of God have a right to use the world, but not to abuse it. "But this I say, brethren, the time is short. It remaineth, that both they that have wives be as though they had none; . . . and they that use this world as not abusing it; for the fashion of this world passeth away."

"The night is far spent, the day is at hand; let us therefore put on the armor of light." "Let us walk honestly as in the day, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying. But put on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts thereof." O! how much time and money are spent just to attract the eye, the lust of the flesh, and the pride of life.

It is our duty to observe plainness. Hear what the apostle says upon this subject;—"In like manner, also, that the women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety; not with broidered hair or gold or pearls or costly array." "Whose adorning, let it not be that outward adorning of plaiting the hair, and of wearing of gold, or putting on of apparel." Christ tells us that "the tree is known by its fruit." When we can see no difference between the world and those who profess not to be of the world, the difference is in the name only, which is worse than nothing.

OBEDIENCE.

"Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice."—1 Sam. 15: 22.

Children are usually ready and willing to do what is required of them, if the requirement is agreeable to their choice. Have you never heard a parent say of his little son,—"He is a pretty good boy to mind, unless he is told to do something that he dislikes to do."

Now, brethren, here is the point. We can obey our Master cheerfully in all things that are agreeable to our desires; but how is it when his will crosses our own? Do we not sometimes, like Jonah, run away in the opposite direction?

Suppose you have formed a plan of action, and have fully made up your mind to pursue a certain course; and further, suppose this road is the very one that pleases you best of all. But it is at last made clear to you that your duty leads you in an entirely different path. The way you had chosen was pleasant and agreeable to you; but the way of duty is hard and rough. The way of your choice you think would be for your interest every way. It seems to you it would be best for your health and prosperity in both temporal and spiritual things.

But, no. You are commanded to turn aside from this bright and pleasant prospect, and walk in a path that seems to you rugged and dangerous. You hesitate; you plead "it will not be for my bodily health to go there. I shall be in danger of the arrow that flieth by day, and the pestilence that walketh in darkness." Ah! Jonah, will you not obey? Will you "lean to thine own understanding," and follow the path of your own choosing?

Many years ago, I knew an aged professor, one who seemed a devoted and faithful christian, and heard him relate his experience on the subject of tobacco. He had previously been reproving some young converts for spending their time in trifling amusements, and in return he was reminded of the "beam," if not in his eye, at least in his mouth—tobacco.

Being put upon his defense, he pleaded his own case, and related some sickening details which I will omit, while I give you an outline of his plea. He had tried to give up the vile habit, and had at times fully resolved to use the weed no more. But he was taken very sick. The doctor tried every thing in vain. He must either die or return to the use of tobacco. He chose the latter, and was restored to his usual health. We must not judge or condemn this aged brother, but we may be allowed to ask, whether in such a case it would not be safe to lose our life for Christ's sake?

It is hard to pluck out the right eye, but there are some things harder than that. It seems to be harder for some to give up tobacco than to lose both eyes. Thirty or more years ago I knew an old man who was a great cider-drinker. His eyes were badly inflamed, and he was gradually growing blind. His physician told him he must give up his cider or lose his eyes. He promptly answered,—"Then farewell eyes." And he died a sot.

But will you make such an unwise choice? Can any who have been taught in the school of Christ refuse to lay down their lives for his sake? It is easy to say that we will give up all for him, but with some it is very hard to do as well as say.

Lord help us to obey thee from the heart in all things. Amen.

Sutton, Mass. F. H. Chamberlain.

Correspondence.

From Sr. M. M. Mathews.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—Having a few spare moments, I devote them to you and the Lord. I want to speak, not of myself, but of Jesus. How lovely he is! Oh, how precious a friend as we journey through this dreary wilderness. Truly I can say he is "the chiefest among ten thousand, and the one altogether lovely." And his friendship grows stronger. I appreciate its value more and more. I know I love the Lord, thank God. And while tempests blow, winds howl, and storms gather and pour upon me, within my soul is rest and sweet peace.

"And while thou shalt smile upon me,
God of wisdom and of light,
Foes may hate and friends disown me,
Show thy face and all is bright."

Well, time rolls slowly but surely away. Soon the last day will come, and we shall see the Savior for whom we have waited. Then we shall be made immortal. O how blessed a hope for us who feel so tired of mortal pain. Then our "home in glory" will be given us, and there we will meet all the good of all ages. Mourning ones, your departed friends will there live again. Thank God for a promised resurrection.

Let us remember that none but the true and faithful can dwell there. May God impress this fact on the minds of many whose faith and works disagree. O may we see God in peace, and not be found wanting when justice is meted out to humanity.

Pilgrims, be of good cheer. Let nothing separate you from the love of Christ. Trust in him. Obey him, so shall you be owned of him at last.

Maria Mathews Weaver.

Northfield, Sept. 2d.

From Bro. M. R. Miles.

Bro. Grant:—The Crisis is the best of all papers to me. I love the truth it contains. O may God guide its managers by his Spirit. May it go forth laden with truth to this dark and benighted world. Is it possible that 1868 will close the long night of weeping? If so, should not God's servants be faithful in warning the people? If God has given us light, he will hold us responsible. Have we let it shine? Where is the true faith in the Lord's coming? Brethren, where are you? Is your conversation in heaven, from whence we look for the Savior? or is it on earthly things—your farm, your house, your dress, or some other earthly idol? The end of all such is destruction. Brn., look out where you stand. These are perilous times in which we live. None but those who are constantly on the watch will be able to stand. The god of this world is blinding the minds of many a one who has loved the coming of the Lord.

Brethren, let us wake up. The churches are spiritually dead. The war has finished them. Spiritualism is gaining ground. Infidelity is on the increase. O what a sad picture this old earth presents! May God give us all a realizing sense of the times in which we live.

M. R. Miles.

Obituaries.

Littlefield. Died at Winterport, Me., June 26th, 1865, Mr. Jeremiah Littlefield, aged seventy-five years and twelve days.

Also, his wife, Mrs. Abigail Littlefield, Sept. 13th, 1865, aged sixty-nine years, two months, and twelve days.

Thus, in a few months, have both these parents been borne to their last resting place, till the trump of God shall wake the sleeping dead. We trust these aged pilgrims sleep in Jesus, and will awake to endless life when the Life-giver comes. May the Lord bless all the children, and especially the three in California who were not present to mingle in these family griefs.

Words of comfort were spoken on the occasion by the writer.

F. A. Baker.

Libby. Died in Biddeford, Me., Sept. 4th, 1865, Mary G. Libby, mother of Bro. John C. Libby, aged seventy-two years.

Sister Libby has suffered much with cancerous humor for years in the past, but she rests from all her sufferings, and her mourning friends have hope in her death.

The funeral was attended by the writer, and remarks were made from Psalms 116: 15.

W. H. Mitchell.

Fisk. Died in North Sutton, N. H., Oct. 1st, 1865, Sister Susan Fisk, wife of Bro. Levi Fisk, aged forty-two years, five months, and eighteen days.

Sister Fisk sought the Lord in the days of her youth, and has for twenty-five years been on pilgrimage. She loved God and his service. She died in faith, looking for Jesus soon to come, and to give immortality to all his people. She leaves a kind husband and nine daughters to mourn.

Lord, hasten the day when death shall be swallowed up in victory. The writer addressed the bereaved and sympathizing friends from words found in 1 Cor. 15: 19.

John G. Hook.

Gloyd. Died in Dalton, Mass., Aug. 4th, of typhoid fever, Austin E. Gloyd, aged thirty-five years.

He was converted one year since, and came into profession of the blessed hope, which proved to him an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast, reaching to that within the veil. The little church with whom he worshiped will deeply feel his loss, for he was always at his post, willing and obedient. He hath done what he could. When disease laid him upon the bed of death, he met his fate without a murmur, and without a fear; and when the death damp gathered on his brow, and its icy chill crept over his frame, in broken accents he exclaimed, "Such a hope!" and the lamp of life went out. He leaves a wife and five little children to mourn his loss, but not without hope. May they find a refuge in the widow's God, in the Father of the fatherless.

Discourse by the writer, from 1 Thess. 4: 13, 14. We were kindly assisted in the service by the congregationalist and Methodist ministers of Dalton, Mass.

We have laid him down to rest,
Away in the grave so lone,
But sleeping in Jesus he is blest,
Though his pillow be a stone.
For every jewel laid away
Low in the cold, damp tomb,
Will live again in that glad day,
When Christ to earth shall come.

Bryant. Died in Whitefield, N. H., Aug. 24th, of diphtheria, Freddie D., only son of Daniel and Olive Bryant, aged six years, nine months, and ten days.

Freddie now quietly sleeps, awaiting the time when Michael's clarion shall awake the dead, when he will be brought from "the land of the enemy."

Dear Freddie, we hope to meet thee,
When mortality has fled;
In the kingdom hope to greet thee,
Where no farewell tear is shed.

Reeves. Died in Jefferson, Me., Sept. 24th, 1865, Eld. Moses Reeves, aged fifty-three years.

Bro. Reeves had belonged to the Christian Baptists, and was ordained six years ago. Within the last year he embraced the Advent faith, and united with the Advent church in Jefferson four weeks before his death. He died in peace, and leaves a wife and seven children to mourn his loss. But he will live again.

Slocum. Died of diphtheria, in Central Village, Coventry, R. I., Aug. 9th, 1865, Sarah E. Slocum, aged seven years and five months.

Also, Aug. 16th, Deborah Slocum, aged three years, three months, and sixteen days.

Two precious little jewels
Thou hast reluctant laid,
Far from the dear home circle,
Beneath the green grass shade.
But in the great Life-giver
Thou hast a faithful trust,
The keys are his forever,
He'll wake their slumb'ring dust.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Advices of the 24th ult.

Liverpool, Sept. 22. The Fenian arrests continue. Another non-commissioned officer has been arrested in the Cork garrison. Two arrests have been made in Manchester and one in Sheffield.

The Italian Minister of the Interior has issued a letter to the Prefects relative to the approaching elections. He also specifies sundry measures that are to be presented to the new Parliament, including one for the suppression of religious bodies and readjustment of ecclesiastical property.

A Vienna paper learns that the warlike preparations which are again being made in Montenegra have induced the Porte to adopt precautionary measures and send reinforcements to the frontier. Omar Pasha's presence in Vienna is believed to be in connection with these movements.

At Alleppo, Beyrout and Alexandretta, in Syria, the cholera was making great ravages. Also at Damascus, where the deaths averaged 200 a day. This was the case at Jaffa. In the Dardanelles and at Constantinople it was on the decline. It is noticed as a remarkable fact, that the Jews have thus far been exempt from the plague, and it is said the majority of the plague-smitten have been the habitual drunkards and the unclean. The long-standing dust-bin, the stagnant sewer, the weighted clothes-line exhaling unwholesome vapors—such is the soil in which cholera sows its seeds with greatest success; they spring up and quickly choke the enfeebled stems of health. Four hours have often sufficed to complete the fatal work, but some have held out for nearly forty.

The Moniteur authoritatively states that no changes in the members or policy of the French Government is contemplated. The rumors are the inventions of evil disposed persons.

The Emperor of Austria has issued an important manifesto to his people, solemnly guaranteeing them the right to participate, through their representatives, in legislation and the conduct of finances.

Liverpool, Sunday, Sept. 24. The Fenian prisoners were all remanded yesterday at Dublin for a week. They will all be tried together. Arrests continue. Among the latest are a merchant tailor in Dublin, named Doniffe, and a stationer in Liverpool named Archdeacon. Treasonable documents and arms were found in both houses.

Liverpool, Sept. 29th.

A number of Fenian prisoners were brought before the police magistrates at Dublin on Saturday. The government counsel stated that large sums of money had been received by some of the prisoners from America, and a letter was intercepted in that day's mail containing a large draft for one of them.

Some of the correspondence seized shows that the designs of the Fenians were of a most sanguinary character, being the extermination and assassination of the nobility on the breaking out of the revoution.

Liverpool Sept. 30th, Queenstown Oct. 1st.

There is nothing new as to the Fenians. Arrests continue, and important documentary evidence is accumulating. Among the papers discovered is one giving the particulars of expected arrivals at Bantry Bay of arms-bearing vessels from America.

The Cork Examiner gives a report that a special commission is shortly to be issued for that city to try prisoners on the charge of high treason. Fenianism is said to have been discovered among the Irish residents in London, and the police were keeping a strict surveillance.

The Moniteur, alluding to the reported evacuation of Rome, says: "No doubt should exist relative to the intentions of the French Government. So soon as France shall consider the proper moment to have arrived, she will, in concert with the Pontifical Government, adopt the necessary measures for the commencement of the evacuation of Rome, in order that the withdrawal of the French troops may be completed within an appointed period.

Alderman Phillips, who is of the Hebrew faith has been unanimously elected Lord Mayor of London.

The Pall Mall Gazette says it is generally believed at Constantinople that a political catastrophe is impending in the Danubian principalities, and Turkey is preparing to be first in the field in case of intervention. Muchi Pasha Abdi Basha, who commands the finest corps d'arme at Shumla, is ordered to be ready to march with 15,000 men across the Danube at twenty-four hours' notice.

DOMESTIC.

St. Louis, Mo., Oct. 2. A special dispatch from Lawrence, Kansas, to the Democrat, says Col. Wells, Superintendent of the Southern Indians, has made an important treaty with the Osage tribe at the council ground on Friday. The Osages cede about one million acres, for which the Government pays $300,000. About two millions of acres were also ceded from the north side of their reservation, to be held in trust for the Indians. All these lands are in Kansas, and the rights of settlers on these lands, who are heads of families, are protected by the treaty.

New York, Oct. 4. The Herald's Vera Cruz correspondence of the 21st represents a terrible state of affairs in Mexico. Disorder and violence reign supreme, the guerrillas increase in numbers, and their depredations continue in all sections. Some 1600 additional French troops have lately arrived, and a number of negro troops are expected from Egypt. It is feared that they will bring the cholera with them and inflict a new misery upon the country.

The Herald's Florence (Italy) correspondence refers to the mysterious communications going on between the Emperor Napoleon and King Victor Emanuel with a view to the recognition of Italy by Austria and the settlement of the Roman question. The Pope is recruiting and strengthening his army, and it is rumored that his resignation is determined upon and his successor named.

New Orleans, Oct. 4. Matamoras advices say Cortinas, Canales and Escabbo have combined their forces, and are marching on Matamoras with 2000 Liberals, robbing and plundering the whole country. Capt. Neyes' cavalry is operating between Matamoras and Monterey. Nine hundred Belgians and Mexicans defeated 3500 Juarists, near Cosma, in the State of Michocan on the 17th of July, capturing 17 prisoners, 700 stand of arms and 6 pieces of artillery. They proceeded in the direction of Tehuacan. The telegraph lines are in process of construction to connect the principal cities of the Empire.

Condition of the Freedmen.—The accounts of the condition of the freedmen at the South, received from intelligent and reliable sources, are of a character to indicate that much must be done for the negro by his friends at the North, to prevent suffering the coming winter. The National Freedmen's Relief association of New York makes public the following:

"From Louisiana we hear: 'There are several thousands in my charge throughout the parish. It is really pitiful to see their necessity and hear their sad cries for help. The women and children are usually worse off than the men. A large portion of those at the colony are crippled, infirm, most of them bruised and mangled by cruel task masters.' Mr. Kinne writes from Florida: 'Since the suspension of hostilities, many are coming from the plantations because their former masters refuse to remunerate them for their services in raising the crop now ready for harvest, either by wages or a share of the crop. Many others are driven by violence and threats from their homes on the plantations, stripped of every thing, and compelled to wander without food for days, except what may be gathered in the woods, or begged of their colored friends by the way. The condition of those who come to us for care and protection defies description.'

From North Carolina we have the same sad story: 'Old men and women, who have worked all their lives long, are driven away without one mouthful of food, and hardly clothes enough to cover their nakedness. Hardly a day passes but my sympathies are strongly appealed to by some case of entire destitution.'"

Terrible Conflagration in Stamboul.—A Constantinople letter in the Tribune says that, on the 5th of September, a fire broke out in the Turkish quarter, near the Custom House, on the Golden Horn. It is said to have originated either in the shop of a candy merchant or in an adjoining coffee house. The wind was blowing a gale from the north, and within an hour 1000 houses were in flames. The scene was terrible, and only for a fortunate change of wind, the great public buildings and the mosque of St. Sophie would have been sacrified. Next day the wind increased in fury, and the whole city was in peril from the flames. Hundreds of houses were torn down to stop its progress, but it leaped these barriers, and sent such a storm of burning coals before it that it kindled fires half a mile in advance. About noon, another slight change in the wind turned the current of fire toward the Sea of Marmora and saved the rest of the city. By evening it reached the sea; the wind suddenly went down and the progress of the fire along the shore was stopped. It is estimated that from 6000 to 8000 houses were burned, including more than a hundred palaces, eight mosques, two churches, five kahns, and many public baths. It is estimated that the sufferers by the fire number about 75,000. The space burned over is about two miles in length and half a mile in width, including some of the wealthiest and some of the poorest quarters in Stamboul. The Turks are the heaviest sufferers.—Journal.

The Davenport Swindle Exposed in Paris: A correspondent of a London paper writes from Paris, Sept. 17th, describing the first appearance of the Davenport brothers there, and the detection of the imposture. All the usual arrangements having been made, the brothers were bound to the bench in their box, and the doors closed on them, and the lights put out. The account says:

"The unearthly hubbub of unmusical instruments commences; the spectators ask for light, the spirits, by their interpreter, object; the public is for a moment silent, and the brothers walk out of their box unbound. One of the gentlemen who tied them thinks the ropes produced are not the same as he had used, but the objection does not prevent a second manifestation. This time the brothers, who had entered the box unbound, are found solidly attached to the bench, but a spectator, whose attention has been uninterruptedly fixed on the bench, jumps on the stage, puts his hand on the bench round which the cords are wound, touches a spring, the bench bends in the middle, and the cords fall at the feet of the captives. The rush, the row, were terrific, but the appearance of the commissary of police, who announced that the money would be returned, succeeded in restoring quiet. The company, after examining the mysteries of the cupboard, retired, not sorry to find their money in their pockets, delighted at having detected the imposture."

The African Embassy.—The gentlemen comprising the embassy from Tunis, the New York papers say, are not Africans in the conventional sense of the term. In personal appearance they are more like the Moors or Turks than the African negro. They are men of education, speak French, and are of position and influence in their own country. They wear the European costume and the Turkish fez. The envoy, Gen. Otman Hashem, is about fifty years of age. Col. Ramiro Gaita, his aid-de-camp, is a fine looking man, apparently about thirty-five years of age, with black hair and heavy black moustache.

ITEMS.

☞ Reports received at the Freedmen's Bureau from Arkansar, represent freedmen's affairs in that State to be in a most encouraging condition. Labor is scarce, many of the freedmen having returned to their original States, and the planters are hiring former slaves by the month, paying them from ten to fifteen dollars each. The colored lessees of farms are doing well, raising large crops, while other freedmen have interests in the crops being raised by planters.

☞ There are again reports of the very serious illness of Lord Palmerston. It is stated that he is suffering not merely from gout, but from a disease which compels him to be lifted in and out of his bed in a blanket. His physicians, it is further said, do not give him any hope of immunity from this complaint in future, so that he will be physically unable to lead the new House of Commons.

☞ A tornado visited Insanti and Chicago counties, Minnesota, about forty miles north of St. Paul, on the 12th ult., making a clean track through the heavy pine and oak forests, about thirty rods wide, for a distance of many miles. Trees three feet in diameter were literally twisted into broom splints. In some places the debris is piled thirty feet high.

The London Leader says that experiments recently made on the velocity of light agree with observation made on the parallax of stars, that the distance between the sun and earth must be reduced from about 95,000,000 to less than 93,000,000 miles, and all the planets must have their distance decreased.

☞ It is stated that an agent, appointed for the purpose, has purchased thirty thousand acres of land in Texas, for the establishment of a colony of Poles. This tract is situated near the town of Palestine, in the upper valley of the Trinity, and is represented to be admirably adapted for the culture of cotton and cereals.

☞ The Canadian journals are uneasy over certain alleged Fenian meetings (in secret) in various parts of the country. One held in Montreal, the other evening, is said to have contributed $2000 in cash to the cause. Mysterious circulars, too, are out, with cabalistic characters.

☞ The small town of Eureka, on Humboldt Bay, was violently shaken by an earthquake on Sunday last. Nearly every chimey was torn down or cracked, the goods in stores thrown from the shelves and much crockery broken. The damage amounts to several thousand dollars.

Special Notice.

It will be twenty-five years, the 15th of October next, since the first organized conference of Adventists was held in Chardon street Chapel, in Boston. I have been invited by the committee of the Advent church of Lowell street Chapel, Boston, to preach for them on the twenty-fifth anniversary of this conference. They say that "a discourse having reference to the past history and present prospects of the cause would do good. It would bring together many of the friends from the neighboring towns and cities, who have been long identified with the cause, and some of them for a quarter of a century. Your old friends will be happy to hear you on your past experience and labor with Father Miller and others, in proclaiming, 'Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! go ye out to meet him.' Many of us still believe that God has been with us from the first, and that this truth will soon have a glorious ending. It is a good time now, 'mid the defection from the truth, that would upturn Adventism, to review the old landmarks, and show what position we should now occupy as Adventists, and take fresh courage in this glorious campaign."

Agreeably to this general invitation, I shall spend the Sabbath (October 15) with the Advent church in Lowell street. I will not promise much, but hope so to improve the day as to cheer the hearts of the waiting ones, and give a new impulse to the glorious cause.

I shall spend the following Sabbath (Oct. 22) with the brethren in No. 18 Cooper Institute, New York. I hope for a large gathering of the tried and faithful.

I shall return from this meeting and go South as soon as arrangements can be made, with a view to open new fields of missionary labor among the Freedmen.

Discussion at Portland, Me.

We, the undersigned, have agreed to hold a public discussion in the city of Portland, Me., at the Second Advent Hall on Congress street, commencing Monday evening, Nov. 7th, at 8 oclock, and continuing through eight consecutive afternoon and evening sessions of two hours each, unless concluded earlier by mutual consent of the parties. Afternoon sessions at 2 o'clock, and evening at 7.

Question:—Is the seventh day Sabbath, observed by God's people prior to the crucifixion of Christ, still binding upon mankind?

Affirmative, M. E. Cornell.
Negative, T. M. Preble.

Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire.

The annual session of this Conference will be held at Lake Village, N. H., commencing Oct. 12th, and continue over the following Sunday. We hope there will be a full attendance, both of ministers and delegates from churches throughout the State. In the meantime let prayers go up to God for his blessing to rest upon us during its session.

Albion Ross, President.
A. W. Sibley, Secretary.

We would call the attention of our preaching brethren who are members of the Advent Christian State Conference of New Hampshire to the following: The constitution requires that "the ministers shall report themselves personally, or by letter, and the churches by delegates duly appointed thereby," at its annual session. Let this be remembered.

A. Ross,
A. W. Sibley.

Maine Ministerial Conference.

The Maine Ministerial Conference will be held at Augusta, Me., at the north parish, to commence Oct 26th, at one o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. We are anxious to see all of our brethren in the ministry at this conference. The brethren will do all they can to make us comfortable and happy. Call on Brn. Allen Church or James Dudley. We should be happy to see any of our preaching brethren from other States who may feel it to be a privilege to meet with us.

Israel Damman, R. R. York, Isaac Wight, } Committee.

Notice.

Eld. Wm. Sheldon will commence a meeting in Floyd Village, Floyd Co., Iowa, on Thursday, Oct. 12th, to continue several days. All are invited to come. Come, brethren from New Hartford, Boylen's Grove, and Marble Rock; and all who can, come in the spirit of the Master and enjoy this meeting, that our strength may be renewed, and we better fitted for future labors in the Lord's vineyard. For the brethren,

J. R. Preston.

Notice.

Am to commence a meeting in Antioch, Hancock Co., Ill., Friday, Oct. 27th, as Bro. Scott may appoint.

The Carlinville meeting will commence Friday, Nov. 10th. Probably Brn. Scott and Bywater, and Sr. Prescott, will be with us.

W. Sheldon.

Conference.

The Lord willing, a conference of free Sabbath keepers, who are looking for his speedy return, will commence at my residence, in Bristol, Ct., Friday, Oct. 20th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over the Sabbath and First day, or longer, should it seem best. All lovers of truth, whether they understand every point exactly with us or not, are cheerfully invited to attend. Brethren E. A. Poole and J. C. Day are expected to be present.

S. C. Hancock.

Notice.

There will be a series of meetings at Chichester, (Pine Ground), commencing Thursday evening, Oct. 19th, and continue over the following Sunday. T. W. Piper and others are expected to be present.

S. S. Mooney.

Notice.

Preaching brethren wishing to labor with the Second Advent Association on Springfield Hill, will correspond with F. K. Oatly, Springfield, Mass.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome
Board of Managers.
I. C. Wellcome, Secretary and Business Agent.
Isaac Wight, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. Wellcome, Agent.

Notice.

Elder Thomas Smith, Bangor, Me., has on hand for sale H. L. Hastings' "Signs of the Times," with an assortment of his various Tracts; also, the Tracts by Miles Grant, on "The Soul," "The Spirit," and "What is Man?" and other Advent tracts.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 523. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

☞ Sickness and absence of help in the office still prevents our making the usual acknowledgments of Cash Receipts; and some irregulations and delays have occurred in consequence. Brethren will have patience. We shall catch up as soon as we can.

For the World's Crisis.

ELIJAH.

When Israel's Queen, the proud daughter of Tyre,
Had lured by her arts the Lord's people astray;
When the sons of the prophets, to hide from her ire,
Were shunk into caves from the light of the day;

When the name of Jehovah, once Israel's glory,
No longer was heard in the streets of Jezreel;
When the popular crowd, from the youth to the hoary,
Were gone after Baal with unhallowed zeal;

When the lamps in the temple no longer now burned;
When the name of the Lord was a name to despise;
For this once honored nation in madness had turned
From the great God of heaven to the God of the flies;*

Then alone, but unswerving, 'mid peril and danger,
With faith to be shaken by no mortal fear;
Stood Elijah the Tishbite, to Ahab no stranger,
Confronting him boldly with accent severe.

"As the Lord my God liveth before whom I stand;
No dew neither rain on this country shall fall
But according to my word; except this whole land
Again on the Lord God of heaven shall call."

Then woe to the prophet, unless he shall speed him
Away to the wilderness, led by his Lord;
Who commanded the ravens in pity to feed him,
Who dared among sinners to honor his word.

And there by the brook in communion with heaven,
The ravens providing an ample supply,
Did the prophet abide, with but sympathy given
By angels and God, till the waters ran dry.

And then amid barrenness, famine and dearth,
His throat parched with thirst, and all glazed his dim eye,
Shall he now pray to God to send rain on the earth,
While his people still worship this God of the fly?

No, rather than Israel should still be deceived
By rulers so wicked and prophets so vile,
Let himself be the victim. Until they believed,
Let Heaven still refuse on this nation to smile.

But shall God leave his own, when so faithful and true,
To die like the sinners who scoff at his word?
No, never. Mark this, ye who fear to pass through
The trials before you, nor doubt the reward.

In Zarepheth, a land where the Lord was not known,
Lived a widow, well known to the Lord of the sky;
And to her was the prophet sent, living alone
With her son, in this famine expecting to die.

But receiving this stranger, and trusting God's word,
She received heaven's favors, and lived with her son;
As true faith and charity bring their reward,
And the Lord pours his blessing on deeds kindly done.

At length over three years of famine are gone,
And Israel's faith in their new God is shaken,
But faltering still, if Jehovah alone
Or Baal be God, must some measure be taken

To prove beyond doubt. So the prophets of Baal,
With the thousands of Israel on Carmel's green sod,
Are assembled together. Can truth now prevail?
For Elijah alone stands, the prophet of God.

"Let the altars be built, and things made ready all;
Let the prophets of Baal pray as they desire,
And I on the Lord God of heaven will call,
And then let the true God send down his own fire."

"Amen," said the people. And now comes the test,
Over four hundred voices go up with loud cries,
From morning till evening. No pausing to rest,
But nothing that answers—ah! nothing replies.

The prophet approaches with calmness and hope,
No fear in his step, and no doubt in his eye;
A few brief words of prayer, the heavens now ope,
And down pours the answering fire from on high.

The prophets of Baal are struck dumb with wonder;
But Israel's thousands fall flat on the sod,
All humbly confessing, with robes rent asunder,
"The Lord he is God! ah, the Lord he is God"!

Shall we pursue longer this wonderful story,
And how he was honored above other men?
After being thrice called, see him caught up to glory,
In radiance bright. Allelula! Amen!

Oh ye who the truths of the gospel have known,
Now shun the broad road by the multitude trod;
If you stand like the prophet Elijah, alone,
Yet stand, and you'll see the salvation of God.

THE RETURN WALK.

We took leave of the two disciples just as they reached the terminus of their walk. They had "constrained" the supposed stranger, saying, "Abide with us; for it is toward evening, and the day is far spent. And he went in to tarry with them." At subsequent interviews, it is reported what Jesus said to his disciples; but on this extraordinary occasion it is hid from our view; nor will we even attempt so much as to imagine what was said. We are told what he did at that wonderful meeting; "he took bread and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them." Imagination is tame; here, utterly at fault. How many were sitting at that table, besides Jesus and the two disciples, we are not informed. It is fair to presume there were others however; for these two men appear to have entered merely as guests in the family where they had called. How they had introduced their stranger friend on entering the house we are not informed, as we have seen this stranger had gained their confidence from the first, for these disciples had confided to him their choicest secrets, not thinking that he knew their secrets much better than themselves. Their hearts were drawn closer and closer to him, till they were set on fire, and burned within them. They were prepared, therefore, for a warm communication, when they sat down at the table; but for aught we know all was silence.

That must have been a familiar stranger, incidentally dropping in with two travelers, to sit down and do the honors at table, unasked, take bread, bless, break, and give to other guests, and then vanish out of sight, without a word spoken. But it is all we are allowed to know. We have a right to imagine, if imagination will come to our aid, something of the astonishment created. What was vastly better than astonishment, their "eyes were opened." They of course had the natural powers of vision before; for they had seen him take bread, and break it. "And they knew him," it is said. The vail which had concealed his identity hitherto, is not explained to us. These disciples now made all haste back to Jerusalem. They could now corroborate the story which Mary had told to the unbelieving eleven, in the morning, and restore her to confidence again. Before they had reached Jerusalem, however, Simon had added his testimony; for when these had reached the gathering, the glad acclamation was heard, "The Lord has risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon." Then the two "told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in breaking of bread." "And as they thus spake, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you."

What an accumulation of evidence is here. During the whole day, from morn to evening, had the evidence been on the increase, with time enough for reflection, one would have supposed; and whence their remaining doubt? "But they were terrified and affrighted, and thought they had seen a spirit." Poor men! we know well, in this our day, how to sympathize with you. It is still the fashion to begin with children in the nursery, and frighten them about spirits, and ghost stories. This home system of treatment for children is very little improved after they get into the Sunday school and church; only there the spirits become a little more civilized, and are finally adopted as the spirits of our departed friends. Should any of these friends be permitted to return in reality, we should be as much frightened as were the disciples, at the real, visible and bodily return of their Lord.

He had, in and about him, every thing they had last seen, except the blood, which was spilled on the cross; and the loss of that they could not detect. Whence then their fear, except from the prejudices of their education? Their Lord had done all to remove their prejudices, during a three years' training, that could be required of any teacher who respected the laws which govern free agency.

But with all patience our Lord went on to establish the truth of his identity; showed them his hands and his feet, and said, "It is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." They still doubted, and wondered. He then resorted to the same expedient which proved so effectual upon the two disciples at Emmaus, viz., his familiar manner of blessing and breaking of bread, and the eating of it. "He said unto them, Have ye here any meat? And they gave unto him a piece of broiled fish and an honey comb, and he took it and did eat before them."

But where is Thomas? He was among the eleven as an unbeliever, all alone. Possibly the poor man is casting round for some means of a livelihood, and been detained from the meeting. All the disciples have been left in destitute circumstances. Judas, the treasurer, who had charge of the contribution, has abandoned his post. Possibly James and John have a small patrimony; but John has been constituted the protector of Mary the mother of Jesus, which may absorb the little surplus those disciples have at command. At any rate, be charitable towards Thomas, and not think his absence arises from indifference. But during the week, when the other disciples told him, "We have seen the Lord," he said, "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I will not believe." O Thomas!

Well, the patience of Jesus is inexhaustible; so we will not despair, even of such a hard case as this. The next Sunday evening came round, and Thomas is found in his place. Now if these lines ever meet the eyes of any one lacking in forbearance towards an offending brother, heed this lesson. After the disciples were all in (and seated we will suppose), "then came Jesus, the doors being shut, and stood in the midst, and said, Peace be unto you. Then saith he to Thomas, reach hither thy finger, and behold my hands; and reach hither thy hand, and thrust it into my side; and be not faithless, but believing. And Thomas answered and said unto him, My Lord and my God." That is enough, Thomas.

One object which the writer has had in view in these few thoughts, is to illustrate the inveterate nature of prejudice and pre-conceived opinions, arising from the mistakes of even a pious education. I have only entered on the subject. At some subsequent opportunity, if space is allowed me, I design, in a few short articles, to follow these eleven men in some of the most striking incidents of their lives, for twenty-one years, from the time I now take leave of them. They now, after a few more interviews with their Lord, before his ascension into heaven, close their primary studies in the "school of Christ," and enter into the high school with vastly increased advantages. Jesus, in a few days, will send them down a new teacher, called the Holy Ghost. He will guide them into all truth, bring all things to their remembrance (which Jesus has taught them), and teach them things to come.

In spite of all these advantages, I will show that it required twenty-one years for them to get only partially clear of some of their strong prejudices and pre-conceived opinions; causing divisions in the apostolic churches as troublesome as those which now afflict the Advent churches. And if I can do it without giving offense to any one, I will show that some of those causes of strife were the same questions which now divide the Advent believers into different branches.

I said I would follow the history of these eleven. We will have the number made whole, not however by including the one which in a hasty and unauthorized manner was elected by lot; but fill the vacancy occasioned by the disloyalty of Judas by the man whom the Lord Jesus chose—a man whose mind could be more easily cleared of those strange and inveterate prejudices which often fall to the lot of poor human nature.

SELF-EXAMINATION.

"Commune with your own heart."—DAVID.

Communion with self is one of the most profitable exercises of a christian. By it he is enabled to learn the greatest lesson ever learned by man. This to some, however, appears inconsistent and absurd. Notwithstanding, it is of uncalculable value. Without it man may strive in vain to be a christian. He may assume the name, but the character he cannot. Still, comparatively speaking, but few take a single step in this path.

Man is ready to commune with his secular interest. The merchant will sit down at night and make a calculation of his profits through the day. The mechanic makes a calculation upon the net proceeds of his income. And the farmer will make his calculations upon the growth of his increase in wealth. But seldom do men, before retiring for the night, sit down and converse with their own hearts, and seek to know if they have a conscience void of offence towards God and man. But, instead of conversing with his own heart, man is, as were our first parents, sewing together fig leaves with which to hide his incredulity, without so much as making a single effort to heal his moral maladies. Such a course will never answer. It will never cause man to make a single step in reform.

Again, there are other errors than those already mentioned, into which man is liable to fall. When man examines himself, being full of self-love, he looks not with a critic's eye upon his own, as he does upon the faults of others. He looks only at the bright side of the picture, and the dark side, as soon as it is discovered, is turned far from him. And when he views his own actions he compares them with those known to be evil. By so doing he deceives himself, and is led to think that he is better than he really is. Now the question arises, how and by what principle can man try himself? I answer, by the principles laid down in the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. This is a standard by which he may try himself without being deceived. This is a standard of true excellence, beauty and virtue.

Having considered the propriety and necessity of self-examining, let us look at the benefits resulting therefrom, which, as before stated, are incalculable. First, then, such an examination humbles man, by causing him to see himself as he really is. Pride and arrogance are the legitimate offsprings of a want of such an examination. Did he have a knowledge of himself he would be found praying as the Publican, "Lord, be merciful to me a sinner." His vanity would forsake him, and he would consider himself the least worthy of his Father's house.

This point is well illustrated in the case of the prodigal son. Through want of knowledge of himself, he left his father's house and wandered into a strange land, where he spent his substance in riotous living; which course continued until meager want stared him in the face so sternly, that he would have gladly fed upon the husks that were given to the swine. This state of suffering caused him to reflect; for we read that "he came to himself." He now saw his situation, therefore began to form resolutions, and to put them into practice. That home he once had departed from began to look lovely, and he could say with the poet,

"Home, sweet home,
There is no place like home."

Hence we see him returning to his father's house, where there is enough and to spare, willing to be made as one of the hired servants. Humility has taken possession of his bosom, and he is led to exclaim (as his father embraces and kisses him), "Father, I have sinned before heaven and in thy sight, and am no more worthy to be called thy son; make me as one of thy hired servants."

Here are the effects of self-examination. The son is humbled and made willing to resign the title of a son for that of a servant.

Again, such an examination will cause man to make an exertion to reform, by discovering to him the situation in which he stands. It is unnatural for a person to make an attempt at reformation before he discovers that he is impure. It must first be known by man that he is sick before he will send for a physician, or take medicine for the purpose of healing himself. So it is with his moral nature. Before he is willing to do any thing to heal his moral maladies, he must first learn that his moral nature is diseased. This can be done by no other means than self-examination, looking into his own heart and holding communication with it.

Thirdly, I would say, self-examination not only enables man to discover that he is diseased, but will direct him in such a manner as to enable him to avoid the quicksands of temptation upon which he has before foundered. This must be apparent to every reflecting mind; for surely this will point out the cause of his disease, and of course enable him to shun it as he would a den of vipers. Self-examination increases happiness, and dispels misery. Therefore, let us examine ourselves faithfully, that we may shun those grievous errors and temptations which stand so ready to destroy us.

"Help, Lord, for men of virtue fail,
Religion loses ground;
The sons of violence prevail,
And treacheries abound."

SNAKES IN THE GRASS.----No. 3.

"Serpents with their venomous stings,
Or bright angels, crowd around us."

A WORD TO STUDENTS IN COLLEGES AND SEMINARIES.

Upon no class of persons does the habitual reading of this branch of our literature exert a more pernicious influence than upon the young men connected with our colleges, and other institutions of learning. We have heard it asserted by those whose positions enable them to judge intelligently in this matter, that there is scarcely an instance on record where a young man, who habitually and regularly peruses works of fiction during his undergraduate course, ever received that degree of mental discipline which is necessary for a successful entrance upon the great duties of life, and which it is the aim of a collegiate course to furnish. And, indeed, it is hard to conceive how the case should be otherwise, for, besides the enormous waste of time, which is a necessary consequence of any considerable indulgence in novel reading, the mind, accustomed to follow some sentimental hero or heroine through all sorts of silly, unheard-of adventures, and to revel amid scenes of fancied pleasure and happiness, takes little delight in attempting to grapple with the more profound truths of philosophy and mathematics, even when it is not wholly incapacitated to do so.

It is a lamentable fact, that at least half of the young men who graduate each year at our colleges, hardly possess even the rudiments of a sound and substantial education. Many, after spending three or four years within the walls of a university, possess, in return for their time and money, little besides their "diploma," to which, certainly, in our day, no great importance can be attached. We hazard little in saying that the evil in question may, to a very great extent, be traced to the "popular novels," which form so important an element in the composition of the student's libraries in many of our colleges. And so long as our young men are content to spend the precious moments which ought to be devoted to the acquisition of substantial knowledge, and to fritter away the knowledge which God has given them, in poring over books worse than profitless, to the neglect of all that is useful and instructive, just so long are we to expect superficial thinkers, instead of profound thinkers; mere triflers instead of men.

The indirect tendency of nine-tenths of the popular novels of the present day is to inculcate false views of life, and to corrupt instead of cultivating the imagination. They weaken the judgment, the reasoning powers are unhinged, and all the perceptive faculties destroyed or greatly vitiated. More than this, all the generous affections of the heart, and all the noble sensibilities of human nature, become blunted and seared under their blighting and withering influence! The intellect is greatly injured by their creating a distaste for nobler and more solid reading. Men do not like to go from the splendid palaces of kings—from the soft and lascivious saloons and drawing rooms of dukes and counts, into the common walks of life—no, they would rather luxuriate amid the splendid castles and enchanted scenes of the novel-writer! It is truly painful to see in some reading-rooms popular works of fiction, novels and romances, and works positively infidel in their tendency. Such libraries and reading-rooms are a curse instead of a blessing to the community. Many a young man has been ruined for time and eternity by this corrupting literature.

No book or periodical, whatever its merits in other respects, which takes the name of God in vain, or uses it profanely or irreverently, which contains a profane oath, an impure or libidinous thought, or speaks lightly of the word of God, should ever be allowed in a family or reading-room. A parent ought never to allow a fascinating writer to say that behind the screen to the eye of a child, which he would not permit any one to breathe into the ear.

Byron, Scott, Shakspeare, are more or less defiled by profane and impure allusions, dashes or exclamations, that offend the ear of modesty and virtue. What christian father or mother would allow Shakspeare, if he were now alive, to associate with a blooming circle of sons and daughters, or read his plays, just as they now stand in the best editions? Is it possible for them to pass through the youthful mind and not leave a foul stain behind? Read the "Personal Recollections of Charlotte Elizabeth," and see how narrowly she escaped the loss of both body and soul by poring over Shakspeare's corrupting fascinations.

Says the Rev. O. B. Waters: "Shakspeare's morality seldom rises above the supreme selfishness of the heartless world, and often sinks into its grossest forms. He has exhibited ambition, avarice, revenge, jealousy, and all the grovelling passions of the human soul, with all the skill of art, but where are those opposite graces of the spirit which alone can antidote their influence?

The tendency of nearly all his writings is to quicken into inordinate and morbid activity that faculty which phrenologists term amativeness, already strong enough to need firm and wise restraint. No one can deny, moreover, that with all his excellences there is among his plays a great amount of senseless frivolity, unworthy of a thoughtful, earnest mind.

Besides, who has counted up the passages where he is positively vulgar and covertly, or openly licentious? Not a few there are, I am sure, that are most grossly so. What a sink of pollution, vulgarity and licentiousness is, for instance, the Merry Wives of Windsor. While no one of his plays, even the best, can give you a model, and scarcely an instance, of those exalted and self-denying virtues which spring only from a heart-felt sympathy with the spirit of the Bible.

His powerful and exciting delineations of love have, without doubt, ruined many a soul. If those instances were recorded where the works of Shakspeare have had an influence, either directly or indirectly, in exciting the passions to such an ungovernable strength, that men have been led into crime and misery, what an account would be placed to their score."

For the World's Crisis.

DEFINITE TIME.

I perceive there is a move being made on definite time. Some different opinions are advanced in the Crisis. This is the only way I have learned any thing about the time, for I have not been blessed with light enough to gather it from the Bible for myself, and I have never seen any of the present works on definite time, and I don't know of any one who has them. It is apparently unsettled who is right.

It is not in my heart to feel opposed to or afraid of definite time, but shall love it when I can have the evidence that it is God's time. I cannot say that I have been blessed with this evidence yet. But it is painful and unpleasant to see so many conflicting ideas, so much sarcasm and striving about such a soul-inspiring, great and yet solemn event. I have reasons to firmly believe God designs that the living church shall know the time definitely. I believe she can safely trust in God for this knowledge; and if the time is not given in the Bible and correctly obtained from it, it will be by direct revelation from the mouth of God to his church; for there is a God in heaven who revealeth secrets —Dan. 2 : 28.

As it was in the days of Noah, and of Lot, so shall it be in the coming of the Son of Man. It is evident in the Scriptures that they were not left ignorant of the day. If there was something that was not disclosed to Daniel, and that he did not understand, rest assured it was for some wise purpose; and the living God will assuredly finish up his work in due season here in these last days. He will withhold no good thing. He can as easily give visions in these latter days as in the days of the prophets and apostles. He possesses the same will and means to speak to his children now as then, and he loves us with the same love. MARY E. BLODGETT.

West Stewartstown, N. H.

THE ASSISTANT TREASURY AT NEW YORK.

The leading financial institution in the United States is the United States Assistant Treasury at New York. Though it is only an assistant treasury, and the Treasury proper is at Washington, yet the transactions of the former are so vastly greater in volume than those of the latter, that the chief work of the Washington office is keeping record of the business done by its New York branch. Nineteen-twentieths of the public creditors are paid here; nearly all the public loans are disposed of here; by far the greater part of the revenue from customs and taxes is paid, on the days fixed by law, the interest on $2,000,000,000 of United States securities. A business of from $3,000,000 to $10,000,000, daily, is done here—done quickly, quietly and without errors or disputes. No institution in the city is better worth inspection than the Sub-Treasury, and be it said, in simple justice, no man is more willing to have it inspected than Mr. Van Dyck, the Sub-Treasurer.

The vaults are a sight which cannot be witnessed elsewhere in this country. There are two of them; but one is comparatively empty, as it only holds some $10,000,000. The other contains over $60,000,000, one-half in coin, the other half in paper. How many readers have ever seen $1,000,000 in paper or gold? We remember one of the oldest of our judges, a man of large experience and profound wisdom, interrupting a party of talkers who were chattering about millions of gold, with the naive questions:

"How big is a million of gold? Would it rest on this table? Would it go under this chair? How many men would it take to carry it? What does it look like?"

His Honor might have gratified his curiosity by a visit to the Sub-Treasury. There $30,000,000 of gold lie dormant, awaiting the resurrection of specie payments. They are put up in bags containing $5000 each, and weighing say forty-five pounds. These bags are piled one upon another in closets, which line the inner wall of the vault; a hundred bags fill a closet. When filled, the door is closed, locked, and sealed with the cashier's seal; a ticket attached specifies that in that dark and narrow hole $500,000 in gold lie hidden. Fifty or more such closets may be seen, duly closed, locked and sealed. But in that vault, whose wealth far outshines the wildest fables of Oriental story, bags of gold lie around in every corner. You kick one as you enter. Others rest on trucks, waiting sepulture, in its closets. They are so plentiful, and so seemingly despised by the officials who handle them, that insensibly the spectator loses his respect for them, and forgets that the possession of a few such bags would realize his life-long dreams of material prosperity.

These bags are the product of custom duties. Every day, between three and four o'clock, a little hand-cart, ark shaped, painted red, covered over and locked, may be seen traveling up Wall street, propelled by two stout men, and wending its way from the Custom house to the Sub-Treasury. There are but two men ostensibly engaged in pushing the little red cart, but a careful observer may discover two other men, likewise stout and ever watchful, who lounge up the sidewalk on a parallel line. They look as if they carried revolvers. In these days, when the customs duties are heavy, the little red ark sometimes contains $750,000—a prize worth the attention of robbers. But it is never attacked. When it reaches the Sub-Treasury, it is unlocked, and the bags handed in. Each bag is then counted by the Sub-Treasurer's clerks. They count with both hands, and with a rapidity and accuracy truly wonderful. They seem to possess a sort of instinct—the product of long experience—which enables them to discover a false coin at a glance. Pieces which have split open, the inside filled out, the cavity filled with iridium, the two halves soldered together, and remilled on the edges, are so like genuine coins that the best judges are often deceived by them. They weigh precisely the same as genuine coins. They are precisely the right size. They have the ring of pure gold. Their external surface throughout is gold. Yet these counterfeits are detected at a glance by the experienced clerks of the Treasury. It used to be said of Mr. E. H. Birdsale, the present cashier, that when he was clerk he could, in emptying a $5000 bag, at the first dip of his hands into the glittering mass, pick out all the spurious coins.

There is a quantity of silver in the Sub-Treasury, in bags and kegs, but after one has been handling millions of gold, it seems a poor sort of metal. A silver closet holds $40,000; there are a few dozen of them full to repletion. Within a short time considerable amounts of silver have arrived here from New Orleans—the product of duties or of the confiscation act. Many of the coins are rusted and dingy, and it is shrewdly suspected that during the dark days of rebel supremacy, these pieces slept the sleep of the just in damp and underground holes. One of the New Orleans banks is known to have buried its coin when confederate shin-plasters made their appearance, and the plan was doubtless adopted by many private individuals.

Of paper money the Sub-Treasury in New York holds some forty millions. Of this over eighteen millions are in fives, tens and twenties, and are piled on a shelf in the vault. As nearly as we could calculate by the eye, there is about a cord and a half of this money. It might fill a two-horse hay-cart. When a paymaster calls with a draft, the clerks give him a trunk full or a bushel basket. The notes are legal tenders and National Bank notes mixed indiscriminately—some old and worn, showing evidence of long service, others new and crisp.

The larger notes, $100's, $500's, and $1000's, have the honor of closet room. There is a closet there which contains half-a-dozen millions. Lying on the top of a mountain of these notes was a package which we examined. It could easily have been put in the coat pocket and carried away without inconvenience. It contained one thousand $500 legal tenders, and was, therefore, worth just half a million. But for the contempt for money which the inspection of these enormous sums is apt for the moment to inspire, one might have coveted this little package. How many able and successful men toil for a life-time in the hope of acquiring just such a parcel!

Seven-thirty coupons are so small that you can easily put $50,000 worth in your waist-coat pocket; and as to Ten-forty coupons, a pinch of them, between finger and thumb, is a small fortune. These little bits of paper, no bigger than apothecaries' labels, or half the size of a five-cent note in fractional currency, represent sums varying from $25 in gold to $365 in currency. As interest-day comes round, they pour in from all quarters—from the far West and the lately rebellious South; from Germany and Holland; from crowned heads in Europe; and from industrious washer-women in this country. To examine and sort these papers is no slight task. One of the richest men in New York is said to keep his daughters, married and single, busy cutting off coupons for a whole afternoon and evening before interest-day; when the cutting is done, the eldest daughter herself sweeps out the room to intercept waifs and estrays.

The vaults of the Sub-Treasury may really be said to defy burglars. In the first place they are built on thirty-five feet of solid masonry, so that digging under them and working by a tunnel to the floor would be impracticable. Then they stand in the main hall of the Treasury building, in which a watch is always kept, and into which it would require no small labor to intrude after nightfall. The vaults themselves are iron chambers, with iron floors, roofs, and walls. The latter are two feet thick, and hollow; the hollow being filled with musket balls, which defy the burglar's drill. Four doors, of massive iron, close the entrance to the vault; each door is locked with two locks, so that eight different keys of peculiar mechanism are required to open sesame.

We remember the Sub-Treasury when Mr. Cisco was first appointed its chief, in two rooms of the Assay Building—a quiet, retired establishment, in which nobody spoke above a whisper, and a few clerks leisurely counted their gold, and demurely paid the salary of the President and other public functionaries. People went there to chat with the Sub-Treasurer—a man of leisure and considerable information—and twice a year called to collect their interest. It was so slow and so old-fogy an institution that even the small Wall street bankers used to laugh at it.

In these days the Sub-Treasurer at New York has his grip on the throat of nearly all the bankers in the country, and we notice that none of them are disposed even to smile when the name of Mr. Van Dyck is mentioned.—Harper's Weekly.

TRUST IN GOD AND DO THE RIGHT.

Courage, brother! do not stumble,
Though thy path is dark as night;
There's a star to guide the humble—
Trust in God and do the right.

Let the road be long and dreary,
And its ending out of sight;
Foot it bravely—strong or weary,
Trust in God and do the right.

Perish "policy" and cunning,
Perish all that fears the light;
Whether losing, whether winning,
Trust in God and do the right.

Trust no party, church, or faction,
Trust no "leaders" in the fight,
But in every word and action
Trust in God and do the right.

Trust no forms of guilty passion,
Fiends can look like angels bright;
Trust no custom, school, or fashion,
Trust in God and do the right.

Some will hate thee, some will love thee,
Some will flatter, some will slight;
Cease from man, and look above thee,
Trust in God and do the right.

Simple rule and safest guiding,
Inward peace and inward light;
Star upon our path abiding,
Trust in God and do the right.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

FIFTEEN FOLLIES.

1. To think that the more a man eats the fatter and stronger he will become.

2. To believe that the more hours children are confined in study at school the faster they learn.

3. To conclude that if exercise is good for the health, the more violent and exhausting it is, the more good is done.

5. To imagine that every hour taken from sleep is one gained.

5. To act on the presumption that the smallest room in the house is large enough to sleep in.

6. To argue that whatever remedy causes one to feel immediately better is good for the system without regard to ulterior effects.

7. To commit an act which is felt in itself to be prejudicial, hoping that somehow or other it may be done in your case with impunity.

8. To advise another to take a remedy which you have not tried yourself, or without making special inquiry whether all the conditions are alike.

9. To eat without an appetite, or to continue to eat after it has been satisfied, merely to gratify the taste.

10. To eat a hearty supper for the pleasure experienced while it is passing down the throat, at the expense of a whole night of disturbed sleep, and a weary waking in the morning.

11. To remove a portion of the clothing immediately after exercise, when the most stupid drayman in New York knows that if he does not put a cover on his horse the moment he ceases work in winter, he will lose him in a few days at most of pneumonia.

12. To contend that because the dirtiest children in the street, or on the highway, are healthy and hearty, therefore, it is healthy to be dirty; forgetting that the continuous exposure to the pure out-door air, in joyous and unrestrained activity, is such a powerful agency for health, for those who thus live are well in spite of rags and dirt.

13. To presume that because the injuries resulting from the indiscretion, exposure and intemperances of youth are not immediate, they can be practiced with impunity.

14. To believe that warm air is necessarily impure, or that pure cool air is necessarily more healthy than the confined air of a close and crowded vehicle; the latter, at most, can only produce fainting and nausea; while entering a conveyance after walking briskly, lowering a window, thus, while still, exposed to a draft, will give a cold infallibly, or an attack of pleurisy or pneumonia, that will cause weeks and months of suffering, if not death within four days.

15. To "remember the Sabbath day," by working harder and later on Saturday than on any other day of the week, with a view of sleeping late next morning, and staying at home all day to rest, conscience being quieted by the plea of "not feeling very well."—Arcana.

SLEEPING.

Inability to sleep is the first step towards madness, while sound and sufficient sleep imparts a vigor to the mind, and a feeling of wellness and activity to the body, which are beyond price. To be able to go to sleep within a few minutes of reaching the pillow, and to sleep soundly until the morning breaks, and to do this for weeks and months together, is perfectly delightful. How such a thing may be brought about, and kept up, as a general rule, is certainly well worth knowing, and will be appreciated, even by those who have lost but a half night's sleep. The reader can study out the reasons of the suggestions at his leisure.

Both in city and country the chamber should be on the second, third or higher floor; its windows should face the east or south, so as to have the drying and purifying influences of the blessed sunlight; there should be no curtains to the bed or windows, nor should there be any hanging garments or other woven fabrics except the clothes worn during the day, each article of which should be spread out by itself, for the purpose of thorough airing. There should be no carpet on the floor of a sleeping-room, except a single strip by the side of the bed, to prevent a sudden shock by the warm foot coming in contact with a cold floor. Carpets collect dust and dirt and filth and dampness, and are the invention of laziness to save labor and hide uncleanness.

Ordinarily, mattrasses of shucks, chaff, straw or curled hair, are best to sleep upon. For old persons and those of feeble vitality, there is nothing better than a clean feather bed. No one can sleep well if cold. Have as little covering as possible from just above the knees upwards, but cover the legs and feet abundantly, for by keeping them warm, the blood is withdrawn from the brain, and to that extent, dreaming is prevented.

There should be no standing fluid of any description, nor a particle of food or vegetation or any decayable substance allowed to remain in a bed-room for a moment; nor should any light be kept burning, except from necessity, as all these things corrupt the air which is breathed while sleeping.

The entire furniture of a chamber should be the bed, two or three wooden chairs, a table and a bureau or chest of drawers. Every article of bed-clothing should be thrown over a chair or table by itself, and the mattress remain exposed, until the middle of the afternoon; not later, lest the damps of the evening should impregnate them. From morning until afternoon of every sunshiny day, the windows of the chamber should be hoisted fully. The fire-place should be kept open, at least during the night, thus affording a draft from the crevices of doors and windows. As foul air is lightest in warm weather, it is best that the sash should be let down at the top half an inch or more, and the lower one elevated several inches; by this means the pure and cool air from without enters and drives the heated impure air upwards and outwards.

In a very cold room, without a good draught or ventilation, carbonic acid being generated by the sleeper, becomes heavy and falls to the floor; this gas has no nourishment for the lungs, and to breathe it wholly for two minutes, is to die; it is this which causes suffocation in descending some wells. In summer it goes to the ceiling, in winter to the floor; hence it is more important that a sleeping room should have a very gentle current of air in winter than in summer.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet, else refreshing sleep is impossible; but spend the last five or ten minutes before bed-time, at least in fire-time of year, in drying and heating the feet before the fire, with the stockings off. Indians and hunters sleep with their feet towards the camp-fire.

Different persons require different amounts of sleep, according to age, sex, and occupation. Nature must make the apportionment, and will always do it wisely and safely; and there is only one method of doing it. Do not sleep a moment in the day, or, if essential do not exceed ten minutes, for this will refresh more than if you sleep an hour or longer. Go to bed at a regular early hour, not later than ten, and get up as soon as you wake of yourself in the morning; follow this up for a week or two, and if there is no actual disease, nature will always arouse the sleeper as soon as enough sleep has been taken to repair the expenditures of the preceding day, a little more or less in proportion to the amount of bodily and mental effort made the day before. Commonly there will be but a few minutes' difference for weeks together. It is not absolutely necessary to get up and dress, but only to avoid a second nap. Sometimes it is advantageous to remain in bed until the feeling of tiredness, with which most persons are familiar, has passed from the limbs. It is safest and best for all to take breakfast before going out of doors in the morning, whether in summer or winter, most especially in new, flat or damp countries, as a preventive of chill and fever.

If from any cause you get up during the night, throw open the bed-clothes, so as to give the bedding an airing, and also with the hands give the whole body a good rubbing for a minute or two; the effect will be an immediate feeling of refreshment, and a more speedy falling to sleep again. This was Franklin's remedy in case of restlessness at night.

When it is remembered that one third of our whole time is spent in our chambers, and that only uncorrupted air can complete the process of digestion and assimilation and purify the blood, it is most apparent that the utmost pains should be taken to secure the breathing of a pure atmosphere during the hours of sleep; and that the most diligent attention in this regard is indispensable to high health. —Hall's Journal of Health.

WATER.

As a remedial agent water is almost invaluable. It has been for only a few years that a person scorched with fever has been allowed to use cold water. He was formerly dosed with "teas," and if allowed water at all, it had to be boiled before he could quench his raging thirst. What noxious properties were removed by boiling, we are unable to say, but we know, from experience, that it has none of the refreshing properties of the original article. Now no physician thinks of absolutely prohibiting its use, and if he dd, he would be voted insane almost unanimously, yet among the people the relics of the old practice exist, and you will find them making use of all experiments to avoid it. Nature, generally, has a good idea of what she wants, and when she cries out for water she does not mean penny-royal, catnip, sage, or saffron, and will not allow to them be substituted for the unadulterated article.

Go into the narrow streets of our cities and you will find a large number of persons infected with this fear of water. From their appearance you would think water was one of the most costly articles, and entirely beyond the reach of any except the millionaire. They may apply it sparingly once a week, but oftener than that is very doubtful. Looking at the number of "saloons" and their frequenters, you would think it the most deadly poison known to science, and that it should be avoided by all the means in our power. You find men and women willing to drink almost anything rather than the beverage God provides for them. They want something to "warm them up," or "cool them off," or they "felt sick," or "had the cramp," or the "head ache," and innumerable excuses to account for their conduct. The verdict of the coroner's jury, that a toper died of brandy and water on the basin, would seem to be practically true, although the physician insisted upon brandy being omitted.—Methodist Protestant.

CURE FOR DYSPEPSIA.—I have been troubled with the dyspepsia for five years, most of the time. Have tried almost every thing that I could hear of, and never found any thing to help me until about three months ago.

Take three quarters of a teaspoonful of sulphur, and one quarter of a teaspoonful of cream tartar, and mix with molasses or sugar, as you like. Take every other morning until you find relief. This is a simple medicine, and does not cost much.

ANNA M. MOULTON.

RECIPE FOR MAKING TOGUS BREAD.—Three cups of sweet milk, one cup of sour; three cups of Indian meal, one of flour. Half cup of molasses, half teaspoonful saleratus, and a little salt. Put it in a two quart tin pail, secure the cover on, and steam it three hours. Try it. It is a very good bread.

For the World's Crisis.

O, COME!

TUNE—"When Johnny comes marching home."

I hear a voice which gently calls, O come! O come!
I hear it, 'tis to one and all, O come! O come!
I'll gently take you by the hand,
And lead you through to Canaan's land,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come. [Repeat.]

O, cling not to earth's paltry toys, but come! O come!
I'll lead you on to richer joys, O come! O come!
You there may walk the streets of gold,
The gates of pearl you shall behold,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

O, do not linger by the way, but come! O come!
Grasp not the flowers that fade away, but come! O come!
You there shall see more beauteous flowers
Than ever bloomed in earthly bowers,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

Though earthly friends may bid you stay, O come! O come!
While there is time, O don't delay, but come! O come!
Come pluck the fruit from life's fair tree!
Come eat and live eternally,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

O, would you see those loved ones dear, O come! O come!
And with them dwell thro' endless years, O come! O come!
Come meet them on the other shore;
Come see them as in days of yore,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

Come ere you hear the word, depart! O come! O come!
Come one, come all, give Christ your heart; O come! O come!
With sighs and tears I bid you come,
Now don't delay—come while there's room,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

APOSTOLIC DOCTRINE.

"The subject of your periodical is an intensely solemn and affecting one," writes an esteemed correspondent. But for the deep conviction of this truth our periodical would never have seen the light, and sought the suffrages of Christian men; and the more we study the subject the more we are convinced of its solemnity and importance. That the Lord Jesus Christ will return in person to his own world, and find it in a state of open rebellion against his authority; that this return may be at any moment, without further warning; and that it will most certainly be before the earth shall be filled with truth and righteousness, are statements so strange and startling to the majority of his disciples, that they refuse to believe them, and consider them only as fit subjects for ridicule. Whatever degree of scriptural clearness on the usually received evangelical doctrines may characterize those who hold these derided views, here, at least, it is at once assumed they are in error. Our soundness on the great themes of sacrifice, reconciliation, justification, and eternal life, is not called in question, but when we teach that the coming of the Lord precedes the subjugation of revolted humanity to the holy sceptre of heaven, we are at once set down as fanatics or dreamers, or as men with "carnal views," whose perception of the analogy of faith is deficient, and whose zeal for the conversion of the world has been cooled by a misapprehension or misinterpretation of the sacred writings.

Well, we can bear all these utterances with perfect equanimity, at any rate with patience, so far as the personal element is concerned, for if we are in error, most assuredly it is unconsciously and unwillingly; but supremely concerned as we are for the honor of what appears to us divine truth invested with profound solemnity, we crave arrest of judgment until we have once more given a reason of the hope that is in us. We ask no forced or fanatical interpretation, nay, the peculiarity and the glory of our doctrine is, that we ask NO interpretation AT ALL—but just the acceptance of the words of Scripture in their plain, obvious, grammatical sense, such as the same words receive in the ordinary speech and writings of men. We boldly affirm that "INTERPRETATION" has darkened councils, obscured revelation, bewildered the church, perplexed "theology," and done an enormous amount of mischief which nothing short of the advent of JESUS himself can counteract. We do not apologize for this statement, though it may seem extravagant to those who believe that we are on the high road to millennial blessedness through the diligent use of existing ecclesiastical agency; for we are as fully convinced of its truth as we are of the indisputable fact, that whatever the cause may be, counsel is darkened, revelation is obscured, the church is bewildered, and theology is perplexed. The logical character of the inference we draw from these broad premises may be very easily denied, but the premises themselves are so deplorably notorious, that it were a waste of time to call a single witness; and the doctrine that INTERPRETATION is the terrible mischief-maker may be vehemently resented, but if it were not distressingly painful—when one thinks of how it has made the Bible a riddle—it would be rarely amusing to collect the "views," and "opinions," and "thoughts," and "ideas," of the devout and excellent men who have spent many precious years in efforts to interpret the plainest book in the world. When the unhappy period arrived in the history of Christendom, at which the Bible began to be considered as speaking in a non-natural sense, the true doctrine of the Messiah's relationship to the entire human race began to be shorn of its glory, scholastic theology began to usurp the place of the holy oracles, and dismal and horrible inferences, totally repugnant to the entire genius of revelation, began to be accepted as a part of that revelation. These are facts, and though facts may be accounted for, they cannot be reasoned away, and should not be ignored.

Let us then go to the fountain head, and hear what inspired men say about the coming of the Lord. Apostolic teaching on this momentous subject should be final with the modern church, and if, while believing that the second advent precedes and introduces the long-looked for era of human blessedness, we find ourselves in the glorious company of the apostles, we can well afford to be in the minority, whatever temporary unpleasantness may attach to that fact.

1. The coming of the Lord in relation to patience. Neither the prospect of death, nor that of a peaceful world, subdued by the doctrine of the cross, is set before believers as an argument for patience, but the return of the Lord is used for that purpose. "In your patience possess ye your souls. . . . . And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . . Watch ye, therefore, and pray also, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." (Luke 21: 19, 27, 23, 36.) Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, remembers gratefully their "patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ," and how they "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." (1 Thes. 1: 3, 9, 10.) Again, in his second letter to the church, he says, "We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations which ye endure; which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer; seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven." (2 Thes. 1: 4–7.) These disciples endured persecutions patiently, because they looked for the return of their blessed Savior, and the establishment of his glorious kingdom. And thus the apostle lovingly prays for them, "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (chap. 3: 5). Paul charges Timothy to "follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness," and that he "keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Tim. 6: 11, 14.)

Patience is also among the graces which Titus is charged to inculcate among his hearers, and the glorious appearing of the Savior is the goal on which their eye is to rest. (Tit. 2: 2, 43.) "For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10: 36, 37.) "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." (James 5: 7, 8.) Patience is also among the graces named by Peter as qualifying for an abundant entrance into the Savior's kingdom (2 Peter 1: 8–11); and it is needless to remark that the setting up of the kingdom is always made dependent upon the coming of the Lord. Death and heaven are the popular ideas of the coming of the Lord, and the establishment of the kingdom; but the popular ideas are not the scriptural doctrines.

2. The coming of the Lord in relation to hope. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" (1 Thes. 2: 19.) "But I would not have ye to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others that have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thes. 4: 13, 14.) Paul tells Timothy (1: 1) that the "Lord Jesus Christ is our hope," that is to say, his advent, as is quite clear from his words to Titus (2: 13), "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. (1 John 3: 2, 3.) "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 1: 13.)

3. The coming of the Lord in relation to watchfulness. "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. . . Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."—(Matt. 24: 42, 44.) See also Matt. 25: 13; Mark 13: 32–37; Luke 21: 34–36.

4. The coming of the Lord in relation to Christian labor. One of the common objections to the pre-millennial advent is—that those who believe it are not likely to be zealous in evangelistic or missionary labors. If this objection mean merely that they do not exhibit their christian zeal and devotedness as the result of the conviction that to the church has been entrusted the "conversion of the world," we accept it cheerfully; but the objection, tested by the grievously misunderstood "analogy of faith," shapes itself into a powerful argument in favor of the doctrine against which it is brought forward. We have not space here to enter into this matter; enough at present if we prove from Scripture that the coming of the Lord was used by Jesus and his apostles as the great incentive to holy zeal; our opponents will find it a hard task to prove that it is not. And that which it was eighteen centuries ago it must, from the nature of the case, be at the present hour, if it be understood and realized as it was in the apostolic day. The parable of the Pounds (Luke 19) is clearly in point.

"Occupy TILL I COME," is the great lesson of the dispensation under which we live. These brief words embrace every item of christian duty, and declare the most powerful motive of christian fidelity. Within the whole range of thought there is nothing equal to a settled expectation of the Lord's return as an impulse to consecration. Even the oft-repeated statement that our labors are to issue in the evangelization of the entire race falls immeasurably short of the advent of Jesus as an argument for diligence in the Lord's work. Why, the return of Jesus is literally every thing now, for every thing depends upon it. There is no putting down of rampant evil, no cleansing of the hideous abominations of the world, no filling the earth with truth and righteousness, no fulfilling of a thousand outstanding predictions, no resurrection of the saints from among the dead, no glorification of departed believers, and no public recognition of God's annointed king till then. The return of the King, who was murdered by his subjects, to take possession of his dominions, reward his friends and punish his foes, is the one great, comprehensive, and all-embracing thought which meets us in the pages of prophets, evangelists, and apostles. Instead of glancing faintly on the eye here and there, as we look across the broad fields of revelation, it bathes those fields with celestial light and burnishes them with heavenly glory. Just listen to this—it is the word of an apostle to a preacher, both of whom were undeniably "millenarians,"—"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) No one can deny that Timothy is here urged to earnestness as a christian minister within view of his Lord's return; and the noble Paul himself, when about to go to rest after many a well-fought field, says,—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." In one word, the coming of the Lord, the return of Jesus, was the theme, and thought, and hope, and joy of the early christians; it was, and is, emphatically APOSTOLIC DOCTRINE.—The Rainbow.

CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

Was it the true or false church that fled into the wilderness? All agree that the wilderness state of the church was during the 1260 years of the persecution of the saints. Now to get a right understanding of the history of the true and false churches during this period, we must attend carefully to the symbols by which they are represented, and also to the character of those symbols.

One church is symbolized (Dan. 7) by eyes and mouth in a horn, during the 1260 years, speaking great things and wearing out the saints. In Rev. 13, we find this same church introduced, or represented by a mouth given to a leopard beast, speaking great things, also making war on the saints. In Rev. 17, the same character is introduced by a woman on a scarlet-colored beast, drunken with the blood of saints. Also the same character is symbolized in Rev. 6 by Death on the pale horse, and is killing by all manner of tortures.

The other church is represented as being in a straitened condition, persecuted, afflicted, tormented. One is embraced in the arms of powerful government, with the arms of the government to support her; the other is the sole object of persecution by this combined power.

Now, I ask, which would be most likely to flee from the dragon under the circumstances? Hear what the Savior says to his church:—"When ye see the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, then let him that is in Judea flee to the mountains." Who did flee; the apostate church, called the abomination of the earth, or the true church, which had no power to resist? But did not the Catholic church flee to the leopard beast to save her from the dragon? If so, she fled to an avowed agent of the dragon; for the dragon gave the leopard beast his seat, and great authority to carry out the very principles of the dragon in warring against the saints.

No. The church fled from the dragon's agent; church and state united an abominable, desolating power, and she was nourished a thousand, two hundred and threescore days from the face of the serpent; or endured in spite of the serpent, and those days were shortened for the elect's sake. But was not the Catholic church the true church when she went into the wilderness, or when the wilderness state began? No. She was the abomination with the dragon's agency set up.

To relieve this matter from any doubt, go with me to the fourth seal, and discover all the features of the little horn power, the abomination of desolation, and the woman on the scarlet beast, embodied in the symbol of death on the pale horse. Here are church and state united, doing precisely the work of the leopard beast, etc. Hear the redeemed church (symbolized by the eagle) say, "Come and see!" What is she pointing out? or to what would she direct our attention? Ans. To death on the pale horse, killing with hunger and with death, and with the beasts of the earth; to the little horn with eyes and mouth wearing out the saints of the Most High; to the leopard beast making war on the saints; to the scarlet beast drunken with the blood of saints. Here, then, is the suffering church of Christ for 1260 years, symbolized by an eagle borne (on "eagle's wings") away from the dragon by flight, while the apostate church is lifted to the very seat of God by a chosen agent of the dragon.

To this last symbol, unlike the others, we have both churches symbolized; one embodied in the symbol of death on the pale horse, the other by an eagle; one having all power and killing, the other, according to the Savior's direction, fleeing from or striving to avoid the slaughter.

Now as the woman symbolizing a church had two wings of a great eagle given her to fly from the dragon, and as God has symbolized the true church during this same period by an eagle; and as the false church under the dragon's agency had the power and was seeking to destroy the saints, is it not a fact that the true church fled into the wilderness while the false church was speeding their flight with sword, flame, captivity, and spoil?

Again. As the Catholic church is symbolized by death on the pale horse, killing; and as the true church is symbolized by the eagle, and being killed, does it not follow that the true church is the fleeing party, and the false church the pursuing party under the dragon's agency? So I believe, and so I speak.

For the World's Crisis.

SATAN'S LIES.

We have been looking for new developments and wonderful manifestations, both from God and the Devil, but especially in Satan's department. He is very active and zealous just now, for he knows his time is short. How cunning he is! It seems sometimes as though he had stolen an angel's robe to cover his hideous form; and, like the wolf in sheep's clothing, he gets into the flock and snathes his victims here and there. He marks out a road just as near the gospel path as he can get it (and have it end in perdition), and strews it with artificial flowers: then stands and with ghastly smiles and grimaces beckons to the inhabitants of earth to walk in it. He cried, "The end is not yet," as long as he thought that cry would deceive, but when the signs thickened so fast he saw that people would believe, he changed his tune. Now he says, "You're right about the time. The kingdom is soon to be established, and you are going to have a glorious time. But you are a little mistaken about the manner of its coming. You look for a literal reign; it will be a spiritual one. There will be peace, harmony and prosperity all over the world."

This is the devil's sugar-coated pill; and I have said for a long time that the churches would take the pill. It agrees so well with their own theology, why shouldn't they? They have advocated a time of prosperity and glory this side the coming of Christ, and have sung the lullaby of "Peace and safety," until they are nearly ready for this last lie of the devil. Like the Jews, they mistake the nature of the kingdom that is to come. They stumble over the same stumbling stone. Will their fall be like theirs? What prospect, or what signs they can see of the conversion of this wicked world, I cannot tell.

When the Book declares that "wicked men . . . . shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," how can men, in the face of that declaration, and with the present condition of society before them, continue to say, they will grow better and better, until a sinner shall be a stranger in the land? Christ says, "The tares and wheat will grow together till the harvest," and the harvest is the end of the world. How do men dare, with the Bible and the words of Christ before them, stand up and say that the wheat shall increase until it shall cover all the ground and leave no room for tares, and so the earth shall become, even while time lasts, as the garden of the Lord? It is strange! and yet not so very strange after all. I see no reason why those who believe and cherish the old traditions and lies that were first brought to light in the hot-bed of Paganism, should not be carried away by the last edition of Pagan delusions.

I never saw the necessity of renouncing the visionary fables of the old heathen philosophers more than I have of late. Catholicism was Paganism baptized or whitewashed.—Protestantism is Catholicism reformed. But through all the baptisms and reformations they have kept the old Pagan root. And what a crop the root is producing in these last days! What bundles of tares to be gathered that have sprung from the old germ! Oh! when I look round the world, and see what error, what superstition, what horrid delusions and blasphemous doctrines, have grown out of that "cunningly devised fable," immortal-soulism, I do not wonder that Satan began and will end his great conspiracy on earth with that lie. He knew that he could accomplish more, and destroy more of the proud and rebellious children of Adam, by making them believe that they "should not surely die," than in any other way. Without that belief, he never could have drawn them into his last edition of lying wonders, the last act in the drama, and masterpiece of the whole—modern Spiritualism.

But what has immortal-soulism to do with the doctrine of a temporal Millennium? A great deal. It is not strange that men who believe that good people jump out of their shells and fly away to some blissful region (they cannot tell where), to receive at once their final reward, should talk about a time of peace and prosperity while time lasts; the Bible so plainly teaches that the earth shall be filled with God's glory, and the will of the Lord be done on earth as it is done in heaven. They have lost sight of the inheritance in their wanderings in the wilderness, and as they do not believe that the righteous and meek will inherit the earth after the coming of Christ, of course the good time promised must come before that event takes place.

Let us analyze this hope. They think God's people, some time in the future, are going to have a grand time, right here among the thistles and thorns, with the curse still resting upon the earth. Their fathers and mothers and friends, many of them, in their graves, and themselves subject to pain and death. Where is the glory? They cannot meet the loved ones who have died, without shutting their eyes to all the peace and prosperity on earth, and bidding farewell to the Millennial glory, and flying away "beyond the bounds of time and space" to nowhere; and when they have found them they will be spirits lighter than air, whom they never can clasp in a loving embrace. And there they are to have their reward, with their spirit friends, a spirit Jesus, and a sky kingdom!

Away with such visionary hopes without any substance. It is like trying to warm ourselves by the picture of a fire. We want the real fire—the substance of things hoped for—the evidence of real things not seen. We cannot cast an anchor in the sky; there is nothing to hold it. It must reach land to hold our ship in the coming storm. Thank God! we can cast it upon land in the new earth—the paradise of God.

I see no safety in these last days of peril; no escape from the tide of error, the flood of delusions that are about to deluge the world, or from the power of the spirits of devils working miracles, but to stand on the Bible platform, and believe that the dead "know not any thing." The dragon is abroad! He has been to the kings of earth and spread before them visions of future glory. He visits Napoleon and tells him if he can revive the old Latin, or Pagan form of government, he can rule the world. He offers the kingdoms on the same conditions they were offered to Christ. Who will fall down and worship him? Those who worship the dead, and acknowledge them as their counsellors and gods, are doing it, for their gods are demons with stolen names. Will they possess the kingdom? It is possible that after God's children have all left the earth, and are hid in the chambers, they may have it for a little while, just to let them see how they can manage it without any God or goodness in it. But with it they will have demons, despair, anguish and death.

See the monster dragon! traveling over the earth, deceiving the nations, poisoning the people with his loathsome slime, encircling them in his folds, whispering horrid blasphemies into their ears, binding them into bundles to be burned. Who can deliver them from his power? None but Christ. And if they reject him, and will not have him to reign over them, but choose a ruler who is, like themselves, a rebel to the government of Christ, and strive to build up kingdoms of their own, their house will be left unto them desolate.

The sifting time is coming. The servants of God are being sealed. Satan is marking his victims. Soon the separation will take place. Let us have no mark of the Beast, for if we have the angels will pass us by. Let us not love a lie. "For without are dogs and sorcerers . . . and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." May we find a refuge in the coming storm, and a home in the kingdom at last.

THE TWO LITTLE KIDS.

These were feeding in the door-yard, when suddenly their mistress heard them coming on a fast run, and bleating as they ran. She suspected something wrong, and opened the door and took her seat upon the sill, when both the kids leaped into her arms and nestled down into her lap. The cause of their fright was a large dog trotting through the yard.

As the lady related the circumstance with moistened eyes, this thought flashed upon me: Jesus is the only refuge in this land of enemies! My heart yearned for the poor woman herself, as I reflected upon the enemy into whose hands she had fallen,—even Spiritualism. O could she have been as wise as her kids to distinguish an enemy, and have fled to the arms of Jesus, and there been shielded from this "strong delusion," she might have been saved alive, and her fatherless children. Once she loved Jesus, and obeyed him in baptism; but she wandered from the "Good Shepherd," and was overtaken by the "wolf," and became his prey. O how painful the thought. How dreadful the work of this spoiler now in the land. No safe place but in the arms of Jesus. And no knowing that we are even there but by a plain "thus saith the Lord," so near does the counterfeit come to the true.

The Lord has been pleased to graciously hear our prayers, and send faithful servants among us, to again warn this people, and to ripen the tares, and, peradventure, induce one heart to desire to obey God. O bless his name for these tokens of his love! Our work seems closing up here, and our eye is unto God for a new field of labor.

* * * * * * *

Months have rolled away, and again the Lord has sent his servant to speak unto us "all the words of this life." The precious soul who was induced in his previous visit to desire to obey God in baptism, now went forward, accompanied by another.

It was a plesant scene, on Friday afternoon, in presence of a score of witnesses, upon the green shore, beside the calm lake, warmed by the clear sun, to see these meek, frail ones, who had counted the cost, trembling under the cross, yet with a fixed purpose to bear it, go forward and confess Christ before men, in the hope that he, in his turn, will confess them before his Father and the holy angels.

O, if there be a scene on which angels delight to look on this earth, we think it is such a one as this—a deliberate renunciation of one world to care for the things of another—a burial to "this present world," and a resurrection to "the world to come." How blessed the sight! How wise the actors! How glorious will be the results! "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

"HE SHALL BUILD MY CITY."

Saith the Lord of Cyrus, "He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives."—Isa. 45: 13. That Cyrus did let go the captive Jews, all admit; and now it is expresaly declared of the same Cyrus, "HE shall build my city"; which was as literally accomplished by the same Cyrus, king of Persia, as that of letting go the captive Jews; for "the king of Babylon," having burned "all the houses of Jerusalem" (2 Kings 25: 9), when the Jews returned home, they had to build houses to live in; and when they had built houses enough for 49,697 persons to live in (Ezra 2: 1–70), Jerusalem was large enough to be called a city; hence, literally true, "HE shall build my city."

If it is unreasonable to suppose that such a large multitude of people would take their wives and small children to a desolate place, without a shelter to shield them from the pelting storms, we must conclude that they sent up men to build Jerusalem before this multitude went up. And that they did do this, it is expressly said, that they "came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city" (Ezra 2: 1), which they could not have done before Jerusalem was builded.

It is asked, "If Cyrus built Jerusalem, why do we find the Jews building the city in the reign of Artaxerxes?" We answer, the Artaxerxes of Ezra 4: 7, 11, was the son of Cyrus (Ezra 4: 15), the same king who was by Herodotus called Cambyses, and he informs us that when Cyrus commenced the Scythian war, "he delegated his authority to his son Cambyses," "to whom he also entrusted the kingdom." (Herod. b. 1, c. 208.) Thus we learn that before the death of Cyrus, his son was in "authority," as king of Persia. And that the letter was written to Artaxerxes before the death of Cyrus, we learn thus: They "hired counsellors against them to frustrate their purpose all the days of Cyrus king of Persia." (Ezra 4: 5.) Says Josephus, "Cyrus, who was busy about other wars, knew nothing of all this." Says Philo, "The building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes. Nor could Cyrus be seen, who was occupied in war with Tomgris.... Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus, left his son Joiahim in the dignity of high priest, and went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that in the next year, when he had become victorious, ... he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple." (See "Times of Daniel," page 235.) From the above, it would appear that the enemies of the Jews wrote to Artaxerxes about the time of the death of Darius Hystaspes, that is, B. C. 486; which being only the third year after the Jews returned home, they were yet employed in "building" their "city." (Ezra 4: 12.) In the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, that is, B. C. 480, Joshua went to Babylon to see Artaxerxes; and in the next year, that is, B. C. 479, Artaxerxes wrote forbidding the building of the temple. This being nine years after the Jews first commenced building their city, and seven years after the time their enemies found them employed in building it, we find that they had ample time to finish the building of Jerusalem before they ceased to build the temple. Hence, in the edict of Darius, there is not a word about building Jerusalem, but the temple. "Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place." Ezra 6: 7.

The Lord did not say that Cyrus should build the temple, but lay the foundation (Isa. 44: 28), which was literally accomplished, (Ezra 3: 10.) But he was to "build Jerusalem,—"he shall build my city." Hence, with the exception of the temple, which was completed in the sixth year of Darius (Ezra 6: 15), we in all the Bible never read of a single house ever being built at Jerusalem after the death of Cyrus. Therefore, it is literally true, "he shall build my city." And now, reader, remember this. They that place the building of the temple before the building of Jerusalem, charge the Lord with an untruth, for "Thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies; mine house shall be built in it saith the Lord" (Zech. 1: 16), which could not be done before Jerusalem was builded.

Josephus dates the building of Jerusalem before the laying of the foundation of the temple; for in allusion to what we find recorded in Ezra 3: 1–6, he says, "They performed their vows to God, and opposed the sacrifices that had been accustomed of old time, I mean this upon the rebuilding of their city."—Jose. Ant. b. 11, c. 1, s. 3. And since we read that "the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem," (Ezra 3: 1), which could not be done before enough of the city had been built to call it Jerusalem, I conclude that Josephus must be correct. But one thing is clear, the Lord hath said of Cyrus, "he shall build my city." Therefore, Daniel's sixty-nine weeks cannot be reckoned from a later epoch than his day; for if when he says Cyrus he means Artaxerxes, the Bible is no longer a revelation to me.

THE PROPER USE OF A METAPHOR.

We should follow our Lord's example in the use of metaphorical language, and then it is beautiful. It expresses much in few words. It is also as useful as beautiful. But abused, it becomes the language of Babel. I propose to inquire as to the use of the metaphor by our blessed Master and Teacher, in a few instances, and select from the very many instances in which he used it to illustrate the kingdom of heaven. And as we are commanded, and as Adventists should be strongly inclined to seek first the "kingdom of God," in all things, I will notice the use of a metaphor in reference to that subject of all subjects.

We must ever bear in mind that a metaphor (except in the mouth of a Babylonian) points to one clear and distinct corresponding reality. Otherwise, it is worse than useless. In his early teaching, Jesus first resorted to the use of parables, as he contemplated the awful wickedness of the generation to which he was sent. When his attention was called to the circumstance of slaying John the Baptist, it was a strong case. He says, "Unto what shall I liken this generation?" He says, "It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling upon their fellows, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented." No one will be likely to understand by this that the people of that generation had no other employment than alternate dancing and mourning. They are not so likely to confuse the use of metaphor, when applied to the things of this world, as when applied to the "things of the kingdom"; and in this latter case lies the field of our inquiry.

Although Jesus abounded in the use of the metaphor in his public teachings from the first, he did not adopt it as a special model of illustration so much until after he had encountered the most inveterate spite and opposition from the Scribes and Pharisees. When the use of this mode of language had become frequent, the disciples came to him with apparent anxiety, saying, "Why speakest thou unto them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." What a declaration! Dear reader, has that age or generation ever been so completely duplicated since that time, until now? I should delight to dwell on that point, but cannot now.

The occasion which brought out this anxious inquiry of the disciples, in reference to the use of parables, was the time they sat in the ship, and the multitude stood on the shore. It was the parable of the "sower sent forth to sow." The explanation was given to the disciples afterwards. It illustrated one general phase or feature of the kingdom, preparatory to its ultimate establishment, and occupies the age or dispensation now about to close. He then put forth another parable to his disciples, carrying forward a likeness of a phase of the kingdom just at the close of the age here alluded to. This parable, also, Jesus explains to his disciples. It is the parable of the "tares and wheat," very familiar to us all.

Then Jesus adds another parable, to show that, although this kingdom seems very small in the beginning, it will be exceeding great in the end. For a metaphor, he takes the grain of mustard seed. "Another parable spake he unto them: the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." Turn to this thirteenth chapter of Matthew, reader, and you will see the explanation given to several of these parables, and then more are added. The kingdom of heaven is likened unto treasure hid in a field; likened unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls; likened unto a net cast into the sea.

Then he closes by drawing the likeness of a model teacher, of which we are greatly in need these days. It is under the metaphor of "scribe." There must be a corresponding reality to this metaphor, as well as all the others. Jesus has not told us who it was, but gives us some of his characteristics, so that we shall know him should he be found. This "scribe" must have been a rare character, if found among his associates the Pharisees. I do not think he was found there. To give us a little clearer insight into the mystery, Jesus likens him to a "householder which bringeth forth out of his treasure things new and old." And as Jesus had previously asked his disciples if they "understood all these things," he had been giving, under such various emblems, that these constituted the treasure lodged with that householder.

I cannot pursue this thought further now, fearing my space would be exhausted before completing the illustration I had in view at the outset. My object is this,—let it be distinctly understood. The kingdom of heaven is presented to us under a variety of aspects, each distinctive feature under its appropriate emblem, and these emblems must not be confounded.

To illustrate: the parables noticed in the foregoing remarks are only a part of what we should like to notice; but are all we have space for now. Many of these were explained by Jesus, but not all. Suppose the disciples, at some social interview,—perhaps while the Master was taking necessary rest, or at his secret devotions and meditations,—the conversation turned upon that formidable grouping together of parables. We imagine the first utterance heard would be like this: "What a powerful discourse our Master gave us to-day! No wonder some of the hearers cried out in astonishment at its close." "But how many," says another, "in those Scribes and Pharisees

O, COME!

TUNE—"When Johnny comes marching home."

I hear a voice which gently calls, O come! O come!
I hear it, 'tis to one and all, O come! O come!
I'll gently take you by the hand,
And lead you through to Canaan's land,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come. [Repeat.]

O, cling not to earth's paltry toys, but come! O come!
I'll lead you on to richer joys, O come! O come!
You there may walk the streets of gold,
The gates of pearl you shall behold,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

O, do not linger by the way, but come! O come!
Grasp not the flowers that fade away, but come! O come!
You there shall see more beauteous flowers
Than ever bloomed in earthly bowers,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

Though earthly friends may bid you stay, O come! O come!
While there is time, O don't delay, but come! O come!
Come pluck the fruit from life's fair tree!
Come eat and live eternally,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

O, would you see those loved ones dear, O come! O come!
And with them dwell thro' endless years, O come! O come!
Come meet them on the other shore;
Come see them as in days of yore,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

Come ere you hear the word, depart! O come! O come!
Come one, come all, give Christ your heart; O come! O come!
With sighs and tears I bid you come,
Now don't delay—come while there's room,
Where all is joy, and Jesus bids you come.

APOSTOLIC DOCTRINE.

"The subject of your periodical is an intensely solemn and affecting one," writes an esteemed correspondent. But for the deep conviction of this truth our periodical would never have seen the light, and sought the suffrages of Christian men; and the more we study the subject the more we are convinced of its solemnity and importance. That the Lord Jesus Christ will return in person to his own world, and find it in a state of open rebellion against his authority; that this return may be at any moment, without further warning; and that it will most certainly be before the earth shall be filled with truth and righteousness, are statements so strange and startling to the majority of his disciples, that they refuse to believe them, and consider them only as fit subjects for ridicule. Whatever degree of scriptural clearness on the usually received evangelical doctrines may characterize those who hold these derided views, here, at least, it is at once assumed they are in error. Our soundness on the great themes of sacrifice, reconciliation, justification, and eternal life, is not called in question, but when we teach that the coming of the Lord precedes the subjugation of revolted humanity to the holy sceptre of heaven, we are at once set down as fanatics or dreamers, or as men with "carnal views," whose perception of the analogy of faith is deficient, and whose zeal for the conversion of the world has been cooled by a misapprehension or misinterpretation of the sacred writings.

Well, we can bear all these utterances with perfect equanimity, at any rate with patience, so far as the personal element is concerned, for if we are in error, most assuredly it is unconsciously and unwillingly; but supremely concerned as we are for the honor of what appears to us divine truth invested with profound solemnity, we crave arrest of judgment until we have once more given a reason of the hope that is in us. We ask no forced or fanatical interpretation, nay, the peculiarity and the glory of our doctrine is, that we ask NO interpretation AT ALL—but just the acceptance of the words of Scripture in their plain, obvious, grammatical sense, such as the same words receive in the ordinary speech and writings of men. We boldly affirm that "INTERPRETATION" has darkened councils, obscured revelation, bewildered the church, perplexed "theology," and done an enormous amount of mischief which nothing short of the advent of JESUS himself can counteract. We do not apologize for this statement, though it may seem extravagant to those who believe that we are on the high road to millennial blessedness through the diligent use of existing ecclesiastical agency; for we are as fully convinced of its truth as we are of the indisputable fact, that whatever the cause may be, counsel is darkened, revelation is obscured, the church is bewildered, and theology is perplexed. The logical character of the inference we draw from these broad premises may be very easily denied, but the premises themselves are so deplorably notorious, that it were a waste of time to call a single witness; and the doctrine that INTERPRETATION is the terrible mischief-maker may be vehemently resented, but if it were not distressingly painful—when one thinks of how it has made the Bible a riddle—it would be rarely amusing to collect the "views," and "opinions," and "thoughts," and "ideas," of the devout and excellent men who have spent many precious years in efforts to interpret the plainest book in the world. When the unhappy period arrived in the history of Christendom, at which the Bible began to be considered as speaking in a non-natural sense, the true doctrine of the Messiah's relationship to the entire human race began to be shorn of its glory, scholastic theology began to usurp the place of the holy oracles, and dismal and horrible inferences, totally repugnant to the entire genius of revelation, began to be accepted as a part of that revelation. These are facts, and though facts may be accounted for, they cannot be reasoned away, and should not be ignored.

Let us then go to the fountain head, and hear what inspired men say about the coming of the Lord. Apostolic teaching on this momentous subject should be final with the modern church, and if, while believing that the second advent precedes and introduces the long-looked for era of human blessedness, we find ourselves in the glorious company of the apostles, we can well afford to be in the minority, whatever temporary unpleasantness may attach to that fact.

1. The coming of the Lord in relation to patience. Neither the prospect of death, nor that of a peaceful world, subdued by the doctrine of the cross, is set before believers as an argument for patience, but the return of the Lord is used for that purpose. "In your patience possess ye your souls. . . . . And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with power and great glory. And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh. . . . . Watch ye, therefore, and pray also, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." (Luke 21: 19, 27, 23, 36.) Paul, writing to the Thessalonians, remembers gratefully their "patience of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ," and how they "turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and to wait for his Son from heaven." (1 Thes. 1: 3, 9, 10.) Again, in his second letter to the church, he says, "We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations which ye endure; which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer; seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you; and to you who are troubled rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven." (2 Thes. 1: 4–7.) These disciples endured persecutions patiently, because they looked for the return of their blessed Savior, and the establishment of his glorious kingdom. And thus the apostle lovingly prays for them, "And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ" (chap. 3: 5). Paul charges Timothy to "follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness," and that he "keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ." (1 Tim. 6: 11, 14.)

Patience is also among the graces which Titus is charged to inculcate among his hearers, and the glorious appearing of the Savior is the goal on which their eye is to rest. (Tit. 2: 2, 43.) "For ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." (Heb. 10: 36, 37.) "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient, stablish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." (James 5: 7, 8.) Patience is also among the graces named by Peter as qualifying for an abundant entrance into the Savior's kingdom (2 Peter 1: 8–11); and it is needless to remark that the setting up of the kingdom is always made dependent upon the coming of the Lord. Death and heaven are the popular ideas of the coming of the Lord, and the establishment of the kingdom; but the popular ideas are not the scriptural doctrines.

2. The coming of the Lord in relation to hope. "For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming?" (1 Thes. 2: 19.) "But I would not have ye to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others that have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." (1 Thes. 4: 13, 14.) Paul tells Timothy (1: 1) that the "Lord Jesus Christ is our hope," that is to say, his advent, as is quite clear from his words to Titus (2: 13), "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but we know that when he shall appear, we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is. And every man that hath this hope in him purifieth himself, even as he is pure. (1 John 3: 2, 3.) "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind, be sober, and hope to the end for the grace that is to be brought unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." (1 Pet. 1: 13.)

3. The coming of the Lord in relation to watchfulness. "Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come. . . Therefore be ye also ready, for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of Man cometh."—(Matt. 24: 42, 44.) See also Matt. 25: 13; Mark 13: 32–37; Luke 21: 34–36.

4. The coming of the Lord in relation to Christian labor. One of the common objections to the pre-millennial advent is—that those who believe it are not likely to be zealous in evangelistic or missionary labors. If this objection mean merely that they do not exhibit their christian zeal and devotedness as the result of the conviction that to the church has been entrusted the "conversion of the world," we accept it cheerfully; but the objection, tested by the grievously misunderstood "analogy of faith," shapes itself into a powerful argument in favor of the doctrine against which it is brought forward. We have not space here to enter into this matter; enough at present if we prove from Scripture that the coming of the Lord was used by Jesus and his apostles as the great incentive to holy zeal; our opponents will find it a hard task to prove that it is not. And that which it was eighteen centuries ago it must, from the nature of the case, be at the present hour, if it be understood and realized as it was in the apostolic day. The parable of the Pounds (Luke 19) is clearly in point.

"Occupy TILL I COME," is the great lesson of the dispensation under which we live. These brief words embrace every item of christian duty, and declare the most powerful motive of christian fidelity. Within the whole range of thought there is nothing equal to a settled expectation of the Lord's return as an impulse to consecration. Even the oft-repeated statement that our labors are to issue in the evangelization of the entire race falls immeasurably short of the advent of Jesus as an argument for diligence in the Lord's work. Why, the return of Jesus is literally every thing now, for every thing depends upon it. There is no putting down of rampant evil, no cleansing of the hideous abominations of the world, no filling the earth with truth and righteousness, no fulfilling of a thousand outstanding predictions, no resurrection of the saints from among the dead, no glorification of departed believers, and no public recognition of God's annointed king till then. The return of the King, who was murdered by his subjects, to take possession of his dominions, reward his friends and punish his foes, is the one great, comprehensive, and all-embracing thought which meets us in the pages of prophets, evangelists, and apostles. Instead of glancing faintly on the eye here and there, as we look across the broad fields of revelation, it bathes those fields with celestial light and burnishes them with heavenly glory. Just listen to this—it is the word of an apostle to a preacher, both of whom were undeniably "millenarians,"—"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom; preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort, with all long-suffering and doctrine." (2 Tim. 4: 1, 2.) No one can deny that Timothy is here urged to earnestness as a christian minister within view of his Lord's return; and the noble Paul himself, when about to go to rest after many a well-fought field, says,—"I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." In one word, the coming of the Lord, the return of Jesus, was the theme, and thought, and hope, and joy of the early christians; it was, and is, emphatically APOSTOLIC DOCTRINE.—The Rainbow.

CHURCH IN THE WILDERNESS.

Was it the true or false church that fled into the wilderness? All agree that the wilderness state of the church was during the 1260 years of the persecution of the saints. Now to get a right understanding of the history of the true and false churches during this period, we must attend carefully to the symbols by which they are represented, and also to the character of those symbols.

One church is symbolized (Dan. 7) by eyes and mouth in a horn, during the 1260 years, speaking great things and wearing out the saints. In Rev. 13, we find this same church introduced, or represented by a mouth given to a leopard beast, speaking great things, also making war on the saints. In Rev. 17, the same character is introduced by a woman on a scarlet-colored beast, drunken with the blood of saints. Also the same character is symbolized in Rev. 6 by Death on the pale horse, and is killing by all manner of tortures.

The other church is represented as being in a straitened condition, persecuted, afflicted, tormented. One is embraced in the arms of powerful government, with the arms of the government to support her; the other is the sole object of persecution by this combined power.

Now, I ask, which would be most likely to flee from the dragon under the circumstances? Hear what the Savior says to his church:—"When ye see the abomination of desolation standing in the holy place, then let him that is in Judea flee to the mountains." Who did flee; the apostate church, called the abomination of the earth, or the true church, which had no power to resist? But did not the Catholic church flee to the leopard beast to save her from the dragon? If so, she fled to an avowed agent of the dragon; for the dragon gave the leopard beast his seat, and great authority to carry out the very principles of the dragon in warring against the saints.

No. The church fled from the dragon's agent; church and state united an abominable, desolating power, and she was nourished a thousand, two hundred and threescore days from the face of the serpent; or endured in spite of the serpent, and those days were shortened for the elect's sake. But was not the Catholic church the true church when she went into the wilderness, or when the wilderness state began? No. She was the abomination with the dragon's agency set up.

To relieve this matter from any doubt, go with me to the fourth seal, and discover all the features of the little horn power, the abomination of desolation, and the woman on the scarlet beast, embodied in the symbol of death on the pale horse. Here are church and state united, doing precisely the work of the leopard beast, etc. Hear the redeemed church (symbolized by the eagle) say, "Come and see!" What is she pointing out? or to what would she direct our attention? Ans. To death on the pale horse, killing with hunger and with death, and with the beasts of the earth; to the little horn with eyes and mouth wearing out the saints of the Most High; to the leopard beast making war on the saints; to the scarlet beast drunken with the blood of saints. Here, then, is the suffering church of Christ for 1260 years, symbolized by an eagle borne (on "eagle's wings") away from the dragon by flight, while the apostate church is lifted to the very seat of God by a chosen agent of the dragon.

To this last symbol, unlike the others, we have both churches symbolized; one embodied in the symbol of death on the pale horse, the other by an eagle; one having all power and killing, the other, according to the Savior's direction, fleeing from or striving to avoid the slaughter.

Now as the woman symbolizing a church had two wings of a great eagle given her to fly from the dragon, and as God has symbolized the true church during this same period by an eagle; and as the false church under the dragon's agency had the power and was seeking to destroy the saints, is it not a fact that the true church fled into the wilderness while the false church was speeding their flight with sword, flame, captivity, and spoil?

Again. As the Catholic church is symbolized by death on the pale horse, killing; and as the true church is symbolized by the eagle, and being killed, does it not follow that the true church is the fleeing party, and the false church the pursuing party under the dragon's agency? So I believe, and so I speak.

SATAN'S LIES.

We have been looking for new developments and wonderful manifestations, both from God and the Devil, but especially in Satan's department. He is very active and zealous just now, for he knows his time is short. How cunning he is! It seems sometimes as though he had stolen an angel's robe to cover his hideous form; and, like the wolf in sheep's clothing, he gets into the flock and snathes his victims here and there. He marks out a road just as near the gospel path as he can get it (and have it end in perdition), and strews it with artificial flowers: then stands and with ghastly smiles and grimaces beckons to the inhabitants of earth to walk in it. He cried, "The end is not yet," as long as he thought that cry would deceive, but when the signs thickened so fast he saw that people would believe, he changed his tune. Now he says, "You're right about the time. The kingdom is soon to be established, and you are going to have a glorious time. But you are a little mistaken about the manner of its coming. You look for a literal reign; it will be a spiritual one. There will be peace, harmony and prosperity all over the world."

This is the devil's sugar-coated pill; and I have said for a long time that the churches would take the pill. It agrees so well with their own theology, why shouldn't they? They have advocated a time of prosperity and glory this side the coming of Christ, and have sung the lullaby of "Peace and safety," until they are nearly ready for this last lie of the devil. Like the Jews, they mistake the nature of the kingdom that is to come. They stumble over the same stumbling stone. Will their fall be like theirs? What prospect, or what signs they can see of the conversion of this wicked world, I cannot tell.

When the Book declares that "wicked men . . . . shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived," how can men, in the face of that declaration, and with the present condition of society before them, continue to say, they will grow better and better, until a sinner shall be a stranger in the land? Christ says, "The tares and wheat will grow together till the harvest," and the harvest is the end of the world. How do men dare, with the Bible and the words of Christ before them, stand up and say that the wheat shall increase until it shall cover all the ground and leave no room for tares, and so the earth shall become, even while time lasts, as the garden of the Lord? It is strange! and yet not so very strange after all. I see no reason why those who believe and cherish the old traditions and lies that were first brought to light in the hot-bed of Paganism, should not be carried away by the last edition of Pagan delusions.

I never saw the necessity of renouncing the visionary fables of the old heathen philosophers more than I have of late. Catholicism was Paganism baptized or whitewashed.—Protestantism is Catholicism reformed. But through all the baptisms and reformations they have kept the old Pagan root. And what a crop the root is producing in these last days! What bundles of tares to be gathered that have sprung from the old germ! Oh! when I look round the world, and see what error, what superstition, what horrid delusions and blasphemous doctrines, have grown out of that "cunningly devised fable," immortal-soulism, I do not wonder that Satan began and will end his great conspiracy on earth with that lie. He knew that he could accomplish more, and destroy more of the proud and rebellious children of Adam, by making them believe that they "should not surely die," than in any other way. Without that belief, he never could have drawn them into his last edition of lying wonders, the last act in the drama, and masterpiece of the whole—modern Spiritualism.

But what has immortal-soulism to do with the doctrine of a temporal Millennium? A great deal. It is not strange that men who believe that good people jump out of their shells and fly away to some blissful region (they cannot tell where), to receive at once their final reward, should talk about a time of peace and prosperity while time lasts; the Bible so plainly teaches that the earth shall be filled with God's glory, and the will of the Lord be done on earth as it is done in heaven. They have lost sight of the inheritance in their wanderings in the wilderness, and as they do not believe that the righteous and meek will inherit the earth after the coming of Christ, of course the good time promised must come before that event takes place.

Let us analyze this hope. They think God's people, some time in the future, are going to have a grand time, right here among the thistles and thorns, with the curse still resting upon the earth. Their fathers and mothers and friends, many of them, in their graves, and themselves subject to pain and death. Where is the glory? They cannot meet the loved ones who have died, without shutting their eyes to all the peace and prosperity on earth, and bidding farewell to the Millennial glory, and flying away "beyond the bounds of time and space" to nowhere; and when they have found them they will be spirits lighter than air, whom they never can clasp in a loving embrace. And there they are to have their reward, with their spirit friends, a spirit Jesus, and a sky kingdom!

Away with such visionary hopes without any substance. It is like trying to warm ourselves by the picture of a fire. We want the real fire—the substance of things hoped for—the evidence of real things not seen. We cannot cast an anchor in the sky; there is nothing to hold it. It must reach land to hold our ship in the coming storm. Thank God! we can cast it upon land in the new earth—the paradise of God.

I see no safety in these last days of peril; no escape from the tide of error, the flood of delusions that are about to deluge the world, or from the power of the spirits of devils working miracles, but to stand on the Bible platform, and believe that the dead "know not any thing." The dragon is abroad! He has been to the kings of earth and spread before them visions of future glory. He visits Napoleon and tells him if he can revive the old Latin, or Pagan form of government, he can rule the world. He offers the kingdoms on the same conditions they were offered to Christ. Who will fall down and worship him? Those who worship the dead, and acknowledge them as their counsellors and gods, are doing it, for their gods are demons with stolen names. Will they possess the kingdom? It is possible that after God's children have all left the earth, and are hid in the chambers, they may have it for a little while, just to let them see how they can manage it without any God or goodness in it. But with it they will have demons, despair, anguish and death.

See the monster dragon! traveling over the earth, deceiving the nations, poisoning the people with his loathsome slime, encircling them in his folds, whispering horrid blasphemies into their ears, binding them into bundles to be burned. Who can deliver them from his power? None but Christ. And if they reject him, and will not have him to reign over them, but choose a ruler who is, like themselves, a rebel to the government of Christ, and strive to build up kingdoms of their own, their house will be left unto them desolate.

The sifting time is coming. The servants of God are being sealed. Satan is marking his victims. Soon the separation will take place. Let us have no mark of the Beast, for if we have the angels will pass us by. Let us not love a lie. "For without are dogs and sorcerers . . . and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." May we find a refuge in the coming storm, and a home in the kingdom at last.

THE TWO LITTLE KIDS.

These were feeding in the door-yard, when suddenly their mistress heard them coming on a fast run, and bleating as they ran. She suspected something wrong, and opened the door and took her seat upon the sill, when both the kids leaped into her arms and nestled down into her lap. The cause of their fright was a large dog trotting through the yard.

As the lady related the circumstance with moistened eyes, this thought flashed upon me: Jesus is the only refuge in this land of enemies! My heart yearned for the poor woman herself, as I reflected upon the enemy into whose hands she had fallen,—even Spiritualism. O could she have been as wise as her kids to distinguish an enemy, and have fled to the arms of Jesus, and there been shielded from this "strong delusion," she might have been saved alive, and her fatherless children. Once she loved Jesus, and obeyed him in baptism; but she wandered from the "Good Shepherd," and was overtaken by the "wolf," and became his prey. O how painful the thought. How dreadful the work of this spoiler now in the land. No safe place but in the arms of Jesus. And no knowing that we are even there but by a plain "thus saith the Lord," so near does the counterfeit come to the true.

The Lord has been pleased to graciously hear our prayers, and send faithful servants among us, to again warn this people, and to ripen the tares, and, peradventure, induce one heart to desire to obey God. O bless his name for these tokens of his love! Our work seems closing up here, and our eye is unto God for a new field of labor.

• • • • •

Months have rolled away, and again the Lord has sent his servant to speak unto us "all the words of this life." The precious soul who was induced in his previous visit to desire to obey God in baptism, now went forward, accompanied by another.

It was a plesant scene, on Friday afternoon, in presence of a score of witnesses, upon the green shore, beside the calm lake, warmed by the clear sun, to see these meek, frail ones, who had counted the cost, trembling under the cross, yet with a fixed purpose to bear it, go forward and confess Christ before men, in the hope that he, in his turn, will confess them before his Father and the holy angels.

O, if there be a scene on which angels delight to look on this earth, we think it is such a one as this—a deliberate renunciation of one world to care for the things of another—a burial to "this present world," and a resurrection to "the world to come." How blessed the sight! How wise the actors! How glorious will be the results! "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

For the World's Crisis.

"HE SHALL BUILD MY CITY."

Saith the Lord of Cyrus, "He shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives."—Isa. 45: 13. That Cyrus did let go the captive Jews, all admit; and now it is expresly declared of the same Cyrus, "HE shall build my city"; which was as literally accomplished by the same Cyrus, king of Persia, as that of letting go the captive Jews; for "the king of Babylon," having burned "all the houses of Jerusalem" (2 Kings 25: 9), when the Jews returned home, they had to build houses to live in; and when they had built houses enough for 49,697 persons to live in (Ezra 2: 1–70), Jerusalem was large enough to be called a city; hence, literally true, "HE shall build my city."

If it is unreasonable to suppose that such a large multitude of people would take their wives and small children to a desolate place, without a shelter to shield them from the pelting storms, we must conclude that they sent up men to build Jerusalem before this multitude went up. And that they did do this, it is expressly said, that they "came again unto Jerusalem and Judah, every one unto his city" (Ezra 2: 1), which they could not have done before Jerusalem was builded.

It is asked, "If Cyrus built Jerusalem, why do we find the Jews building the city in the reign of Artaxerxes?" We answer, the Artaxerxes of Ezra 4: 7, 11, was the son of Cyrus (Ezra 4: 15), the same king who was by Herodotus called Cambyses, and he informs us that when Cyrus commenced the Scythian war, "he delegated his authority to his son Cambyses," "to whom he also entrusted the kingdom." (Herod. b. 1, c. 208.) Thus we learn that before the death of Cyrus, his son was in "authority," as king of Persia. And that the letter was written to Artaxerxes before the death of Cyrus, we learn thus: They "hired counsellors against them to frustrate their purpose all the days of Cyrus king of Persia." (Ezra 4: 5.) Says Josephus, "Cyrus, who was busy about other wars, knew nothing of all this." Says Philo, "The building was impeded on account of the death of Darius Hystaspes. Nor could Cyrus be seen, who was occupied in war with Tomgris. . . . Joshua, in the twelfth year of Assuerus, left his son Joiahim in the dignity of high priest, and went up to Assuerus; but being then distracted with war, he would not listen to his application. But it happened that in the next year, when he had become victorious, . . . he issued a decree prohibiting the building of the temple." (See "Times of Daniel," page 235.) From the above, it would appear that the enemies of the Jews wrote to Artaxerxes about the time of the death of Darius Hystaspes, that is, B. C. 486; which being only the third year after the Jews returned home, they were yet employed in "building" their "city." (Ezra 4: 12.) In the twelfth year of Artaxerxes, that is, B. C. 480, Joshua went to Babylon to see Artaxerxes; and in the next year, that is, B. C. 479, Artaxerxes wrote forbidding the building of the temple. This being nine years after the Jews first commenced building their city, and seven years after the time their enemies found them employed in building it, we find that they had ample time to finish the building of Jerusalem before they ceased to build the temple. Hence, in the edict of Darius, there is not a word about building Jerusalem, but the temple. "Let the work of this house of God alone; let the governor of the Jews and the elders of the Jews build this house of God in his place." Ezra 6: 7.

The Lord did not say that Cyrus should build the temple, but lay the foundation (Isa. 44: 28), which was literally accomplished, (Ezra 3: 10.) But he was to "build Jerusalem,—"he shall build my city." Hence, with the exception of the temple, which was completed in the sixth year of Darius (Ezra 6: 15), we in all the Bible never read of a single house ever being built at Jerusalem after the death of Cyrus. Therefore, it is literally true, "he shall build my city." And now, reader, remember this. They that place the building of the temple before the building of Jerusalem, charge the Lord with an untruth, for "Thus saith the Lord, I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies; mine house shall be built in it saith the Lord" (Zech. 1: 16), which could not be done before Jerusalem was builded.

Josephus dates the building of Jerusalem before the laying of the foundation of the temple; for in allusion to what we find recorded in Ezra 3: 1–6, he says, "They performed their vows to God, and opposed the sacrifices that had been accustomed of old time, I mean this upon the rebuilding of their city."—Jose. Ant. b. 11, c. 1, s. 3. And since we read that "the people gathered themselves together as one man to Jerusalem," (Ezra 3: 1), which could not be done before enough of the city had been built to call it Jerusalem, I conclude that Josephus must be correct. But one thing is clear, the Lord hath said of Cyrus, "he shall build my city." Therefore, Daniel's sixty-nine weeks cannot be reckoned from a later epoch than his day; for if when he says Cyrus he means Artaxerxes, the Bible is no longer a revelation to me.

THE PROPER USE OF A METAPHOR.

We should follow our Lord's example in the use of metaphorical language, and then it is beautiful. It expresses much in few words. It is also as useful as beautiful. But abused, it becomes the language of Babel. I propose to inquire as to the use of the metaphor by our blessed Master and Teacher, in a few instances, and select from the very many instances in which he used it to illustrate the kingdom of heaven. And as we are commanded, and as Adventists should be strongly inclined to seek first the "kingdom of God," in all things, I will notice the use of a metaphor in reference to that subject of all subjects.

We must ever bear in mind that a metaphor (except in the mouth of a Babylonian) points to one clear and distinct corresponding reality. Otherwise, it is worse than useless. In his early teaching, Jesus first resorted to the use of parables, as he contemplated the awful wickedness of the generation to which he was sent. When his attention was called to the circumstance of slaying John the Baptist, it was a strong case. He says, "Unto what shall I liken this generation?" He says, "It is like unto children sitting in the markets, and calling upon their fellows, and saying, We have piped unto you, and ye have not danced; we have mourned unto you, and ye have not lamented." No one will be likely to understand by this that the people of that generation had no other employment than alternate dancing and mourning. They are not so likely to confuse the use of metaphor, when applied to the things of this world, as when applied to the "things of the kingdom"; and in this latter case lies the field of our inquiry.

Although Jesus abounded in the use of the metaphor in his public teachings from the first, he did not adopt it as a special model of illustration so much until after he had encountered the most inveterate spite and opposition from the Scribes and Pharisees. When the use of this mode of language had become frequent, the disciples came to him with apparent anxiety, saying, "Why speakest thou unto them in parables? He answered and said unto them, Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of the kingdom of heaven, but to them it is not given." What a declaration! Dear reader, has that age or generation ever been so completely duplicated since that time, until now? I should delight to dwell on that point, but cannot now.

The occasion which brought out this anxious inquiry of the disciples, in reference to the use of parables, was the time they sat in the ship, and the multitude stood on the shore. It was the parable of the "sower sent forth to sow." The explanation was given to the disciples afterwards. It illustrated one general phase or feature of the kingdom, preparatory to its ultimate establishment, and occupies the age or dispensation now about to close. He then put forth another parable to his disciples, carrying forward a likeness of a phase of the kingdom just at the close of the age here alluded to. This parable, also, Jesus explains to his disciples. It is the parable of the "tares and wheat," very familiar to us all.

Then Jesus adds another parable, to show that, although this kingdom seems very small in the beginning, it will be exceeding great in the end. For a metaphor, he takes the grain of mustard seed. "Another parable spake he unto them: the kingdom of heaven is like unto leaven, which a woman took and hid in three measures of meal, till the whole was leavened." Turn to this thirteenth chapter of Matthew, reader, and you will see the explanation given to several of these parables, and then more are added. The kingdom of heaven is likened unto treasure hid in a field; likened unto a merchantman, seeking goodly pearls; likened unto a net cast into the sea.

Then he closes by drawing the likeness of a model teacher, of which we are greatly in need these days. It is under the metaphor of "scribe." There must be a corresponding reality to this metaphor, as well as all the others. Jesus has not told us who it was, but gives us some of his characteristics, so that we shall know him should he be found. This "scribe" must have been a rare character, if found among his associates the Pharisees. I do not think he was found there. To give us a little clearer insight into the mystery, Jesus likens him to a "householder which bringeth forth out of his treasures things new and old." And as Jesus had previously asked his disciples if they "understood all these things," he had been giving, under such various emblems, that these constituted the treasure lodged with that householder.

I cannot pursue this thought further now, fearing my space would be exhausted before completing the illustration I had in view at the outset. My object is this,—let it be distinctly understood. The kingdom of heaven is presented to us under a variety of aspects, each distinctive feature under its appropriate emblem, and these emblems must not be confounded.

To illustrate: the parables noticed in the foregoing remarks are only a part of what we should like to notice; but are all we have space for now. Many of these were explained by Jesus, but not all. Suppose the disciples, at some social interview,—perhaps while the Master was taking necessary rest, or at his secret devotions and meditations,—the conversation turned upon that formidable grouping together of parables. We imagine the first utterance heard would be like this: "What a powerful discourse our Master gave us to-day! No wonder some of the hearers cried out in astonishment at its close." "But how mean," says another, "in those Scribes and Pharisees in twitting our beloved Teacher of his humble origin! I could hardly bear that. Twitted him also about the poverty of Mary, and of his brothers and sisters. I suppose it was because their father and mother were too poor to send them to school; and there was this elder brother, he had to work with that old 'carpenter' till he was thirty years old!"

"But," says another, "I was so much troubled about one of these parables, I did not listen to the abuse heaped upon Jesus at the close of his sermon." "Which parable?" "Why, the one about the 'linen'; Master did not explain that to us. Probably he meant to leave some things for that 'scribe' or for that 'householder' to explain. Once he told us to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees. What can there be about the kingdom of heaven likened unto leaven hidden in three measures of meal, when leaven under other circumstances means something so different, and to be avoided?"

"I was troubled about the whole thing in general," says another, "notwithstanding the explanation given. How can the kingdom of heaven be likened unto so many different things? I supposed, by reading the prophet Daniel, it meant just one thing. When we are delivered from the Romans, the long dismembered kingdom of Israel will be reconstructed, and the 'God of heaven will set up a kingdom,' and that will be the kingdom of heaven." To this idea they all agreed; they were then living under the fourth and last great power. The next was to be the kingdom which Daniel had predicted, and John had announced just at hand. More than all this, the Messiah had come now and promised them they should "sit on twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel."

Poor men! they were destined to greater perplexities than these. These were but the first lessons in that school they had entered. They had shared the common lot of man—to acquire prejudices in early life, some correct, and some incorrect; and they had yet to learn the struggle it would cost them to eradicate every impression. Very few live long enough in this world to accomplish that work. Reader, what progress have you and I made in the warfare against narrow-minded or even honest preconceived opinions, which are erroneous?

THE PAPACY.

I find the following items in the papers named respecting the papacy and our times, that I think would interest all students of prophecy; hence my sending them for our paper.

The New York Evening Post, of Sept. 19, 1865, in a leading article—"The troubles of the Pope"—quoting from "Gazette de France," says:—

"The revolutionary propagandists are organizing themselves in all the villages on the frontiers. Garibaldian clubs are springing up on all sides. Everything is being prepared with a view to seizing the 'De Profundis' of the papacy the moment the French troops take their departure.... The purveyors for the French army have received instructions to make no further contracts for provisions."...

FRIARS DEFYING THE POPE.—The "Pall Mall Gazette" says:—"The Capuchins of the extensive convent at Rome presented a petition relative to certain irregularities which have been introduced. When the Holy Father read the petition he flew into a terrible passion, and, instead of giving a formal answer, contented himself with writing on the margin of the petition these words, (I give the translation),—'Monks, the punishments which God has sent to you do not suffice. You are no wiser. Oh, monks! monks!' On the reception of the answer by the monks, their indignation passed all bounds. They sent an address to the Pope, commencing thus,—'Most Holy Father: The punishments which God has sent you have not been sufficient. Already you have twice lost your kingdom, and yet you are no wiser. Oh, Holy Father! Holy Father!' For this audacious reply, the Capuchins were suspended, and others arrested. Among them were the Father Custodian, who, on being arrested by Major Eligi, turned upon him and said, haughtily, 'You, the agent of the Pontifical government, you dare to lay your hand on one of the children of the poor of God.... A Franciscan Father, Barnabas, was also arrested. He is the author of a work on 'The end of the world.' The monks are getting up protests against the Pope, which are being circulated in all the convents of Rome."

The Boston Journal of Sept. 4, 1865, has an article headed, "The end of the world," by a British army officer. "Capt. W. A. Baker, of the Royal Bombay Engineers, has at last settled an often disputed date, the year in which the world will come to an end. In a work just published in England, entitled 'The day and the hour; or, Notes on Prophecy, a Sketch of the future extracted from the Bible,' he imparts a considerable amount of information, which is certainly important if true.' The day of judgment, he tells us, is fixed for Sept. 20, 1878; the hour is sunset, the translation of the saints having previously taken place at one o'clock in the morning of the 25th of January 1875."

JOHN TAYLOR.

IMMORTALITY.

Did God make man immortal? Gen. 2:7 informs us that God made man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. And in chapter 1:27, we are informed that God made man in his own image. Again we are taught in Hebrews 1:3, that Christ was the express image of his (God's) person; and again in 2 Cor. 4:4; Phil. 2:6; Col. 1:15. Now if the expression, his own image, or likeness, means that God made man immortal, then Christ was immortal, and born immortal. Then in what sense did God make man after his own image? First, I claim it was morally; and 2nd, physically. 1st. Man had a mind God-like, what Paul in Eph. 4:24 called righteousness and true holiness. 2nd. By having a body in form like God. Thus man was made in mind God-like, and in body after his likeness or form; not immortal, but a probationer. He must be tried, and if a probationer, then a probationer for immortality. Just what God's people have before them now, as probationers. Rom. 2:7.

But man rebelled, the mind yielded, the moral image of God was lost, and immortality was lost, and man was sentenced to die, Gen. 3:19. Then, in providing a Savior, his blood was shed to purge our conscience from dead works, Heb. 9:14, called the robe in Rev. 7:14—thus making provision to restore the moral image of God; and 2nd, Christ died and rose again and thus abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, 2 Tim. 1:10. Thus, at the resurrection, the people of God are to have, through Christ, immortality. This mortal shall put on immortality, 1 Cor. 15:53, 54. It is through Christ, because he procured it at his resurrection, and he only has it; because it belongs to mortals as their physical blessing. 1 Tim. 6:13-16.—D. W. SORNBERGER.—Adv. Herald.

DISCUSSION IN PHILADELPHIA.

We are to have a discussion in Philadelphia, Pa., with J. G. Fish, a noted Spiritualist, commencing Oct. 23d, at 7 P. M., in Sansom Hall, and continuing five evenings. We are to discuss the following resolution:

"Resolved, That man has a spirit which exists after the death of the body, in a conscious state, and communicates with the inhabitants of earth."

INCIDENTS BY THE WAY.

In our last report, we parted with our readers at the close of the discussion in Dixfield, Me. After the discussion, we preached three evenings on the sleep and resurrection of the dead, and the coming kingdom. The audiences were large and very attentive. The Universalists kindly offered us the free use of their house, well lighted, and affording every other kindness heart could wish. During these meetings, an intelligent Congregational minister, two lawyers, and some others, asked us many questions on the subjects mentioned, which served to make the truth shine much brighter than it would have done, had it not been thus closely criticized. The first class of people became very much interested, and were anxious to hear more. They were astonished to see the harmony and simplicity of the doctrine of the Bible, and wondered why it had not been seen before. A prominent lawyer remarked, at the close of the meetings, that if the Congregationalist minister asked many more questions, he would "make all the people Adventists," because the objections that had been raised were being removed as fast as presented. We trust that some of the fruit sown will produce an abundant harvest.

During the discussion, we found a most excellent pilgrim's home at Bro. John Staples, in Carthage. It was in his great barn where Bro. Munger held interesting meetings, which he noticed in the Crisis several weeks since. The barn is 122 feet long and 42 feet wide. Some five hundred were fed at Bro. Staples' table, in one day, during the meeting. His whole heart is in the service of the Lord, in harmony with his excellent companion. He has been in the service of the Lord only about one year, but he has tried the way long enough to love it and all who walk therein.

During the meeting, we formed a pleasant acquaintance with Brn. Abbott and Wheeler, who are laboring to persuade men to become christians, and be ready for the coming of the Son of man. We found some excellent brethren and sisters in Carthage, Dixfield Centre, and vicinity, who are pressing for the christian's prize.

Saturday, Sept. 30th, Bro. Heber Kimball took us to Canton Mills, where we held meetings till Wednesday evening, Oct. 5th. We had a meeting in that place, on our way to Dixfield, Sept. 25th, and received a very earnest invitation to return that way and preach to them again. We found the people very anxious to hear, and some ready to obey the truth. On the Lord's day, Oct. 1st, quite a number came in from adjoining towns, the distance of seven to twenty miles. Among these were many ardent lovers of the truth, with whom we had a very pleasant interview. Among them was Bro. E. Haggett, from Livermore. The cause of Christ is advancing at Canton Mills, through the consistent lives of a few faithful souls who love the appearing of Jesus. We received very kind treatment from all classes, and trust that some who have never served the Lord will at once begin, and reap the reward of the faithful. Moistened eyes showed that the Spirit of the Lord was at work upon their hearts.

Spiritualism has taken deep root in all that section, and, unless checked soon, will become the prevailing religion. Wherever it goes, vital godliness dies out. It is the great antagonist of christianity. We spoke one evening on the cause of the spiritual phenomena. A large audience listened attentively. Several Spiritualists and Universalists asked a variety of questions, for the purpose of testing our position, which only made the truth shine the brighter, and caused its lovers to rejoice; while its enemies were confounded. We have great reason for thankfulness to the Lord for the light that now shines from the Bible, showing clearly that man is wholly unconscious between death and the resurrection; and consequently cannot make any communications. We think no truth is clearer than this; but popular theology can do nothing towards blocking the wheels of Spiritualism. The churches are being completely undermined by it; and many who have been their pillars are now sympathizing with the infernal delusion, giving it character and influence. The most intelligent, amiable, wealthy, and honored citizens, are often the first to be led astray by this demonism. The great deceiver has so arranged it as to make it specially pleasing to the natural heart, and interesting to all but the true disciples of Christ. In this, his last great effort, he has combined all his cunning craftiness to devise a system that shall blind the eyes of the people, and make them think they are on the christian's road, while he is leading them straight to perdition. His success is alarming, and yet, but few seem to apprehend any danger, and those who sound the note of alarm have to put up with ridicule as the reward of their faithfulness. It will not always be so. The time is at hand when the truth and right will be defended, and error exposed to an astonished world. It is all important that we be found in harmony with the truth of the Lord.

Our meetings increased in interest till their close. The truth was well received, and we trust some permanent good was accomplished, judging from what we heard and saw. A hearty relish was manifested for the pure principles of the christian religion. Those who had been turned away from the house of worship by the inconsistent walk of professors came and gave the very best attention. We hope they will give their hearts to the Lord.

Thursday, Oct. 6th, we went to the North Norway Conference, which was a most excellent one. We have rarely, if ever, attended a better one. Every thing moved as though the Lord was affording us special help. The conference was held in the M. E. meeting-house, in North Norway, about nine miles from So. Paris, Me. There was a large attendance, and many came a long distance. We had the pleasure of meeting Brn. T. Jordan, J. A. Libby, and J. Whitman, who aided us in the labors of the conference. They are true men in the vineyard of the Lord, seeking the welfare of the flock.

Our meeting began Thursday evening, and closed Lord's day evening with the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. Our love-feast, on Lord's day morning, was a blessed one. About seventy-five testimonies were given in about forty-five minutes. All could say it was good to be there. It was a scene that will be long remembered by those who were privileged to enjoy it.

Several requested prayers during the conference, and were blest.

We formed some very pleasant acquaintances with the dear children of the Lord. We found them whole-hearted and true in the cause of Christ. We left them joyful in the Savior, with a bright hope of soon seeing him coming in all his glory.

THE ITALIAN MISSION.

Bro. Czechowski, who is engaged in the Italian Mission, with good results, has moved to Switzerland, where there is a still better prospect for doing good; but he is very much crippled for want of funds to pay his expenses. He owes 200 francs in Italy, and was obliged to borrow 90 francs to pay the freight on his baggage, when it arrived in Switzerland, and the amount is to be paid in two months from the latter part of Sept. Who will help this needy Bro., who is laboring to spread the light and truth relative to the christian's blessed hope? Now is a good time to give him a lift, while he most needs it. Send immediately, and we will have it forwarded to his address.

DERIVATION OF THE NAME "NAPOLEON."

Under the above heading, we find an interesting article in The Rainbow, published in London, Eng., and very ably conducted, in which is the following, which was taken from "a remarkable little work edited by M. Frederic Monod, entitled 'Comme quoi Napoleon n'a jamais existe.'"

The writer in The Rainbow, when referring to Monod's work says, "I need not say it is no way prophetical."

When giving the "derivation of the name Napoleon," or the words of which it is composed, Monod says:—

"They are derived from Apollyo (Apolluo) or Apoleo (Apoleo), two Greek verbs, which indeed make only one, and which signify to destroy, kill, or exterminate. So that if the christian hero of our day should call himself Apoleon, he would, etc." * * * But this personage is named Napoleon, and consequently there is in his name an initial letter which is not in the name of * * Yes, there is a letter more, and even a syllable; for according to the inscriptions which are engraved on all sides in the capital, the true name of this christian hero was Neapoleon or Neapolion—which one sees particularly on the column in the 'Place Vendome.'

"But then this extra syllable makes no difference. The syllable doubtless is Greek, like the rest of the name, and, in Greek, ne (ve), or nai (vai), is one of the greatest affirmatives, which we render veritable. Whence it follows, that Napoleon signifies veritable exterminator, etc."

If this derivation of "Napoleon" be a true one, then we cannot refuse to acknowledge that, insomuch as Apolluo and Apoleo own a common root, their derivatives Napoleon and Apollyon may not refuse to own a like identical original. I am, dear sir, yours, faithfully and obliged,

"A CRIMINAL ERA."

The New York World, of Aug. 16, 1865, when speaking of the moral state of things in our land, thinks the present state of society "will prove to those who have heretofore sneered at the theory that this is 'a criminal era,' and 'a crisis of crime,' that these are indeed the proper appellations for the passing period." Notwithstanding all the startling facts before us to confirm the above conclusion, there are many so blinded by the theory of "the conversion of the world," or other false notions, that they can see no evidence that wickedness is any greater now than it was thirty years ago. Such persons mingle but little with the masses of mankind. They only associate with the moral and amiable, where they do not witness the multitude of horrid deeds that are committed outside of their refined circle of friends; but observing men, editor's of public journals, judges, statesmen, and all who are called into the great thoroughfares of the world, are compelled to acknowledge that the present is "a criminal era."

The New York Independent speaks of "the extraordinary developments of crime in the mercantile community." Men who have been long in business with those whom they supposed perfectly honest, awake on a fine morning to find their clerk, agent, or partner, has slipped away with thousands of dollars, thus robbing his employer, or partner, of his fortune, leaving him bankrupt, at the mercy of his creditors. The time has come when business men are full of "perplexity." They know not whom to trust. Every thing is uncertain. Traitors are all about them. Covetousness is so strong and general in the hearts of the people, that the principle of honesty is almost smothered to death. "Any way to get the money," appears to be the ruling principle of these last days. The days of Sodom are being repeated. All these things are but signs foretold, and show very clearly that the end of this dispensation is at hand.

FAMILY GOVERNMENT.

It is lamentable to see the lack of family government in these days. One would think, judging from multiplied examples on every side, that the order of things in family arrangements was reversed; so that instead of having the parents govern the children, the children rule the parents. This is certainly true in many cases, and such sad sights are becoming very common. This only fulfills a prophetic declaration of the apostle Paul,—"This know also, that in the last days" children will be "disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection." Many parents understand this from sorrowful experience; but we think, in many cases, there might be much improvement made, if they would observe the following advice:—

"Family government does not consist in watching children with a suspicious eye, frowning at their merry outburst of innocent hilarity, suppressing their joyous laughter, and moulding them into melancholy little models of patriarchal gravity. And when they have been in fault, it is not to punish them simply on account of the injury you may have chanced to suffer in consequence of their faults, while the disobedience is suffered to pass without rebuke. Nor is it to overwhelm the little culprit with a flood of angry words; to stun him with a deafening noise; to call him by hard names, which do not express his misdeeds; to load him with epithets which would be extravagant if applied to a fault of tenfold enormity; or to declare with passionate vehemence that he is the worst child in the neighborhood, and likely to come to the gallows.

But it is to watch anxiously for the first risings of sin, and kindly to repress them; to counteract the earliest workings of selfishness; to suppress the first beginnings of rebellion against rightful authority; to teach an implicit, unquestioning, and cheerful obedience to the will of the parent, as a preparation for future allegiances to the requirements of civil authority, and for subjection to the will of God, the great ruler and Father; it is to punish a fault because it is sinful and contrary to the commands of God, without reference to whether it may, or may not have been productive of immediate injury to the parent or others. It is to reprove with calmness and composure, and not with angry irritation, in a few words fitly chosen, and uttered in low and serious tones, and not with a torrent of abuse; to punish as often as you threaten, and threaten only when you see the absolute necessity of punishment; to say what you mean, and then do as you say. It is, in a word, to govern your family as in the sight of Him who has made you a parent, and given you authority to train up and govern your children for him; and who will reward your fidelity with such blessings as he bestowed on Abraham, or punish your neglect with such curses as he visited on Eli.—Friend of Virtue.

NAPOLEON III.

A pamphlet, the manuscript of which was written five years ago, and published last May, has been issued in London, Eng., in which "the supposed thoughts of a certain Emperor" [Napoleon III.] are made known to the world. The remarkable work thus concludes:—

"When all the world is nearly in my hands, I'll bring it all to bear against Great Britain.

"She is all scattered—I concentrated. Everywhere her commerce shall be attacked, her colonies invaded, her seaports stormed. Electric wires shall flash my orders at a given moment, rise in all climes, and crush Great Britain. She shall go down, and I will reign supreme; supreme throughout the world. Builder and architect of my own fortune! Happier than Napoleon's son, and greater; greater than he himself. I will transcend his glory. Never name shall be like my name. The image of all glory shall be my image. I, that great reality, like unto God, my power universal—

"But soft—I dream—I am but captive now!

"Well, well! all's one for that. I'll let time shape; and there—an end. Now to my studies!

"Thus he sat him down. He knew not it is writ: 'This matter is by a decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones; to the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men!'"

A CALL TO WORKING MEN

IN THE TEMPERANCE CAUSE.

Intemperance rages, and will rage till we change our hand, rely less on organizations, and more on honest, earnest, individual effort. There is desperate need of men to battle this great evil on their "own hook," responsible to God only. What if great men continue to discuss the Maine Law, and their admirers continue to read and admire? Will that save us? What if great conventions continue to be held, and distinguished men make masterly speeches and pass resolutions, both masterly-foolish and masterly-wise? Will that save us? What if temperance societies, not a few, continue to meet and do little more than air their regalias, have a convivial time, and occupy our newspapers with a display of organizations and names? Will that save us?

Most manifestly we have organizations enough, discussions enough, and legislation enough, while the EVIL waxes worse and worse. In this dilemma, can anything be done? Yes, thank heaven. Let us with the spirit and gospel of Christ go straightway to work (as individuals) in the very neighborhoods where we reside. Let us labor, might and main, with Young America, with temperate drinkers and drunkards—diffuse light and love by spreading temperance papers and temperance tracts in the very dens of sin, and in all the "highways and byways" of life; and looking to God for strength, we may soon understand the promise, "One shall chase a thousand."

The spreading of tracts—tracts which are short, pungent, pithy, rather than pretty—is attended with great success. We have such tracts. We sell them at common prices. We send them gratuitously to those who wish to do good, but are too poor to buy them. Friends, send for them. Send a little postage, if you please; the tracts you can have "without money and without price."

We are rather radical, but we have a few friends just as radical. They like our "One Man Tract Society," they like our individual and independent action against popular abominations, and occasionally send us a little money to carry on the battle; and being almoners of their bounty, though poor, we wish, with God's blessing, to make many rich. Therefore, fellow-laborers, send for our tracts, and try their quality upon your dram-sellers and dram-drinkers. The floodgates of iniquity are lifted up. We have three hundred thousand drunkards sinking into their graves! We have hosts of "temperate drinkers" coming on to fill their places! Earnest, self-denying workers are needed on all hands. We must reanimate a dying cause. Friends, awake, let us stretch ourselves upon it as Elisha stretched himself upon the dead child, and it shall rise to life in majesty and strength.

GEORGE TRASK.

Temperance Depository, Fitchburg, Mass.

The above should receive a prayerful consideration. Bro. Trask has not overdrawn the picture. It is evident to any careful observer that intemperance is rapidly advancing.

Bro. Trask has some excellent temperance tracts that ought to be scattered far and wide. Let us help in the good cause.—ED.

For the Dorcas Mission Sunday School.

This is an Advent Mission Sunday School among the poor colored people of Philadelphia. It numbers already more than one hundred boys and girls, and is rapidly increasing. They want a hundred copies of the Young Pilgrim, and are not able to pay the $35.00 a year for them. They call upon the benevolent for help. Who will give it?

THE ANNIVERSARY DISCOURSES.

According to previous announcement, Elder Himes delivered three discourses last Sabbath in Lowell Street Chapel, commemorative of the organization of the first General Conference of Second Advent believers, in Chardon Street Chapel, Boston, Oct. 16th, 1840; in which he briefly reviewed the history of the Advent cause for the last twenty-five years, its progress and results, and gave an explanation of past mistakes and present prospects. The discourses were listened to with much interest, and were well attended, considering the unpropitious weather, many who had been identified with the cause from its beginning being present. The substance of these discourses will doubtless be given to the public before long.

How swiftly time flies! A quarter of a century has passed away since the Advent proclamation first called us out and made us a people, and we are now so much nearer to the end of our pilgrimage. Still the vision tarries, and the Bridegroom lingers; and still his sweet assurance cheers us on,—"Though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Blessed are the waiting ones.

HELP WANTED!

Brethren and sisters who are willing to aid me in going to preach the gospel of the kingdom to the people of the South, may still send in their orders for the "Saints' Harvest." Some fourteen dozen have been called for, and about ten dollars received, in response to the call of two weeks ago; and still there are several copies left. The receipts for the sale of them will help me on my way, and will not impoverish you. I am leaving father, mother, wife, children, home, friends and all, for the sake of the gospel and the salvation of poor, dying sinners; and you, who are worth your hundreds and thousands, and can stay at home with your families and friends, will you not spare a little for the help of those who are willing to sacrifice all to win souls to Christ? The Missionary Board are willing to aid me, but I want to do what I can to help them by helping myself; and while co-operating with the Society, and working for its interests, I prefer, if possible, to labor in such a way as not to be entirely dependent on the Society. I expect to start for the South about Nov. 1st. All orders for the "Saints' Harvest" may be addressed to me as follows—H. K. Flagg, Crisis Office, Boston. Price 8c. single; or 70c. per dozen.

COME TO CHRIST.

My heart is filled with sadness, and my eyes dim with tears, when I look upon this poor old dying world, and see how few there are prepared to meet God in peace. My heart yearns over those who are going the downward path to ruin, and yet it seems as if they heeded it not. It is sad to think of those I love so tenderly who are yet in the broad road to death. I ask you in loving tones to come to Christ. Jesus stands with outstretched arms waiting to receive you. The Spirit and the bride say, Come. Come and give your hearts to God while there is a day of acceptance. Jesus is waiting to be gracious. He loves you and pities you, and wants to save you. Come to Christ and take his yoke upon you, and learn of him who is meek and lowly in heart, and you shall find rest to your souls. Come to Christ. He died to save you. He died that you might live. Think how much he has suffered for you. Go with me to the place of our Master's crucifixion. See him there nailed upon the rugged cross. Hear the hammer as it drives the nails into his hands and feet. See the meek and blessed Master in his humility and love. He says not a hard word. He bears his cross. He is nailed to the cross. For one moment think of the cruelty of these wicked men.

He hangs upon the bleeding cross until he gives up the ghost. The Son of God dies for you and me. Think of that crown of thorns he wore. Think how they spit upon him, struck him in the face, while he was blindfolded; and he suffered all that we might live, that we might be saved from our sins, and have a home where no tears or sorrows can ever come.

This, my dear friend, he suffered for you and for me. Come to Christ. See how he stands pleading for you. Come and be saved. See, he calls you to give him your heart. It is all for us he has thus suffered, and can you slight the Savior? Can you turn a deaf ear to his calls?

Come to Christ, and be saved with all the good of earth. He is soon to come in all his glory and majesty, and then all that are ready will go into the marriage, and the door will be shut. Christ pleads for you to-day. Oh, secure a home where nothing can harm you. The storms of the last day are fast approaching. Can you bear his wrath? Can you stand the fires of the last day? My heart yearns over you. Gladly would I take you in my arms and bring you to Christ; but, alas! I cannot. It is an individual case; we must stand or fall for ourselves.

Come to Christ. You will want to share in the glories of the better land. You will want a crown of life, a harp of God. You will want a palm of victory, a home where are no sorrows and tears, trials and afflictions. You will want to see the Savior, who bore the cross for us. You will want to meet there dear friends, who now sleep in Jesus. Come to Christ. The day of the Lord hasteth greatly.

Be wise, for soon the heavens will be rolled together as a scrol, and you will want a hiding place in Christ. The mountains will flee away. You will want a stronghold in that day. Then come to Christ, and give him now your heart, and by and by we shall all meet to praise God and the Lamb, and live forevermore where the weary are ever at rest, and no sickness, sorrow, pain or death shall ever come.

LUTHERA B. WEAVER.

JUSTIN MARTYR'S VIEW OF REV. 20.

In Justin Martyr's dialogue with Trypho, the Jew, we find the following:—ED.

Trypho. "But tell me, do you honestly allow Jerusalem will be rebuilt, and do you expect our nation will be gathered, and with joy be brought back, together with the Messiah, and the patriarchs, and prophets, and proselytes, before the coming of your Messiah, or do you hold this that you may seem to triumph in the argument?

Justin. "I am not reduced to the miserable necessity, Trypho, of saying what I do not think. I profess to you again that myself, with others with me, think this will take place. But I have told you, also, that many again, and they of the sort of christians who follow sound and holy doctrine, do not acknowledge this. For I have told you that some indeed called christians are in fact atheists, and impious heretics, because in every way they teach blasphemy, impiety and folly. And that you may know I say this not to you only, I compose a volume of all my conversations, according to my ability, in which I record whatever passes between us, showing that I publicly profess the same which I confess to you. For I am determined to follow not men, or human authority, but God and the doctrine taught by him. For should you happen upon some, who are called christians, indeed, and yet are far from holding these sentiments,—but even dare to assail the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob with blasphemy, and say, There is no resurrection of the dead; but instantly, when they die, their souls are received up into heaven; do not count these among christians,—even as they are not Jews, if accurately considered, who are called Sadducees, and the like sects of Genistæ, Meristæ, Galileans, Hellenists, Pharisees and Baptists, and others (that I may not tire you to hear me express all I think), but under the name of Jews and sons of Abraham, they worship God, as he charges them, with their lips only, while their heart is far from him. But I, and all christians properly instructed in all things, believe there will be a resurrection of the flesh, and a millennium in Jerusalem rebuilt, adorned, and enlarged, which the prophets Ezekiel, Isaiah and others have explained.

"For thus Isaiah speaks of this time of the millennium: 'For there shall be a new earth; and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind; but they shall find joy and rejoicing in that which I create; because I will make Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will exult over Jerusalem, and rejoice over my people; and no longer shall the voice of weeping be heard in it, or the voice of crying. And there shall not be any more one of unripe age, and an old man that has not fulfilled his time: for the young man shall be a son of a hundred years; but the dying sinner shall be a son of a hundred years, and also accursed. And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and plant vineyards and eat their fruit, and drink wine. They shall not build, and another inhabit; and they shall not plant, but others eat; for as the days of the tree of life are the days of my people. The produce of their toils shall be multiplied; my elect shall not labor in vain, nor beget sons unto a curse, for they shall be a righteous and blessed seed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. And it shall be before they cry, I will hear; and while they yet speak, I will say, What is it? Then the wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the ox, and the serpent earth, like bread. They shall not hurt or harm in the holy mountain, saith the Lord.'

"What, therefore, is said in these words, 'For as the days of a tree shall be the days of my people; the produce of their toils shall be multiplied,' we understand mysteriously to signify a millennium: for when it was said to Adam, that in the day he ate of the tree he should die, we know he did not live out that millennium. Moreover, we understand in the same way this also: The day of the Lord is a Millennium. To this agrees what one among us by the name of John, one of the apostles of Christ, foretold in a Revelation made to him; that the faithful in Christ would spend a millennium in Jerusalem, and after that will be the general, and I may say, in a word, the eternal resurrection and judgment of all together: the same as our Lord said: They shall neither marry, nor be given in marriage, but shall be equal to angels, since they are the sons of the God of the resurrection."

Justin in this passage quotes Isa. 65, showing the Jerusalem of the risen saints during the millennium to be in the New Heavens and the new earth after the present world is gone out of sight and mind. No sorrow, sighing, crying, nor pain, or any evil thing is to enter there. Such, then, is an early view of the Millennium.—Advent Herald.

PTOLEMY VS. GOD'S PROPHETS.

Has it never struck you as being somewhat singular that infidels who have ransacked all creation to discover evidence of the falsity of the divinely inspired book, have never seized upon the glaring discrepancy between the prophecy of Daniel in reference to the time for the advent of Messiah into our world, and the actual appearing of the Lord Christ fifty-three years subsequent to the time given by Gabriel? It would have been a very easy matter for them to have proved by the "undoubted canon of Ptolemy" that the command to "restore and build Jerusalem" went forth B. C. 536. Then they had only to deduct 483 years comprising the sixty-nine weeks, and fifty-three years overplus would have demonstrated the falsity of the prophecy. But it appears there are men professing to be christians who prefer sacrificing Daniel rather than relinquish Ptolemy. Then again it is evident that the seventy weeks extend over the whole ground of the Jewish probationary time from their deliverance from the machinations of Haman till they should be delivered over to the desolating power of the Romans, and their city and temple be destroyed, and the host scattered to the four winds of heaven. But did any such catastrophe occur within these seventy weeks? No? Certainly not: if Ptolemy's canon be correct. The city and the sanctuary remained unmolested twenty years beyond the latest time that can be fixed for the termination of these seventy weeks, if we follow the chronology of the canon. Here is another discrepancy fatal to either Daniel or Ptolemy. Now what shall we do? Must we yield to infidelity? Stick to Ptolemy at all hazards, or throw him overboard and accept the infallible Word? I have no hesitation in choosing God's holy prophet in preference to all the astronomers on the foot-stool. I care not whether Thurman be able to calculate eclipses or not; he may be for aught I know, a mere tyro in the science, and if Professors could demonstrate to the world that he was such, it would not affect the question in the least. The difficulty lies between Daniel and Ptolemy; and if the calculations of Thurman were shown to be false, that would not end the conflict between the two former.

We must remember also that Daniel is not the only one of God's holy prophets that is brought into disrepute by Ptolemy's canon, but Jeremiah also is placed amongst the false prophets. He had declared that the captivity would positively continue seventy years; but Ptolemy cuts it down to fifty-nine. Now here is another of the Lord's prophets who has to be sacrificed at the shrine of the "undoubted canon." Wonder how many more victims will be required to be slain, in order that said canon may still continue to be "undoubted." Isaiah, I am inclined to think, would have to be looked upon as doubtful authority, for he asserts in the most unequivocal terms that Cyrus would be the individual who should carry into effect the "command to restore and build Jerusalem." Then again Ezra must come in for a share of the "doubt" also, as he records the fact of the return and rebuilding in accordance with Isaiah's prediction. So if the "canon of Ptolemy is not to be receded from for the authority of any writing whatsoever," we must at once abandon the writings of the prophets, the sacred historians; aye, and even Jesus himself: for he most distinctly recognizes the "writings" of the prophet Daniel when giving his disciples instructions in reference to their conduct when they should "see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet."

Now if its opponents should succeed in overthrowing the chronology of Thurman they are bound to furnish us with one that will accord with the divine oracles; else they had better let it alone; for, in their frantic endeavors to sustain Ptolemy they are furnishing infidels with the very best argument they could desire to prove the Bible to be a "cunningly devised fable." For according to their chronology the Messiah did not appear at the time specified. Jerusalem was not besieged, the temple was not razed to the ground and the sacrifice and oblation did not cease in accordance with Daniel's prediction. Neither was the sanctuary cleansed twenty years ago as it should have been. Now in view of all these palpable failures, what guarantee have we that our hopes will ever be realized unless we abandon Ptolemy, and accept a system of chronology that harmonizes with historical facts and the writings of God's holy prophets? In conclusion let me remind those who have so freely indulged in sarcasm, ridicule and imputation of unworthy motives, that such arguments have no weight with us, and until they can produce something more tangible their labors of this sort are thrown away. Yours in the hope,

W. H. HACKING.

VARIOUS READINGS IN THE NEW TESTAMENT.

It is well known that the various Greek manuscripts of the New Testament differ in many places. The differences are called various readings. Infidels have sometimes taken advantage of this fact, to throw discredit upon the Scriptures; and christians, who are not fully informed as to the facts, are sometimes perplexed and disquieted by the exaggerated statements of the former class. The following particulars, the result of a careful examination of the matter, will show how little occasion the former have for triumph, and the latter for uneasiness. The edition of the New Testament used in this examination was the well known one of Prof. G. C. Knapp, of Halle. Prof. K. is not sparing in his criticism, and rejects as spurious many passages which later editors, of fully equal competency, receive as genuine. He has marked those passages, in the commonly received text, which he regards as unquestionably interpolations, by enclosing them in double brackets; and those which he only regards as doubtful by enclosing them in single brackets. I find that he has used the first of these signs in one hundred and forty-four places. Of the part thus adjudged by him to be spurious sixty-seven are such as do not affect the sense, being merely the insertion or omission of a pronoun, or a proper name; thirty-eight are such as are found unquestionably genuine in some other part of Scripture, for example, in the parallel passage of another Gospel; and seventeen are merely the word, Amen, at the end of the Gospels and epistles. These all deducted, leave twenty-two. Of this number, fifteen are of no real importance to the sense, consisting mostly of single words. The remaining seven are somewhat more noticeable. One of the doxology, at the close of the Lord's prayer in Matt. 7: 13. But the only one of any doctrinal importance is that in 1st John 5: 7, 8, where he omits all between the words "records," and "the Spirit."

Of the second class of passages, which he marks as doubtful, there are in all one hundred and seven. Of these eighty do not at all affect the sense; twelve are found elsewhere in the New Testament; three are only the word Amen; and three are but the repetition of the word translated forever in such passages as "forever and ever." Of the remaining nine, seven consist only of single words, are of no real importance. The other two are, John 5: 3, 4, and John 8: 53, to 8: 11.

To sum up, of the two hundred and fifty-one passages which Knapp has marked as either certainly spurious, or at least of doubtful genuineness, only three can be considered as of any consequence, and only one of these is ever quoted as a proof-text in support of any important doctrine.

So trifling are the variations in the more than six hundred manuscripts of the Greek Testament that have been examined. It is proper to say, however, that the whole number of various readings is much greater than that given in the above account. But those not reckoned here are as a whole of no greater importance, and have for the most part less claim to be substituted for the commonly received text, than those above noticed. So if any one who does not happen to read the Greek Testament should hear some flippant sciolist, who measures his own wisdom by the number of things which he does not believe, proclaiming that the original manuscripts of the New Testament Scripture vary in more than a thousand places, he need not thereupon incontinently give up his faith in Divine revelation, nor feel any other emotion than that of pity for his shallow-minded and deluded informer.—Watchman and Reflector.

THAT BOOK.

BRN. AND SRS.:—Have you read that book called the "Life and Sketches of Sr. A. Mussey"? I have, and take this liberty to recommend it to you and every one. It will interest and edify you, and I think do you good. Sr. Mussey has labored hard to get up the book for you. Now take one. The price is $1.00, to be had at the Crisis office. It is neatly bound, and will look well in your library. GEO. A. STREETER.

Correspondence.

From Sr. H. P. Chase.

DEAR CHILDREN:—Remember, "He that overcometh shall inherit all things; and I will be his God, and he shall be my Son." I am striving to be an overcomer, that I may inherit all things promised to the faithful. I believe in the second coming of Christ to this earth, and that the signs he told us should transpire prior to his coming are nearly all fulfilled; so we may look in good faith for his return; and he is to come in like manner as he went up to heaven. He is coming to raise the dead and change the living (saints), and then shall we "ever be with the Lord." "Wherefore comfort one another with these words." That the Lord is coming? Yes. And is it a comfort? Yes. Jesus is coming to be king, to reign o'er all the earth, and of his kingdom there shall be no end, and death shall never enter there.

"I thank thee, oh Father, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto" us; "even so, Father, for so it seemed good in thy sight." I can ask no greater honor than to be an heir with Christ to an inheritance incorruptible, undefiled, and that fadeth not away; a land where peace and joy forever abound, and sorrows come no more. O, ye sad ones, rejoice, for your redemption draweth nigh. What if we are despised and rejected, and cast out by a wicked world. Can you bear it? I can. It is not worthy to be mentioned when once compared with the great and sublime truths before us. Noah preached the flood a hundred and twenty years. Did he give it up? No. Did it come? It did. Now read in 2 Pet. 3: 6, 7,—"Whereby the world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." Rev. 1: 7,—"Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him." Heb. 9: 23,—"And unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation."

I thank God that a few yet look for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies and fashion them like Christ's glorious body. This hope is more than all this world to me. It is like an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast. When I look over the past, and see how in all ages the Lord has taken care of his children, led them through the sea dry shod, saved them in the lion's den, and walked with them in the fiery furnace; and when in prison sent his angels to deliver them,—will he not take care of us? He will, and give us the kingdom at last.

I thank the Lord for our much loved paper, the Crisis. I prize it next to the Bible. May it ever come laden with the present truth. There are hungry children here, and we need warm bread right from heaven. We could not eat cold, if we had it. Now I do pray that the Lord will send some holy one here to preach the word. We are languishing for spiritual food. We are not rich in this world's goods, but we have a rich Father, and I pray that he will not let us perish in these last days of peril.

Sister L. B. Weaver, I would say to you, "Is any sick, let him call for the elders of the church." "The prayer of faith shall save the sick." Where two or three "are agreed as touching any one thing, it shall be done." "All things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe . . . and ye shall have them." Nothing shall be impossible to him that believeth. The promises are immutably sure. Have faith in God. He that made heaven and earth, can he not speak, and it is done? How much good might be done if we lived by faith upon the Son of God.

Bridgewater, Vt. HANNAH P. CHASE.

From Bro. H. H. Mix.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—Permit me, through the Crisis, to say to the dear brethren scattered abroad, that through the labors of our dear Brn. Hitchcock and Piper, the neighborhood in which we live has been greatly blessed and revived, and we have really felt that in all our meetings the Spirit of the Lord has been present to aid and to bless; hence many have been led to inquire, What shall we do to be saved? About ten have professed faith in Christ, and conviction is still fastening itself upon the minds of the people.

In the good providence of God we have had a visit from our good Bro. Stewart, of Philadelphia, who, by his timely aid in preaching the Gospel, has greatly strengthened and refreshed the brethren, so that the good work of the Lord seems to be widening and deepening. Brn. Stewart and Piper have for several days been going from house to house, endeavoring by prayers and exhortations to refresh and strengthen the brethren and sisters, and all seemed disposed to take right hold and labor and pray that the good work of the Lord may have free course, run and be glorified, by the conversion of many, and the strengthening of the things that remain.

Bro. Stewart has preached with great acceptance to the people twice on Lord's day, at Wallingford Chapel (North Farms), and twice in the week at the school-house near the same place, and twice at Yalesville, by invitation of Bro. Piper, who gave place to the stranger, and on the evening following he was at North Farms. From there he took his departure for Hartford, to fill his appointment on the Lord's day. May the Lord bless his labors.

On Sunday, Sept. 17th, Brn. Perkins and Lounsburg were with us, and in the evening, who gave us words of encouragement, meat in due season. May the Lord bless their labors, as they have just commenced in the field. We bid them God speed.

Sunday, Sept. 24th, Bro. Hitchcock, who has been a faithful preacher among us, had a full house. At the close of the services, the Lord's Supper was administered. We then repaired to the water for the baptism. Two were baptized. Others seeing this ordinance performed were led to duty. Three more prepared themselves for the occasion and were buried with Christ by baptism. In the evening we had a meeting. It was a heart-cheering time; one of deep interest among the people. May the Lord continue this good work. Glory be to God for what has been done. May conviction deepen on this people. Pray for me, that when He who is our life shall appear, I may appear with him in glory, without spot. Your brother in Christ,

Yalesville, Ct. H. H. MIX.

From Sr. L. E. Saulpaugh.

BRO. GRANT:—I have lived here three years, and during that time there have been seven Advent sermons preached. There had been none for years before that, and the largest part of the town do not go to any meeting. They are tired of hearing the ordinary preaching, and so stay at home. I have tried in my feeble way to tell the great truths of the Bible, and there are many inquiring what the Bible teaches. How many have said to me, "Why don't some of your ministers come here and tell us the truth, if they have got it?" And I feel sometimes, what shall I say? I have written to different ministers, and no one seems to think it his duty to come; but I see appointments for other places two and three Sundays in succession. Ought such things to be, and where there has been Advent preaching for years, and many Advent people live who could be as lights to the place? O Lord, direct. I do know, if there is any thing to be known by the Spirit of God, he wants some of his watchmen to come here and warn this people of the coming judgment. How many souls, young and old, would receive the word and hear quickly; but how can they hear unless they have a preacher?

The people want to hear something else besides hell-fire and death-bed scenes, and sympathetic stories told to scare them into religion. They want to hear something that looks more like truth and facts. I think some time this place will rise up in judgment against some of God's ministers. They seem to go round and round to places where they have been scores of times before, and where they have been preached to so much I fear it is not treasured up as it ought to be; and they do not go out into the highways and hedges as they ought to, and compel them to come in.

I do hope the ministry will think of us. We will get a hall any time to hold a meeting in, only let us know. We will do all we can by the help of the Lord. He will help. Remember us. Come and preach the gospel to this people before it is too late. Tell them His eternal truth, and be the instrument in God's hand of saving perishing souls, that will be lost for lack of knowledge. My heart aches now to see how near we are to the judgment and they know it not. May God lead some one here to sow the good seed, that it may take root and bring forth fruit to the glory of God. Your unworthy sister,

L. E. SAULPAUGH.

Goffstown Village, N. H.

From Bro. Lounsbury.

BRO. GRANT:—About a year and a half ago, after a careful perusal of, and a diligent research into the revealed truth of the Bible, I embraced the general doctrines held by the Advent church; and for this reason, the people called Methodist, with whom I had been associated in church fellowship, withheld from me their sympathy, love, and brotherly kindness, and in the meantime called upon me to abandon the truth of God, which I now hold so dear, and take up and propagate a theory which can only be supported by heathen philosophy. To this I could not submit. Accordingly, in the month of March, the present year, in order that I might enjoy the liberty of conscience which I prize so highly, I withdrew myself from all connection with them, as a church, and have since been standing on the sure promises of the word, which are attended with increasing light.

Myself, with Bro. H. W. Perkins, whose experience has been similar to that of my own, and who has been called to share my fate, have entered the field of labor, and are endeavoring to scatter the truth wherever we go; and the Lord is in a measure blessing our feeble efforts; and we enjoy some precious seasons with the flock of God.

Sunday, Oct. 1st, we met the brethren and sisters at Campville, Ct., and the Lord was with us. The meeting increased in interest during the day, and in the evening we beheld manifest tokens of good. While prayer was being offered by the brethren, the spirit of the Lord came down with power; and as we listened to the exhortations of Brn. Perkins, Austin, Gunn, Butler, and others, and Sisters Austin, Scoville, Thorp, and others, christians shouted, sinners wept, and the cold-hearted and backslidden came forward and confessed their deplorable condition, and resolved from henceforth to rise to higher attainments in christian experience, while tears of joy and sadness fell like the water drops of a summer shower.

How great will be the amount of good resulting from this interview, we cannot yet determine; but we have every reason to believe that if the scattered few in that vicinity will continue to sow the precious seed, that He, who is faithful to his promises, will give us an abundant harvest, and many precious sheaves be gathered for the garner of the Lord.

Brethren: God speed you on in the work; and when the great gathering time shall come, and the kingdom of our Lord shall be established, we expect to meet an extensive, harmonious band, who shall come up from Campville, Ct., worthy to wear the robes of white; and range in unbroken fruition the evergreen plains of light, and help to swell the chorus of eternal glory to the great Author of our redemption. ALLEN LOUNSBURG, JR.

Bethany, Ct.

From Sr. M. J. J.

BRO. GRANT:—How I love the return of the Crisis. I love to hear from the dear scattered flock; and as I look over its exposition of truths, I notice some letters from weak ones, some sick, who are longing for Jesus to come. Such should pray continually for the Lord to give strength, that we may bear every burden. He will help us; for let us remember Jesus suffered before us. If we are suffering with adversity, remember Jesus had not where to lay his head, instead of thinking we are poor. But we are rich in faith. If we are suffering with adversity, we have the same duties to perform; and sometimes I am led to think it brings us to trust more and more in Him who has promised us bread and water if we will trust in him.

Fathers and mothers, you to whom God has committed children, do you love them so well that you are trying to save them from that great and dreadful day that is fast hastening? I see those who profess to love the Lord and his appearing, never take their children to the closet when they lift their voices to God in prayer, perhaps never tell them Jesus is soon coming, but let them go on sinning against God, breaking the Sabbath, or doing anything they choose. It seems to me strange, as much as we feel for our children, we are not more engaged for their salvation. Christ expects, when he converts fathers and mothers, that they shall instruct their children in the same good way, that families may go in to the marriage supper of the Lamb unbroken. Mothers, let us strive to bring them up as olive plants around our hearthstone; so when Jesus comes he may say to our children, Come, for of such is the kingdom of heaven. Yours in the hope of the coming of Jesus, M. J. J.

Obituaries.

BOUTELL. Died in Groton, Mass., Sept. 26th, 1865, Sarah E., the only daughter of Luther and Hannah Boutell, aged twenty-one years, five days.

Suddenly, of typhoid and lung fever, our only and dearly beloved daughter Sarah has fallen a victim to that cruel monster death. She was the comfort of our home, beloved by those who knew her, and we have hope she will soon "live again" by the coming of Jesus, the resurrection and the life. We are smitten and deeply afflicted, but our trust is in the Lord. The good hope lifts us up and is consoling. We were comforted at the funeral, by a sermon on the resurrection of the dead, by Bro. J. S. White. My wife is feeble. We are sad and lonely; dear brethren, do pray for us.

L. BOUTELL.

FLINT. Died in Farabault, Minn., Sept. 28th, 1865, Sister Ellen Flint, wife of Mason M. Flint, aged thirty-one years.

Sister Flint was visiting some friends in Minnesota, and was taken sick and died a few days before she purposed to return to her place of residence in Worcester, Mass., and was borne in sadness by her lonely companion to Westboro, Mass., where she was laid in the grave to sleep in Jesus, till he returns to raise his chosen ones, and give them immortality. Sister F. was a lovely christian.

Funeral attended by the writer, Oct. 12th, 1865. MILES GRANT.

CROCKER. Died in Fredonia, Chautauqua Co., N. Y., Sept. 29th, 1865, after a short illness, Bro. Luther Crocker, aged eighty-six years.

Bro. C. has been a believer in the doctrines of the advent of Christ, and of the kingdom of God, for over twenty years. He was a man of means, and he did good with them. Widows and orphans, and many of the Lord's poor, will rise up in the judgment and call him blessed.

A good man has gone to his rest in the grave, leaving a large family of children and grandchildren to mourn their loss.

A few remarks were offered at his funeral, by the writer, from 1 Peter 1: 3-5. C. W. LOW.

Advent papers please copy.

SHEPHERD. Died in Melvin Village, N. H., Oct. 10th, 1865, Ezra Shepherd, aged seventy-four years, five months, and twenty-three days.

Oh, the sorrows of earth! When will they end? Jesus, let thy kingdom come. C. H. SHEPHERD.

BLAISDELL. Died in Moultonborough, N. H., Sept. 22d, Sister Lydia Blaisdell, wife of Bro. John S. Blaisdell, aged fifty-three years.

Our beloved sister was one of those who for more than twenty years had contended for the faith once delivered unto the saints, and like them died in the faith. She leaves a husband and two sons to mourn. May God sanctify the affliction to their good.

Words of comfort by the writer. T. W. PIPER.

SULLIVAN. Died in Tuftonborough, N. H., Sept. 24th, John Sullivan, aged seventy-three years and nine months.

Also, in the same house, Oct. 1st, Lizzie E. Staples, grand-daughter of the same, and only child of Peltiah and Eliza Staples, aged three years, one month and four days.

Thus the aged and the youth are falling. Sermon by the writer. T. W. PIPER.

STEDMAN. Died in Oakfield, Genesee Co., N. Y., Sept. 17th, Philinda, consort of John Stedman, aged seventy-two years, six months, and twenty-nine days.

She sleeps in Jesus.

Words of consolation were spoken by H. L. Hastings, from Job 14: 13.

GLOYD. Died in Dalton, Oct. 8th, 1865, Henry, son of Austin E. and Amanda M. Gloyd, aged nine years.

Sermon by the writer, from Jer. 25: 8.

Farewell then, dearest Henry,
Farewell till we shall meet
Around the throne forever,
To chant in triumph sweet.

E. M'CULLOCH.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Advices of the 6th instant.

Liverpool, Oct. 6. Political news unimportant.

Fenian arrests continue. About 200 in all have thus far been arrested.

The examination of the six Fenians at Dublin was concluded on the 2d. Additional evidence developed nothing new of moment. Five of the prisoners were committed to take their trial for high treason. The prisoners denied that the indiscriminate slaughter of the higher classes was ever meditated.

The French news is unimportant.

DOMESTIC.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 13th.—The Department of State has been officially informed that the cholera has almost entirely disappeared from Constantinople. The infection at Palma, the capital of the Island of Marjorca, appears in a very aggravated form, and seems to baffle human skill.

A report had reached Port Mahon that the disease is spreading into the interior of Spain.

Intelligence from the Consul at Marseilles, France, is to the effect that this terrible disease is frightfully on the increase there. Eighty thousand citizens have left the city, and the deaths now average between fifty and sixty per day.

BELFAST, ME., Oct. 13.—A fire last night consumed nearly the entire business portion of this city below Washington and Cross streets. Over 100 buildings were destroyed, and the loss is at least $300,000.

The fire was caused by an incendiary. A strong wind favored the flames, which threatened the destruction of the entire city. An engine from Searsport rendered good service. Commander Wm. D. Whiting of the U. S. steamer Trojan, with his officers and crew, were most effectual in subduing the conflagration.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 10.—There is news from Kanagawa, Japan, to the last of August. A private letter from Nagasaki says heavier floods have recently occurred between Osaca and Heago than have been recorded during the last one hundred and thirty years. Serious losses have been sustained.

Advices from Osaca to July 31 report the movements of the Tycoon against the rebellious Prince Chasia. An expedition was rapidly organizing, and it was the general opinion that it would soon move toward the seat of operations.

Mount Hood, in Oregon, has been in a state of eruption since Sept. 23, and it is supposed to have some connection with the recent earthquake in California, although the central part of the State only felt the shock.

A MAN ONE HUNDRED AND FIFTEEN YEARS OLD.—There is a man two miles and a half below Newburgh, N. Y., at a place called New Windsor, who was born Aug. 15, 1751. His name is McCormick. He came to this country in 1846, from Ireland, and is now in his 115th year. He was a rebel in 1798, and has two wounds in his leg. He is well and hearty, with the exception of poor eyesight. He has always lived a very temperate life, using no tea, coffee, or tobacco, and drinking very little water, and never any milk. He has always been an early riser, and a hard working man.

A SINGULAR CEREMONY.—A masonic association in New York, called the Lodge of Perfection, performed a singular ceremony last week—a sort of imitation of christian baptism. It is described as follows:

"The members having entered in procession, were followed by a party with six children, some borne on cushions and others led by sponsors and parents—a man following behind with the sacred triangle of burning candles. This company made three circuits, escorted by the lodge, the Masons chanting praises. Then advancing to the East, they stood before the Grand Master. Prayer was read and a hymn was sung. The orator then addressed the sponsors and children, admonishing them to be true to themselves, their neighbor, their country and their God. Another prayer was then repeated. A font of perfumed water stood before the Grand Master. Taking each child's hand, he immersed it in the water, repeating its name and the words, 'I wash thee with pure water. May God give thee and maintain thee in that innocence and purity of heart of which this cleansing is a symbol.' He then marked on the forehead of each child a triangle with consecrated oil, and pronounced the invocation of blessing. A hymn was then sung; the brethren knelt and uttered a solemn vow to watch and protect these children through life. Each partook of salt in confirmation of the pledge. A locket was presented to each of the female children and a ring to the boys; also the triangle and an apron. A benediction completed the rite."

THANKSGIVING.—His Excellency the Governor, with advice of the Council, has appointed Thursday, November 30th, as the day for an annual Thanksgiving.

ITEMS.

☞ A great congress of Roman Catholics is to be held this month at Treves. Like the congress held some two years ago at Malines, it is expected that the coming assemblage (which will be the seventeenth general meeting of Catholics in Germany) will number amongst its members some of the most eminent men belonging to the Roman Catholic faith in Europe. Montalembert will be among the speakers.

☞ A great revival of religion is now progressing in all the colored churches of Richmond, and every night the churches are densely crowded. At the Third Street Baptist Church, one night last week, there appeared over one hundred seekers at the altar.

☞ Professor Snell of Amherst, who has kept a meteorological register for twenty-seven years, states that he never recorded so small an amount of rain for a single month as during the month of September last. The water that fell measured only thirty-eight hundredths of an inch.

☞ The population of Paris is rapidly overtaking that of London, and has increased more rapidly. It is now over 1,700,000, whereas London must still be under 3,000,000. Formerly the difference between the capitals was much greater.

☞ It has been calculated that in the time of Julius Cæsar, Spain contained a population of 78,000,000. In 1688 the number had dwindled down to 8,000,000. Since then the population has steadily increased, and now numbers about 16,000,000.

☞ The planet Jupiter is now our evening star, and is slowly approaching the sun, and on Dec. 31 it will set with the sun, and after that date become a morning star.

☞ Orders have been issued that all seacoast forts south of Fortress Monroe, except forts Taylor and Jefferson, Florida, will hereafter be garrisoned by colored troops.

☞ Nearly one thousand cords of wood were destroyed by fire at Fruit Hill, Providence, Saturday afternoon.

☞ A pair of dwarf elephants, not much larger than Newfoundland dogs, recently arrived in London from the interior of Africa.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 523. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge five cents; for every week since No. 468, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

☞ Sickness and absence of help in the office still prevents our making the usual acknowledgments of Cash Receipts; and some irregulations and delays have occurred in consequence. Brethren will have patience. We shall catch up as soon as we can.

For the World's Crisis.

A HOME IN HEAVEN.

AIR.—"O give me a home by the sea."

O give me a home in that land
 Made pure by the presence of God,
And waves there the conqueror's wand,
 And honor ascribed to the Lord.
I'd sing then the angel's song,
 And join in the angelic strain;
And there shall the anthem prolong
 In that land where Jesus reigns.
CHORUS.—That land where Jesus reigns.

O give me a home in that land,
 In a land from the sin-curse free,
A home with the angelic band,
 To eat there of life's healing tree.
Our Savior we'll ever adore,
 While the noon-tide of glory remains,
Nor ask in this wide world for more
 Than a home where Jesus reigns.

O give me a home in that land,
 Where the desert shall bloom as the rose,
The trees of the field clap their hands,
 And no blighting of winter earth knows.
Where the lame man shall leap as an hart,
 And roam o'er the hills and the plains,
And the tongue of the dumb bears its part
 In the home where Jesus reigns.

O give me a home in that land
 Where the meek ever dwell with the Lord;
A home with the pure spotless band,
 Redeemed by their Savior and God.
A home free from sorrow and care,
 A life free from trial and pain;
O grant in that world me a share,
 In that land where Jesus reigns.

Portland, Me. W. C. CLARK.

LETTER TO A PREACHER.

[The following extracts are taken from a pamphlet written by Dr. Adam Clarke, in 1830. Though intended as advice to ministers, the extracts which I have made will doubtless be read with interest by every reader of the Review. The reader cannot fail to see the marked antithesis between the Doctor's advice in regard to the manner of treating the word of God, and the mystical, allegorical manner in which it is now treated. Let those who are in any way inclined to grow ludicrous over the practice of Seventh-day Adventists, in abandoning the use of tea and coffee, note especially the last paragraph of these extracts. Read, contrast, and ponder.—J. W. RAYMOND.]

Remember, God is the fountain of all good; whatever comes from him will lead to him. His blessing is on his own productions, and his curse on everything besides. Son of man, saith the Lord, receive the word at my mouth, and warn them from me. Deeply consider that to be successful in bringing souls to God, you must bring the spirit of the gospel into the work of the ministry. In order to this, see to it that you retain a clear sense of God's mercy to your own soul, and while you feel this love in your heart, it will not only support you in all your trials and difficulties, but it will induce you cheerfully to spend and be spent for the salvation of those for whom Christ has died. You preach, not merely to explain God's word, but to save souls. Whenever you forget this, you go astray. Now, as no man can see the worth of the salvation which God has provided for him till he be convinced of his want of it, therefore preach the law and its terrors to make way for the gospel of Christ crucified. But take heed lest while you announce the terrors of the Lord, in order to awaken sinners and prepare them for Christ, that you do not give way to your own spirit, especially if you meet with opposition. Remember that admirable advice given by the greatest preacher God ever made, to a young man just setting out in the work: "The servant of God must not strive, but be gentle toward all, apt to teach, patient, in meekness instructing those who oppose themselves."—2 Tim. 2: 24, 25. . . . . . I have known ministers, and of no mean note either, who seldom have a soul comforted under their ministry, merely because of their harsh, austere manner of preaching the gospel. Others, far their inferiors in point of ministerial qualifications, get souls for their hire wherever they come, principally (under God) through their affectionate manner of recommending the gospel of the grace of God. Of the former it has been justly said, They make even the promises of God too hot to be held. . . . .

Never take a text that you do not fully understand, and make it a point of conscience to give the literal meaning of it to the people. This is a matter of great and solemn importance. To give God's words a different meaning from what he intended them to convey, or to put a construction upon them which we have not the fullest proof he has intended, is awful indeed. Any person who is but little acquainted with spiritual things, may give a spiritual interpretation (according to his own opinion), to any text, but it is not every person that can give the literal sense. The spiritual meaning must ever be drawn from the literal, and, indeed, when the first is known, the latter, which is its use and application, will naturally spring from it; but, without controversy, the literal meaning is that which God would have us first to understand. By not attending to this, heresies, false doctrines, and errors of all kinds have been propagated and multiplied in the world.

Remember, you are called not only to explain the things of God, but also the words of God. The meaning of the thing is found in the word, and if the word which comprises the original idea be not properly understood, the meaning of the thing can never be defined, and upon this ground the edification of the people is impossible. . . . . .

Never appear to contradict the Holy Spirit by what is called treating a subject negatively and positively. I shall waive all strictures on the barbarism of showing "negatively what a thing is not;" and will beg leave to state the following:

A citizen of no mean city took his text from Luke 12: 32:—"Fear not, little flock, for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." In opposition to the letter of the text, the preacher labored to prove that the flock of Christ is not a little, but a very large flock. And in order to this, brought in multitudes of pious heathens, vast multitudes who sought and found mercy in their last hour, together with myriads of infants, idiots, etc. . . . .

Who does not see that in the above case ignorance, or inattention to the literal meaning of the text, was the grand cause of this absurdity and contradiction? . . . .

Seldom take a very short text, because a short one may not afford you sufficient matter to entertain and instruct your congregation. There are not many to be found who have the ability to use a few words of Scripture as Addison and Steele used the Greek and Latin mottoes of their spectators. And those who have the ability should not use it in this way, for this plain reason, that in preaching God should be heard more than man. But where imagination and invention are put to the rack to supply the place of the words of God, the hearers may admire the address of the preacher, but are not likely to be fed with the bread of life. In such cases man speaks most, God least. Such preaching must leave the people ignorant of the Scriptures. With many, at present, preaching is become more of a human art than a divine science. And when this is considered, we need not wonder that the pulpit is so often employed without becoming a means of salvation to them that hear. . . . . .

Go from your knees to the chapel. Get a renewal of your commission every time you go to preach, in a renewed sense of the favor of God. Carry your authority to declare the gospel of Christ not in your hand, but in your heart. When in the pulpit, be always solemn. Say nothing to make your congregation laugh. Remember, you are speaking for eternity; and trifling is inconsistent with such awful subjects as the great God, the agony and death of Christ, the torments of hell, and the happiness of heaven.

Never assume an air of importance in the pulpit; you stand in an awful place, and God hates the proud man. . . . . .

The pulpit appears to me analagous to the box in which witnesses are sworn in a court of justice, "to say the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth." You are a witness for God, and are bound by more, if possible, than an oath, to speak the truth in righteousness, and to declare faithfully and solemnly, according to the best of your knowledge, the whole counsel of God. . . . .

In your prayers, avoid long prefaces and circumlocution. You find none of these in the Bible. Some have got a method of complimenting the Most High on the dignity of his nature, and the glory of his heavens. This you should studiously avoid. He that cometh to God must know that HE IS; and a proper consideration of his being, power, holiness and mercy, cannot fail deeply to impress your mind, and lead you at once even to his seat. You should never come into the congregation but in the spirit of prayer. Let your mind be wound up in that spirit in your closet, and then in your prayers in the congregation you will appear what you should be, a man familiar with God. Examine the Scriptures, and you will find that all the holy men of God prayed in this way. They came directly to the throne and preferred their suit; ever considering themselves in the presence of God, the very commencement of their supplications seems no other than an external continuance of prayers in which their hearts had been long previously engaged. . . . .

You may easily find many treatises written on the gift of preaching, the eloquence of the pulpit, the composition of the sermon, both in our own language and in foreign tongues; and he who has a good judgment may profit by them. But I must confess, all I have ever read on the subject has never conveyed so much information to my mind on the original, and in my opinion the only proper mode of preaching, as Neh. 8: 8:—"So they read in the book of the law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense and caused them to understand the reading." A few moments spent considering this subject will not be lost. . . . .

First. They read in the book of the law of God. The words of God are the proper matter of preaching, for they contain the wisdom of the Most High, and reveal to man the things which make for his peace.

Second. They read distinctly: m'phorash, from parash, to expand—they analyzed, dilated, and expounded it at large.

Third. They gave the sense—v'son sekel, put weight to it—i. e., showed its importance and utility; thus applying verbal criticism and general exposition to the most important purpose.

Fourth. They caused them to understand the reading: vaiyabinu bammikra, and they understood, had a mental taste and perception of the things which were in the reading —i. e., in the letter and spirit of the text. . . .

While you are engaged in the pulpit in recommending the salvation of God, endeavor to feel the truth you preach, and diffuse a divine animation through every heart. As the preacher appears to preach, the people hear and believe. You may set it down as an incontrovertible truth, that none of your hearers will be more affected with your discourse than yourself. A dull, dead preacher, makes a dull, dead congregation. . . . . .

Seventeen years ago I met with Mr. Wesley's letter on tea. I read it, and resolved from that hour to drink no more of the juice of that herb till I could answer his arguments and objections. I never saw that tract since, and from that day until now, I have not drank a cup of tea or coffee. For these things I mostly found a substitute in the morning, and when I could not, I cheerfully went without breakfast; and in their place I never took any thing in the evening. By this line of conduct, I have not only joined hands with God to preserve a feeble constitution; but I can demonstrate that I have actually saved two whole years of time which otherwise must have been irrecoverably lost, and perhaps my soul with it.—Review.

PAUL AND BARNABAS.

"The contention was so sharp between them, that they departed asunder one from the other."—ACTS 15: 39.

The old adversary, doubtless, desires to create strife among brethren, and he stands ready to fan the flame when the contention is growing sharp between them. Paul was "not ignorant of his devices," yet he was sometimes hindered, and perplexed, and apparently thwarted in his purposes by him. Satan knows that he can never gain the final victory in the war he is waging against the saints of the Most High; yet he often seems to win small victories, and get possession of some of the outer works of the army of Jesus. And he could hardly fail to be pleased to see strife between two such valiant soldiers as Paul and Barnabas. The enemy soon heard one say, "I am Paul;" another, "I follow Barnabas;" others, "we are of Apollos." As a "house divided against itself cannot stand," it is his constant aim to divide the house of the Lord. We may not understand his tactics as well as Paul did, but we can see some of his ways.

When he can find a heart that is capable of envy, he makes haste to stir up that heart, and if possible cause it to manifest venom and spite toward those who stand high in the church. And when he finds one that is irritable and very sensitive, he aims to draw such a one into debate with one who is hard and overbearing, in order, if possible, to throw one or both off the track and destroy them.

The admonition of Paul should be kept in mind by our "strong" brethren. "Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish for whom Christ died?" O how can you trample under your feet the weak ones, and yet retain your acceptance with God? Read the following article from an exchange, and ponder it carefully:

TAKE CARE.

"Do not wound the hearts of those you should shield. Your anger may sting venomously. Your jealousy may do a mischief in one short hour that your whole life cannot repair. Your cruel pride may do a whole age's work in a day. You cannot take back the injuries you have done to those whose hearts lie throbbing next to yours. Ah! when winter has frozen my heliotropes, it makes no difference that the next morning thaws them out. There lie the heliotropes a black, noisome heap. And it is possible for you to chill a tender nature so that no thawing can restore it. You may relent, but frost has been there, and you cannot bring back freshness and fragrance to the blossom. You cannot sweeten the embittered heart to which your words have been like scorpions. It is a terrible thing for a man to have the power of poisoning the hearts of others, and yet carry that power carelessly. He cannot find place for repentance, though he seeks it carefully with tears."

And another terrible thought is that, when we offend the weak brother, we "sin against CHRIST." "It were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he cast into the sea, than that he should offend one of these little ones."—Luke 17: 2.

THE PHILOSOPHY OF CHRISTIANITY.

What is the philosophy of christianity? I answer: it consists in keeping sacred the laws of life—in fearing God and keeping his commandments. Not with a slavish fear, but with a fear that opens the way to our present and future happiness.

In looking out upon the civilized part of the world, the Christian philosopher finds much to regret, as well as to admire—a dark, as well as a bright side of the moral picture. Hypocrisy, narrow-minded bigotry, and pharisaical pride, are taking the place of the lowly and sincere purity which the followers of Christ should ever put on. Many of his professed disciples, even those who weekly proclaim him and his gospel, instead of the armor of holiness, have girded on the weapons of worldly warfare, and are wielding them, much to the injury of God's cause on earth.

This I believe to be the effect of prescribing the idea of evangelical religion,—true christianity. This has become too confined and limited by too many rules. The religion of Christ has a broad platform encircling the whole family of man, without distinction of condition or sect. It is, in fact, synonymous with universal love and impartial philanthropy. It is an emanation from on high—a germ of divinity itself, that is planted in the breast of all, and may unfold its beauty as well in the life of the red man, who offers his humble prayers to the Great Spirit, as in him who sits weekly within the sanctuary. Its existence is not in sure dependence upon a ceremonious performance, or even a knowledge of any system of christianity. The untutored savage, who deals justly and kindly toward all, who has charity, and abounds in love to his fellow man; who, in short, obeys all the requirements of the moral law within him, is more worthy of the name of christian, than he who is robed in lawn, prays every day at the corners of the streets, puts his name to charity donation papers, gotten up by fashion, or adopts any other of the many prevalent methods of being christian by rule.

Christianity can not be reduced to any code or creed. It is unlimited, involuntary, as it were, boundless and free as the mountain air, and as unstinted in its measure. Its seed is in every heart, and needs but the enlivened touch of a master hand to spring forth in beauty and strength, and yield fruits meet for immortality. But let it be nourished only by the hand of cold ceremony; let it be reared merely for the praise and homage of the crowd, and most assuredly will it wither as beneath the rude touch of the northern wind.

I would not, however, advocate an entire disregard of all ceremonies. On the contrary, I believe many of them shadow forth most beautifully the truths and power of the gospel, and with more effect on the heart than can possibly be done by mere precept. I know that many ceremonies are simple and direct in their application, that are sanctioned by the Savior, and should be dear to the heart of every christian. Let such be perpetuated,—let them entwine themselves around the soul of every believer, as sacred types of the religion he possesses. But I would most earnestly censure a pompous display of forms without the substance.

Let us beware lest we render the death and preaching of Christ of no avail, by engrafting on the pure and perfect system he has left for us to adopt. Let us not follow the shadow, to the utter neglect of the substance. Rather, let us look first to our own hearts. Let the religion of Christ be in our souls. Let them be filled with true love to God and our fellow men, and the fruit from such a spirit must stand forth in all the beauty of holiness. From such a heart a rich and acceptable incense must ever ascend to the throne of Infinite Goodness.

I fear that our brethren who have taken up the cross of Christ are not careful enough to look well to themselves to see that they have girded on the whole armor of God, and for all seasons. It cannot be taken off and put on as our worldly passions may dictate. It must not be put on at the door of the house of God, and laid aside at the same place. It must be borne at all times, in season and out of season. We have ofttimes within us feelings and passions not like the principles cherished by our divine Master. Against such feelings and passions there is need of perpetual warfare; and when we have conquered them, root and branch; when we feel that we are holy, for holiness' sake; when we realize the Lord is with us, then indeed shall we find his yoke easy and his burden light; then indeed shall we feel a joy unspeakable and full of glory. And when we shall lie down to yield our soul to Him who gave it, the sweet "voice of days that are gone" shall come with their hallowing influences and soothe and soften the pillow of death, and shed a joyful radiance over our path to the end.

I see on the horizon of the future tokens of a brighter day. The people in some measure are beginning to feel and understand their rights. The time will soon come when there will be no aristocracy but that which nature has instituted—the aristocracy of merit. The time has nearly arrived in which all artificial partition walls will be broken down. Men begin to feel that they are bound together by stronger and sacred bonds, and they will burst the fetters of every system which tends to check the generous outpourings of their souls. The friends of liberal principles have everything to hope, and nothing to fear. The night is far spent, and the day is at hand. Brethren and sisters, let us prepare to meet our Judge in peace. J. ELKINS.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER NINETEEN.

To F. M——. My Dear Sister:—Why do you so long linger around the fountain, fearful to plunge into its crimson depths and be cleansed? Are you not yet satisfied that all of your own efforts to make your heart better are wholly unavailing? With thousands you are stumbling at the simplicity of the way of faith. How hard to believe that you may come just as you are—just now—and be made every whit whole.

You feel somewhat as the friend did with whom we conversed several years ago on this point. When told that he must make the entire consecration of himself to God, lay all upon the sacred altar that sanctifieth the gift, and then reckon himself from henceforth the Lord's, to serve him, he replied, "That is too simple; I must do something more than this." That is the great trouble; we want to do something great ourselves; this simply bathing seven times in Jordan, is altogether "too simple. Had the Lord bidden us do some great thing, instead of simply believing on him, why, we would have gladly done it."

It seems almost incredible that by just believing on Christ as our justifier, our Savior, we shall pass from death unto life—be regenerated—become a new creature in Christ Jesus, adopted into the family of God, and receive the gift of the Holy Spirit. And so, too, with those who are justified, but are seeking to be wholly sanctified, sealed with the Spirit unto the day of redemption, endued with power from on high. They read in Holy Writ, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification," and they know that an inspired apostle prayed for some, that God would sanctify them wholly; so the fact is very evident that it is the will of God that his people be wholly sanctified, and then preserved thus blameless unto the appearing of Christ. They know, too, that Christ gave himself for the church, that he might redeem her from all iniquity, and purify her unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works. There is therefore no evading the fact that God wills their entire sanctification, and that Christ is the one who can redeem them from all iniquity.

But the point at which many stumble is this: believing that they do become a holy and acceptable offering, just when they present their bodies a living sacrifice to God, through Jesus Christ. They present their offering upon the altar; they yield all to God; but here they stop, and for what? Why, they are waiting to feel that God accepts them; to feel that the blood of Jesus cleanses them, before they believe. And thus they might wait forever ere they would feel this, if they do not first believe.

Faith is the one condition of salvation. Consecration is only the preparatory step. It is is essential to faith; no one can savingly believe until consecrated; but the consecration will never bring salvation without the faith. And would you know what kind of faith is necessary? It is the faith spoken of by John (5: 14), "And this is the confidence we have in him, that if we ask anything ACCORDING TO HIS WILL, HE HEARETH US; and if we know that he hears us, whatsoever we ask, WE KNOW THAT WE HAVE THE PETITIONS THAT WE DESIRED OF HIM." Ponder this well, and receive it into your heart.

You have already read the express declaration, "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." That point is settled, then; it is God's will that you be sanctified. Very well. Now have you the confidence expressed by John, viz: that if we ask anything according to God's will, he heareth us (that is settled—He heareth us); and if he heareth us, we know that we have the petitions we desired of him? Or as Jesus himself has taught us, "All things whatsoever ye desire when ye pray, believe that ye receive them, and ye shall have them." That is the kind of faith requisite to bring pardon, or purity.

"But I am afraid thus to believe," say you. Afraid of what?

"Why, I fear that I shall not be accepted and saved if I do believe. I want to have some evidence within, some different feelings from what I now have, and then I would venture on Christ."

Has he not said, "I will receive you"?

"Why yes, but then I want to feel that he receives me before I believe."

Are you aware, my dear friend, that you insult God by such a demand? that you do virtually say to him, "I cannot believe thy word without some other evidence confirmatory of its truth"? True faith, God-honoring, soul-saving faith, looks to the promise, and that alone; laughs at impossibilities, and cries, "It shall be done."

A short time since we conversed with a young lady who was almost in a state of despair. For two years she had been seeking Christ, but failed to obtain an evidence of pardoned sin. She was willing to come out from the world, and take the cross of Christ. She bore reproach for his sake; she confessed openly her desire for salvation; she prayed much, and if cross-bearing, confessing Christ before men, and pleading with many tears, could have saved her, those years of sorrow had not been hers. She was willing, apparently, to do anything, except to believe without any other evidence than the word of God that Jesus did receive and save her. She wanted to have the inward witness of the Spirit before she believed, forgetful of the fact that "he that believeth hath the witness," none others.

An incident was related illustrating her difficulty, and the happy result which followed the abandonment of feeling, and simply resting by faith on God's promises. When concluded, she exclaimed, "I will trust in Jesus; I believe he does save me!" and immediately with a sunny smile said, "I feel better already." Then she began to feel, and why? Because she had believed on Christ as her Savior.

Soon she remarked, "I am going to stay and be baptized." She had intended leaving the tented grove, when we first addressed her. When, in the afternoon, she was led from her watery grave to the shore, her countenance bespoke the light and peace within.

What caused this sudden transition from a state of utter darkness and doubt, almost of complete despair? It was faith—faith stepping out, at Christ's command, on his word of promise.

Then, in conclusion, we say to you, "Go thou and do likewise," and thy faith shall make thee whole." Yours in love, M. D. W.

LIGHT ADVANCING.

We are glad to see the light and truth advancing on the subject of future punishment. Able and devoted men on both continents, in different evangelical churches, are giving the subject a careful investigation. The following, from "The Rainbow, a magazine of Christian Literature," published in London, is an item of interest:—ED.

DEAR SIR:—In the June number of THE RAINBOW, a correspondent, signing himself "Inquirer," touched upon a question of very deep and awful interest—which, in common, I have reason to believe, with others among your readers, I could wish to have fully and fairly discussed in your impartial pages. I have accordingly waited with some anxiety to see whether any notice was taken of "Inquirer's" letter; hitherto I have been disappointed, but from a notice on the cover of the current number I see that a reply is to appear next month. This reply may lead, as I hope, to a further discussion, and in view of this result I venture to call attention to a question which, it appears to me, underlies the whole subject of eternal punishment.

This subject of eternal punishment is surely one which, however painful, claims our most earnest attention in connexion with "the revealed future of the Church and the world." Truly has Professor Plumptre recently observed: "The question is one which our generation seems called upon to face, and which needs to be faced truthfully and fearlessly. As yet we are living in a warfare of half-truths. Noble and earnest words have been spoken on both sides also, it must be confessed, rash and railing and angry words; but we look almost in vain on either for even an approximation to the right method of inquiry."

What "the right method" may be is of course a matter of opinion. Professor Plumptre advocates the critical history of the doctrine, and doubtless this, if carried out with adequate learning and in a candid spirit, would be a most important and interesting line of inquiry. Still I am, for my own part, strongly of opinion that the question of the eternity of future punishment can not be fairly handled till the previous question to which I desire to draw attention—that, namely, of the natural immortality of man—has been settled. For, as Dean Sherlock candidly said long ago, "Whatever other difficulties there may be in eternal punishments, this will be an unanswerable one, that a mortal creature should be made immortal to be punished for ever. For eternal punishments can never be just, if the person who is to suffer them be by nature mortal. For such punishments as exceed the proportion of nature must exceed the proportion of justice too." My question, then, is: What evidence have we, either from reason or Scripture, to prove that man is naturally immortal? or, in other words, that he will and must exist to all eternity, unless annihilated by a miraculous exercise of Divine power. With the arguments commonly adduced from reason I am tolerably familiar; but while I quite admit, nay, strenuously maintain, that, taken collectively, they amount to a high probability, if not a demonstration, that man is to exist in a future state, they fail altogether to prove the eternal duration of that state, or of his being itself. We must beware of a pitfall here, into which almost all writers on the immortality of the soul have either blindly or wilfully fallen: the failing to distinguish between a future life and an endless life, and regarding that which is a proof of the former as necessarily also a proof of the latter, which is by no means the case.

We have, then, after all, to rely upon the testimony of Scripture, and here, perhaps, the question may be narrowed to this: Does the Scripture contain one passage which either explicitly asserts or necessarily implies the natural immortality of man? Will any of your readers kindly adduce such a passage? The Rev. Howard Hinton, in his "Athanasia, recently published, brings forward as a proof-text, and with no small air of triumph, Luke 20 36; but I hardly think any intelligent reader of THE RAINBOW will be disposed to follow his example; certainly no one, who understands the blessed doctrine of the first resurrection, to which, of course, that passage has exclusive reference.

I am, dear sir, yours respectfully, M. M.

TRUE CHRISTIAN LIFE.

Did a holy life consist of one or two noble deeds—some signal specimens of doing, or enduring, or suffering—we might account for the failure, and reckon it small dishonor to turn back in such a conflict. But a holy life is made up of small things. It is the little things of the hour, and not the great things of the age, that fill up a life like that of Paul and John, like that of Rutherford, or Brainerd, or Martyn. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles, nor battles, nor one great heroic act or martyrdom, make up the true christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloam, "that go softly" in their meek mission of refreshment, not the waters of torrent, noise and force, are the true symbols of a holy life.

The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, little indulgences of self and the flesh, little acts of indolence or indecision, slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations or aberrations from high integrity, little touches of shabbiness and meanness, little bits of covetousness and penuriousness, little exhibitions of worldliness and gaiety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper or crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such little things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life. And then attention to the little duties of the day and hour in public transactions, or private dealings, or family arrangements; to little words, and looks, and tones; little benevolences, or forbearances, or tendernesses; little self-denials, self-restraints, and self-forgetfulnesses; little plans of quiet kindness, and the thoughtful consideration for others; to punctuality, and method, and true aim, in the ordering of each day,—these are the active developments of a holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed.

What makes yon hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slope composed of innumerable blades of grass. It is of small things that a life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible character to admire or copy.—Dr. Bonar.

☞ A christian in business should deal with God as he does with his wife and children, when he comes home at night after a whole day's worldly employment; he brings his affections to them as entire at night as when he went out in the morning. So should he be ready for communion with God at all times, and bring him back his whole heart after the toil and bustle of the day are gone.—Gurnall.

☞ The goldsmith, when he puts a wedge into the fire, stands by till the dross be consumed. So God is with his children in the furnace of affliction. He brings them into affliction; he continues with them in affliction; and he brings them at last out of affliction.—Sibbes.

☞ No one places any confidence in persons who are habitually behind time. They scarcely ever succeed in any enterprise. Therefore, for your own sake, as well as for the sake of others, be punctual.

WHEN TO PICK APPLES AND PEARS.—Most people let apples and pears become too ripe before they gather them. They wait to see them fully ripe—ready to fall off the tree—before they pick them. This is wrong. If picked a few days before maturing, they will keep longer, color more highly and command a higher price in market. The precise time to pick is rather difficult to determine. The best criterion is to raise the fruit up, and bend the stem over, and if the stem parts from the shoot without breaking, the fruit is ready to pick, whether apples or pears. Pears should be picked proportionately earlier than apples. The quality of the fruit is also improved by early gathering. After being picked it should be put in tight boxes or barrels, and kept a few days in the dark, if of summer or fall varieties. Here they undergo a sweating process, and when the barrel is opened, the fruit will be found of the brightest crimson and richest golden colors. Half the secret success in orcharding is in knowing how and when to pick fruit, and how to get it to market so as to command the highest price and readiest sales. Every one's experience must govern him, and the more he studies this matter the more expert he will become. We are anxious all our readers should think while they work—that the mind should be exercised as well as the muscle in all farm operations; and particularly should this be the case in fruit growing, where skill of the highest order will always be suitably rewarded.

A SNAKE IN THE GRASS.

THE HORRORS OF DELIRIUM TREMENS.

Come, listen awhile to me, my lad,
Come, listen to me for a spell!
 Let that terrible drum
 For a moment be dumb,
For your uncle is going to tell
 What befell
A youth who loved liquor too well.

A clever young man was he, my lad,
And with beauty uncommonly blessed,
 Ere with brandy and wine
 He began to decline,
And behaved like a person possessed;
 I protest
The temperance plan is the best.

One evening he went to a tavern, my lad,
He went to a tavern one night,
 And drinking too much
 Rum, brandy, and such,
The chap got exceedingly "tight";
 And was quite
What your aunt would entitle a "fright."

The fellow fell into a snooze, my lad;
'Tis a horrible slumber he takes—
 He trembles with fear,
 And acts very queer;
My eyes! how he shivers and shakes
 When he wakes,
And raves about horrid great snakes!

'Tis a warning to you and to me, my lad,
A particular caution to all—
 Though no one can see
 The viper but he—
To hear the poor lunatic bawl,
 "How they crawl!
All over the floor and the wall!"

Next morning he took to his bed, my lad,
Next morning he took to his bed;
 And he never got up,
 To dine or to sup,
Though properly physicked and bled;
 And I read
Next day the poor fellow was dead.

You've heard of the snake in the grass, my lad,
Of the viper concealed in the grass;
 But now you must know,
 Man's deadliest foe
Is a snake of a different class:
 Alas!—
'Tis the viper that lurks in the glass.

J. G. SAXE.

A FOOLISH FEAR; OR, THE DEATH-WATCH.

"O, mamma, I am sorry about that death-watch. Do you think it is really true?"

"What do you mean, Annie? I do not understand you."

"O, did you not know, mamma, that there's a death watch in the nursery? And we hear it every night, and Jane says it did come true in the last place that she lived at, for the eldest young lady died before the year was ended."

"What did come true, Annie?"

"The sign that the death-watch gave was a true one, I mean."

"Do you know what the death-watch is, Annie?"

"It is a strange sound, mamma."

"But you know there must always be cause for a sound. It is either produced by some living creature, or caused by the action of the air upon some object not living; as, for instance, the rustling of the leaves, or the noise that is made upon the window when a cart passes the house."

"Then is the death-sound made by anything that is alive, mamma?"

"Yes, it is, my dear. Would you like to hear something about it?"

"I should like to hear all about it very much, and to see it, too, if I could; though I think I could not help disliking it because it brings such a gloomy message."

"That would not be quite right to dislike the messenger because of the message—would it? But now, first of all, tell me what is this sad message which has distressed my little girl?"

"O, mamma, Jane says that whenever the death-watch is heard in any house, it is a sign that some one belonging to that house will die before the end of the year, and I can't bear to think of it; it makes me quite sad."

"Do not distress yourself, my child. It is made by a little insect—a kind of beetle—which makes its home in the walls of old houses; and this ticking sound, which has brought so much terror to many a mind, is only the call which this little beetle gives to its companion, and which it keeps repeating till the companion answers in the same manner. A long time ago some people who could not see anything to cause this ticking, and who did not understand much of the habits and nature of insects, said that this unusual sound must be the sign of something dreadful, and concluded it was come to tell them that there was soon to be a death in that house, and there was a death there before many months had passed away, and so it came to be believed that this sound was always the sign of a death in the place where it was heard, and thus the insect which caused it got the name of the death-watch. And even now, though people are not so superstitious as they were, yet many who do not know any better, alarm themselves very much when they hear this simple sound, and yet the same people can hear the true word of God spoken to them, saying, 'Ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh,' and feel unmoved. This shows us how foolish the heart of man is.

But I will tell you the history of a poor girl whose illness was greatly increased, if not brought on, by such a fright. Her name was Esther Lilly. She was a scullery maid in a gentleman's house. One day when the call of the beetle was heard, the other servants talked about it, and wondered what was going to happen, and who was going to die and then they forgot all about it. But it was not so with poor Esther; she kept on thinking again and again of this strange little noise, till she made herself quite ill. She never had strong health, and now she grew daily more pale and sickly, and more quiet and reserved; for the one dreadful thought would still come to her mind that very likely she might be the one who would have to die so soon. Poor Esther had not come to the Lord Jesus Christ for the pardon of her sins; for if she had, she need not have felt alarmed at the prospect of death. The bright heavenly home which is prepared for all those who love God, was hidden by sin from Esther's eyes.

Nobody knew what it was that troubled Esther; and it was not till she lay upon her death bed that she told one of her fellow-servants how frightened she had been at the thought of death. I am sorry I cannot tell you that there was hope in her end. The alarm had not the effect of rousing Esther's concern about her soul, but she seemed to care only for getting better, that she might enjoy the things of the world; and, unhappily for her, she lived in a house where there was not the fear of God. But you see, dear Annie, how needlessly we may alarm ourselves. I do not say that Esther Lilly would have died had she not been so frightened; but the ticking of the beetle might have been heard, and no one have died for a long, long time in that house. I know myself of a house in which it is heard every spring, and there has not been a death in that household for years. I am glad you have given me an opportunity of explaining this to you, and I hope you will not now feel so distressed when you hear the ticking of the little insect in the nursery. I must tell Jane about it too; and I must desire her not to alarm foolish people by talking so ignorantly on this subject. It is, indeed, very wrong and sinful for servants to fill the minds of children in a family with superstitious notions.

We know not the day nor the hour when God shall see fit to call us away from this world. He has not thought it needful for us to know, and it is in kindness to us that he has hidden from our eyes the things that shall come to pass. But we must not forget what he has told us—to be ready. It may be that God may this year take some one out of this house. May we all be made ready through grace, and may we be washed in Jesus' blood, and clothed in his righteousness. But I do not think that little ticking of the beetle has anything to do with teaching us God's will: that he teaches us by his holy word."

Annie was comforted by mamma's explanation about the death-watch; but before she slept that night, she prayed earnestly to God that all her sins might be forgiven, and that she, and every one in that house, might be made ready to go whenever God's voice should call them; and it was not till many years after that death visited that dwelling. And then two dear ones were called to die; but they had been warned before, not by the sound of the death-watch, as the little beetle is called, but by God's own word. They had fled to Jesus; so they gladly heard his voice calling them away from a world of sin.

Dear readers, are you ready?—Child's Magazine.

LITTLE MARY'S GRIEF.

What is the matter with little Mary? There is some big sorrow swelling her young heart. She is full of grief and shame. What can be the cause of Mary's woe?

Mary has been doing wrong. Sorrow very seldom finds its way into a child's heart unless sin open the door. What has Mary done?

An hour ago Mary was playing in high glee with her two brothers when a sudden thought about cherries popped into her head. There was a big cherry tree at the foot of the garden which was at the back of Mary's home. They were almost ripe, and she longed to taste them, for when ripe they were nice sweet "black hearts," as Mary knew. So she ran to her mother and said:

"Mamma, may I go down the lot and see if the cherries are ripe?"

"They are not ripe, my dear," replied her mother, "I sent John to see this morning."

This ought to have satisfied Mary. It would if she had not felt a little more self-will than usual in her breast. But instead of going on quietly with her play, she put on a scowling face and in a bitter tone said:

"You are an ugly old mother. I don't like you one bit. I wish I had some one else for my mother.

These were strange words to fall from little Mary's lips. Had each word been a toad or a viper her mother would not have been more surprised nor so much pained as she was to hear her daughter speak so. The good woman felt stunned. She sighed, cast a look of wonder, grief, and pity upon the little girl, and said:

"My child, when I am gone you will be sorry for the way you have spoken to your mother."

Now if Mary's mother had whipped her ever so severely she would not have felt as she did when she heard these words. The tones, the look, the words, all pierced the poor child's heart. They made her feel the wickedness of her conduct just as the look of Jesus made Peter feel the sin of denying his Master.

With a broken and contrite spirit Mary ran after her mother, and, falling at her feet, craved to be forgiven. She was forgiven and taught to seek pardon at the feet of Jesus too.

Mary is a woman now. Her mother is dead. But Mary has never forgiven herself for speaking those wicked words to her mother. She would give almost anything she has if she could unsay them. That cannot be. Words once spoken cannot be recalled. O how careful children should be of their words! Yes, and of their actions also. Dear child, ask God to keep you from doing any act or saying any word you wish undone or unsaid when you grow older and wiser, or when you shall stand at the bar of Christ to be judged.

"THE SHADOWS OF EARTH'S SUNSET."

Earth's sun will soon set; the shadows grow long,
And twilight fast gathers around;
Deep slumber now heavily presses on some,
While others are sleeping profound.

Oh, herald of Jesus! how solemn the warning
That thou to a world lost in sin art to give;
To awaken the sinner, to rouse up the christian,
That they may be ready with Jesus to live.

Already the fields are white for the harvest,
The great autumn of time, with its leaf pale and sere,
Gives token unerring that Jesus is coming,—
O sinner, awaken! for judgment prepare.

Toil on, lonely pilgrim; may Jesus be with thee,
And guide to his praise and glory while here,
Till thy mission is ended, thy warfare is over,
And thou free from all sin in his presence appear.

THE JUBILEE.

Some are of the opinion that the jubilee was the forty-ninth year of the Jewish cycle, others suppose that the jubilee was pointed out by a cycle of fifty years; both of which we think incorrect. Hence, our object in this article is to prove, first, that the jubilee was pointed out by the cycle of forty-nine years; second, that the jubilee was not the forty-ninth, but the fiftieth year, which Moses has made so plain. I am at a loss to know how there could have ever been more than one opinion concerning this, for saith the Lord, "The seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month."—Lev. 25: 4-9.

From this it is clear that the jubilee begins at the end of the forty-ninth year; therefore, forming no part of the forty-ninth, it is properly the fiftieth year.

To make this plain to all, let us suppose that the tenth day of the seventh month, A. D. 6, was the beginning of a jubilee. If to this we add forty-nine years, we will have the tenth day of the seventh month, A. D. 55, for the beginning of the next jubilee.

Observe that the last day of the forty-ninth year, being in the past, the jubilee can form no part of the forty-ninth, hence, is properly the fiftieth year, and the law says, "a jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you."—Lev. 25: 11. Now, are not two points here made clear? 1. That the jubilee is not the forty-ninth year, for it is not proclaimed until the end of that year. 2. That the "space of the seven Sabbaths of years" between the two days on which the jubilee is proclaimed was forty-nine, and not fifty years, as some seem to suppose.

Josephus teaches the same thing. He says Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year, as he had prescribed to them to rest from working every seventh day, and ordered that then what grew of its own accord, out of the earth, should, in common, belong to all that pleased to use it, making no distinction in that respect between their own countrymen and foreigners; and he ordered that they should do the same after seven times seven years; which is not fifty but forty-nine years. But if you would include the jubilee, he adds, "which in all are fifty years, and that fiftieth year is called by the Hebrews the jubilee."—(An. b. 3, c. 12, s. 3.)

The supposition that Josephus may have meant that the forty-nine years were the interval between two jubilees, has given rise to the opinion that the jubilee cycle was fifty years; but a mere conjecture should not be offered as an argument against the express words both of Josephus and Moses.

Josephus' express words are, that Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year," by which he could not have meant the jubilee; and now in reckoning, not from the jubilee, but from this sabbatical year, he says, Moses "ordered that he should do the same after seven times seven years." So he clearly makes the interval not between two jubilees, but between a sabbatical year and the jubilee just forty-nine years; hence the jubilee is the fiftieth year, which is in exact harmony with Moses.

It will now be discovered that the jubilee was the fiftieth year, in the same way that the first year of their cycle of seven was the eighth year. For example, it is said, "Ye shall sow the eighth year."—Lev. 25: 22. Here the first year of the cycle of seven is by the same writer, and that in the same chapter, as clearly called the eighth year, as the first year of the cycle of forty-nine, is called the fiftieth year.

The first year of the cycle is called the eighth year, because it follows the seventh. And so with the jubilee, it is called the fiftieth year, because it follows the forty-ninth; and yet it is as properly the first year of their next cycle of forty-nine as the eighth year is the first of the cycle of seven. The following diagram will illustrate how the first year of the cycle of seven was the eighth in reckoning from the last sabbatical year, and how the first year of the cycle of forty-nine was the fiftieth from the beginning of the last jubilee:

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
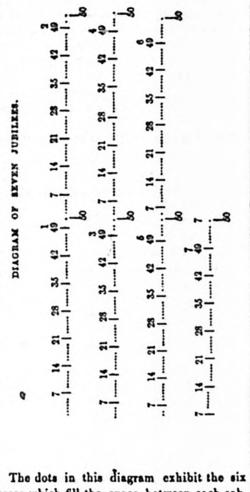
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	1	2	3	4

The first line is the number from the last sabbatical year; the second line from the last jubilee, and the third line the continued cycle of seven years. This diagram will make it plain how the first year of the cycle of seven was the eighth year, and the first of the cycle of forty-nine as properly the fiftieth year, in that it follows the forty-ninth.

We will now add another diagram, by which we wish to show that it is as absurd to say that the jubilee was pointed out by a cycle of fifty years, as to say that the sabbatical year was a cycle of eight years.



The dots in this diagram exhibit the six years which fill the space between each sabbatical year. The lines raised above the dots are the sabbatical years, and the figures placed above them give the number of years since the last jubilee. The figures above each forty-ninth year give the number of jubilees. The lines falling below the dots, against which fifty is placed, point out the year in which the jubilee would fall if reckoned by a cycle of fifty years. By reference to the foregoing diagram, the reader will discover that if we use a cycle of fifty years, the "seven Sabbaths of years," in the second cycle, would occupy the space of only forty-eight years, the third forty-seven, the fourth forty-six, the fifth forty-five, the sixth forty-four, and the seventh only forty-three. But the express law is, that "the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years."

It is added, "Then," that is, at the end of the seven Sabbaths of years, "shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound." But if we use a cycle of fifty years, the trumpet of the jubilee in the second cycle would not sound until two years after; in the third, three years after; in the fourth, four years after; in the fifth, five years after; in the sixth, six years after; and in the seventh, not until seven years after the sabbatical year; for two years must be added to the second cycle of seven Sabbaths, three to the third, four to the fourth, five to the fifth, six to the sixth, to make out the complete cycle of fifty years. And though the express language of the law is, "Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years," we would have to add another entire Sabbath of years unto the seventh cycle, thus making eight Sabbaths where the law requires but seven.

Observe also that in the fifth cycle, the sixth year, which was to supply the demands of the jubilee Sabbath, occurs five years before the beginning of the jubilee; and in the sixth cycle, the jubilee would fall in the very year that was to yield its supply. And the law, "six years shalt thou sow thy field," would in every jubilee cycle be violated.

This being too grossly absurd to be received, some of the advocates of the fifty year cycle commence a new epoch, from which to reckon the sabbatical year, at the end of each jubilee. This is done by leaving the fiftieth year as a blank, or omitting to reckon it in the cycle of seven. By this omission the first year of the next cycle falls one entire year lower, for it is thus made to begin with what is properly the second year of the next cycle, as exhibited in the following diagram:—

4	5	6	7	1	2	3	4	5
46	47	48	49	50	1	2	3	4
4	5	6	7		1	2	3	4

The first line is the continued cycle of seven years, as enjoined in the law. The second is the cycle of fifty years; and the third, the method used by those who, omitting to reckon the fiftieth year, thus begin a new epoch from which to reckon the next cycle.

But observe, that this violates the law,—"At the end of every seven years, thou shalt make a release" (Deut. 15: 1), for "the seventh year is the year of release" (Deut. 15: 9). But this arrangement once in fifty years would place the year of release after eight years, instead of seven. It is also a positive violation of the law, "ye shall sow the eighth year" (Lev. 25: 22). Those who commence the sabbatical year in the spring understand the "three years" supply to be intended both for the jubilee and the sabbatical year; but those who commence it in the fall understand the "three years" supply to be intended for the jubilee only, for a supply of only two years is all that is necessary for an ordinary sabbatical year, if commenced in the fall; so all, with one consent, admit that the "three years" supply was intended for the jubilee; and if so, the law, "ye shall sow the eighth year," cannot be evaded by saying that it may have been binding during the ordinary cycle of seven, but not in the one following the jubilee; for it is placed in connection with and has direct allusion to that "three years" supply which all admit was intended for the jubilee. Lev. 25: 21.

The foregoing method of commencing a new cycle once in fifty years, by omitting the fiftieth year, also contradicts the express word of Josephus, who says that Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year, as he had prescribed to them to rest from work every seventh day." (Jos. Ant., b. 3, c. 12, 13.)

Now it is well known that the seventh day sabbath was observed by a continued and unbroken cycle of seven days, never being moved to another day of the week; and Josephus expressly declares that "the Jews observed this rest every seventh year, as they do every seventh day" (Ant., b. 13, c. 8, s. 1); so those who break this continued cycle of seven years not only violate the law of Moses, but contradict Josephus as to the way he and his people continued to observe the law.

If Tacitus believed that the Jews observed a cycle of seven years, "because of the seven stars by which men are governed," and that the seventh year answered to "the star of Saturn, which moves in the higher orbit, and exerciseth the greater influence" (Tacitus, b. 5, c. 4), he could not have believed that the sabbatical year moved down through each year of the cycle.

Thus it will be seen that the cycle of fifty years not only violates the law of Moses, but contradicts Josephus, Tacitus, and all other ancient writers, both sacred and profane, as to the Jewish continued cycle of seven years. But if the cycle between each day on which the jubilee was proclaimed be just forty-nine years, we find no clashing, but one complete harmony throughout the Bible, Josephus, the Jews, and all that I, at least, have yet met with written by ancient authors.

For example, according to the law, "Thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years, and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years." If against the tenth day of the seventh month, in a sabbatical year, we place forty-nine years, we have seven sabbaths to the day, I may say to the hour; and if the last hour and minute of the forty-ninth year ends with the beginning of the jubilee, Moses has well said, "A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you"; and Josephus could add, "which in all are fifty years, and that fiftieth year is called by the Hebrews the jubilee." And if this fiftieth year be the first of the next cycle of forty-nine, the continued order of things is never interfered with. The sixth year, which supplies the demands of all of the sabbaths, is kept to its proper place, to supply the demands of the jubilee. And if the jubilee ends on the tenth day of the seventh month, the law, "Ye shall sow the eighth year," is never violated.

PROVE ALL THINGS.

To-day the future may be bright before us, but on the morrow dark and gloomy clouds may hover around us, and blight our fair prospects. Some loved one may be torn from our fond embrace to slumber for a while in the silent grave. A certain writer, speaking of the soul, says, "The soul—where goes that? Does it immediately feel and act when separated from the body, or does it slumber for a time in dreamless rest?"

The writer goes on to say, "To my mind the conviction is clear that the soul never slumbers, but when it leaves the body it is only uncaged, freed, and soars away with all its powers and feelings with full force." The writer says, "It is a matter of feeling! Let feeling then decide it."

How can a person rest upon a decision like that? A more substantial proof is desirable. Let us take the word of God for our counsel. He has given it to us for our guide. Let us search the Scriptures and see if these things are so. If we there find that the souls of departed friends ever know what is passing on earth, that their spirits are constantly hovering around us, I say, if we find it written in the word of God, we can rest assured that these things are so. But, on the other hand, if it be contrary to the Scriptures, what are we to do? Believe them, or let our feelings rule? I find nothing to support such an idea. We are dependent upon a resurrection. I think we can find sufficient proof of this. "For there is hope of a tree if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground: yet through the scent of water it will bud again, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me."

How uncertain is every thing in life! Let us prepare, ourselves, for we know not when the reaper may come and thrust in his sickle among us. Come, christian, although you are weary and heavy laden, do not faint by the way. Come, and he will give you rest. Come often to the throne of grace. Although you lack wisdom and knowledge, if you ask assistance he will not upbraid you, but will freely give unto all those who ask in faith, believing that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

If you have severe trials and afflictions, look unto him; cast your care upon him; for it is said, "Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Come, wanderer, return to the fold of Christ. We can make ourselves no better by staying away. Come just as you are. Jesus will receive you. "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." Do not linger by the way. Come before it shall be too late, and he will have mercy upon you, for his mercy "endureth forever."

Come, sinner, to Jesus; for now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Do you not thirst after righteousness? Come, buy, without money and without price. Do not delay, for time is precious. One day, or even one moment, may be too late; the door may be closed forever.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God." "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," if we would be heirs according to promise.

PATIENCE.

"In your patience possess ye your souls."—Lk. 21: 19.

This is a kind admonition of Jesus, who well knew that trials awaited his children while in their pilgrimage here. He told them they would weep and lament, while the world would rejoice, and that they would be sorrowful. He well understood that this world in its present state was not a congenial place for a renewed heart, with its holy aspirations and hungerings and thirstings after righteousness.

Patience, patience, has had to be the christian's motto all the way through. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job," says the apostle James, referring us to the just man who meekly bowed to the will of God concerning him, still maintaining his integrity, and to "the prophets who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience." And we know it took patience in the days of the apostles to preach and follow Jesus, while the great red dragon was seeking to destroy both him and them. Nor was there any less call for this fruit of the Spirit after the dragon gave his seat and great authority to the leopard beast, with seven heads and ten horns, who put to death its million of saints.

James says, "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." But nowhere in the past has the church had so much occasion to bring into exercise their patience as during that space which Paul calls a "little while." He has told us that we should have need of patience, that after we had done the will of God we might receive the promise; "for yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith." Yes, dear reader, faith and patience mingled together during the rest of our journey here. Again James says, "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

A great point is, to get the heart "established," rooted and grounded; not only in the word of the Lord generally, but in the present truth—the Lord's soon coming. When that matter is fully settled in the mind by the sure word of God, which cannot fail, though heaven and earth shall pass away, then "hold fast," for, as John the revelator has said, "here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Where, John, we may ask, is this particularly located? After the third angel's message (Rev. 14: 12), or the last call to supper (14: 23)? Then marvel not, christian, at the trial of your patience, here, and yet more as you near the haven of eternal rest. It will only serve to make you "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." It will clean away the dross, and leave the gold to shine more bright.

But why all this call for faith and patience now? First, it is an evil time, even perilous, because the wickedness of the last days is about us, causing the saints to feel like Lot, whose righteous soul was vexed with the filthy conversation and unlawful deeds of the wicked. And then they have felt a little foretaste of the joys of home, and they long to be there, which makes them like John say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. May He help us to be patient.

RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

No subject in all the rounds of theological inquiry exceeds that of practical personal experience. Persons must get on the right track or they will reach the wrong destination. If we do not enlist, we shall not become soldiers. If we will not start in the divine life, we shall not make progress.

It demands deep conviction to stir up the soul to its own conscious wants. Appeals, powerful and direct, have to be made. The everlasting gospel is the weapon to be wielded. Ministers must preach earnestly, and rightly divide the word of truth. The church comes up together to secure the salvation of souls. And the prayer of every pious person, fervent and faithful to his calling in winning souls, is, O Lord, revive thy work! When Zion travails she brings forth. Let us labor together.

But to have Bible conversions, and have our efforts result in securing healthy and substantial christians, we must commence our work intelligently. One mistake quite general among professors is, that the sinner must move from mere emotion. It is a fact that feeling is flung in the foreground in four-fifths of our revivals. Feeling is made to take the place of faith. Every honest, earnest Bible reader knows this is stepping out of gospel order.

The work of the ministry is to assert, expound, explain and enforce the truth to the mind of the sinner. When the truth is spoken in love, with earnestness and a becoming solemnity, it must carry conviction to the conscience and heart. Having heard and believed the truth in regard to his condition, character, and destiny out of Christ, the sinner then decides whether he will receive or reject the truth. If he repents and goes forward, he commences his own experience. He knows his sins forgiven and becomes a genuine christian.

I have often heard young persons say, they have "got religion." This expression can only grow out of wrong instruction. In every condition man is a religious being. Such is his nature. And nothing but its practice can satisfy. In primitive times, one of position and royal power cried out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian."

Religion is action towards God and humanity. Religion is daring to be true, right and useful. To become a disciple of Christ is to change from a life of selfishness to one of holiness. The philosophy of this struggle is summed up in these words: "Cease to do evil and learn to do well." This is experience begun. "We only know what we have lived," and we do know that. Now if we continue in the Word our experience will enlarge. Making God the party of the first part, our contract will not be broken. Delighting in his will, our experience will grow with our growth, a good christian character will be formed, and genuine happiness will be secured.

EXPERIENCE OF A UNIVERSALIST.

BRO. GRANT:—Feeling that I have peculiar reasons for gratitude to my heavenly Father, I would like to acknowledge the same through the columns of your excellent paper.

But, before I proceed, I would tell you a little about myself. I am a woman of a very limited education (as you will immediately discover). I am thirty-four years of age, and was taught from a child to believe in the final salvation of all men,—that we could not understand the Scriptures aright as we found them, but that many words were changed by the translators to favor their peculiar views; and to obtain the true signification we must depend upon those who could go to the original. I have always attended a Universalist meeting more than any other, and have always read a Universalist paper until very recently, and none could be more attached to their belief than I was.

But, thanks be to God, he has been pleased to remove me from such a slippery foundation and set my feet upon a rock. Three years ago it pleased the Lord to chasten me severely by removing from my side my companion, by that most afflicting of all diseases—cancer. Suffice it to say, I was sufficiently humbled to seek the Lord with all my heart, and from that time was anxious to be established in my belief; and as it was my favorite subject of conversation, I wished to improve every means to obtain information. Therefore, seeing Dr. Cobb's Comments advertised in the Banner, I sent for it, and commenced the study of the New Testament.

I could not believe in endless misery. I could not make it agree with the attributes of our Father. Therefore I tried hard to believe that all would finally be saved, but found that those passages which I had heard explained in meeting, which seemed to me then quite reasonable, by looking out all the references, seemed to stand upon a very narrow foundation; and that he (Mr. C.) even entirely rejected some portions which he could not dispose according to his views. For example, The prophecy of Enoch, Jude 14; 15, 16;—and that if they could not establish the date at a certain period when John was banished to the Isle of Patmos, i. e., prior to the destruction of Jerusalem, they were in wondrous mazes lost; and even intimated that it would perhaps have been as well to have left the apocalypse out of the Bible. Who would dare believe that?

And I prayed continually that God would not suffer me to sow the seeds of error in the little hearts which he had entrusted to my keeping, and that he would hasten to send his servants unto us, who would "rightly divide the word of truth," giving us "meat in due season." I know that he heard me, for he has given me to know that Universalism is not according to his teachings.

The first Advent preacher I heard after I began to seek for the truth, was Bro. Munger, who showed us so clearly that we were living in Daniel's quick time, that I was convinced; and may God bless him for it. I went home and burned up my Comments, for I did not wish to leave them for a stumbling block for any one, and have since studied my Bible, praying that he would grant me such an outpouring of his Spirit that I might investigate aright,—that I might discern spiritual things.

I do feel to thank God that he has blessed me with a knowledge of my happiness, and the way that leadeth into it, and pray that he may excite in me such ardent desires after the one as shall lead to a diligent prosecution of the other; and that I may never in this life cease my endeavors to drink in the benign spirit of my blessed Jesus; that he would keep afar from me the haughty spirit and the boasting tongue, and let his good Spirit so rule in me that I may do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before him as a disciple and follower of Him who loved us, and gave himself for us; that he would never suffer me to presume on my own strength, nor distrust his divine assistance; but while I am using my utmost endeavors, that he would ever teach me to depend upon him for success.

My dear reader, are you tending toward Universalism? If so, let me entreat you to call upon God for assistance; for nothing less than his Spirit can dispel the charm which the tempter has thrown around you; for when once its sentiments are instilled into the mind they operate like a mighty opiate, drowning the gentle whisperings of the Spirit, and lulling a guilty conscience to sleep amid its chains. Know you not that you are in rebellion against him? Let me assure you that there is something in religion that you know not of; for when your heart becomes filled with the love of God you will be reconciled to his will, and his word also.

I always read my Bible, but was actuated more by a sense of duty than love. But, thank God, now his word is sweet to my taste, yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth, and I can say that I have none in heaven but him, and none on earth do I desire beside him.

PROGRESS OF SCIENCE.

The human mind is adapted for continual progression. It is so constituted that it cannot remain satisfied with its present attainments, however great these attainments may be; but is ever longing for something higher, purer and nobler than has yet been reached. This is no less true of mind in its social, than in its individual capacity. Under circumstances favoring the development of the social and intellectual faculties of man, science has always rapidly advanced. The light of science and religion has continued to increase in brightness and grandeur, both in the natural and in the moral world. The field of mental vision has grown wider and wider, and objects which yesterday were shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or were dimly seen through the misty vapors of ignorance and error, to-day stand before us unveiled and crowned with light.

The invention of the art of printing forms an important epoch in the history of society. A gradual diffusion of knowledge followed that auspicious event, and as a natural consequence the multitude discovered that they had rights as well as their oppressors. They discovered that they had been not only oppressed but deceived. As a result of this discovery, on the part of the people, a reformation followed; and the degrading and debasing superstitions of former ages were cast aside, never to be resumed, and men asserted their rights to read, think and judge for themselves.

But society did not remain stationary at the point at which it was left by the Reformation. New light continued to pour in upon the benighted world. Every century has witnessed the consignment to the resting place of things "which were, but are not" of many a long cherished superstition. Mankind now rejects with disgust the intellectual food which in ages past was swallowed with a greedy relish.

The American Revolution forms another era in the history of society. A beacon fire was then lighted on our hill-tops, which shed its radiance far and wide. The shout which rent the air when the chains of three millions of people to the throne of a tyrant were broken, was heard even across the mighty ocean, and monarchs trembled on their thrones. Well might they tremble, for their doom was then sealed, their hoary dynasties were shaken to their foundations.

We will pass over many things that have transpired since the Revolution, and speak a little of our civil war that has recently transpired. By this war the shackles of the bondmen have been sundered and broken, and liberty has been given them, and their freedom restored. This is another progress in the present era. And we still look forward to a greater progress. We see on the horizon of the future a better day advancing. The people by past experience are beginning to feel their divinity and to understand their duty.

Men are looking forward, for that day to come when our beloved Savior shall descend and take the reins of government here on the earth into his own hands. The time is soon coming when there will be no government but what God has instituted—the government of merit. It is in vain that interested partisans and sectaries attempt to perpetuate those artificial distinctions which separate men into classes. The time has nearly arrived in which all artificial partition walls will be broken down. Men begin to feel that they are bound together by strong and sacred bonds, and they will burst the fetters of every system which tends to check the generous outpourings of their souls. The friends of liberal principles have everything to hope, and nothing to fear.

"The night is far spent, and the day is at hand" for our Judge to appear and cleanse the earth. Dear brethren and sisters, let us prepare to meet him. Here conscience compels me to say, notwithstanding all that has been said and done, there is much yet for us who are on the stage of action to do, to meet the requirements of God. We are at best but ignorant and imperfect beings, and our present condition is exposed to such a conflicting variety of influences that they are constantly bewildering and leading us astray. We greatly need the light of "that wisdom which is from above" to guide and direct us in our precarious pilgrimage.

Among all the maxims which are laid down for our present and future salvation, there is nothing like those contained in the Scriptures of truth. Let us go to them and examine them with a fervent desire to be benefited by their teachings and guided by their counsels.

"Rejoice, ye righteous, in the Lord,
This work belongs to you;
Sing of his ways and of his word,
How holy, just, and true!

His mercy and his righteousness
Let heaven and earth proclaim;
His works of nature and of grace
Reveal his wondrous name."

ANSWER TO PRAYER.

BRO. GRANT:—My motive in writing is, to tell of the goodness of God, and, if it may be, to cheer the heart of some lone, suffering one, whose eye may have grown dim with tears, and whose frame prostrated by sickness. Such has been my portion; such the cup I have deeply drank. For more than eight years I have suffered greatly, in consequence of an injury received, by which I was reduced to extreme debility. From this I only partially recovered, never so as to walk, except a few steps with a cane. With the utmost effort I could only get about so far. If I passed over my bounds, suffering and great prostration was the result.

Often have I been where, apparently, there was but a step between me and death; and how often, through those weary years, have those words of the blest Redeemer, "According to your faith be it unto you," been in my mind and heart. Long have I believed the prayer of faith would save the sick in these last days, as well as when the inspired apostle wrote it to cheer the believing heart; but it was a great thing for me to get where I could claim the promise for myself; but by the help of God I gained courage to have my case presented to the Lord, according to the direction given in James 5: 14.

I called upon Brn. N. G. Reed and J. R. Hall,—men who, I think, belong to that class of whom Jesus said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." They pleaded with God, in the name of Jesus, and his name, through faith in his name, prevailed. I received strength to rise and walk. From "that hour" I have been improving, and I desire to give praise ever to Him to whom belongeth glory, and honor, and power.

Brothers and sisters in affliction (if the eyes of such peruse these lines), it is to you I would speak. Trust in God. He will not disappoint those who do truly trust in him. True are his promises, and faithful will he be to fulfill them.

With the hope that these few lines may encourage some poor afflicted one to look to God, to cast their care upon him, I close, praying to meet you where suffering and sorrow will be no more.

ARE THERE DIFFERENT DEGREES OF HAPPINESS HEREAFTER?

Any thing relating to our future state should claim our attention, and if the Bible gives any light in regard to it, it is our duty as well as privilege to have it decide this question. All that is not drawn from the word of God on this subject, must be mere speculation. Therefore we should not take any one's views upon this, unless they are in harmony with the teachings of God's Word.

We learn from the Scriptures there will be degrees in the capacities of the mind in heaven, but not degrees in happiness. We read in Psalm 16: 11:—"In the presence of God there is fullness of joy." "Every vessel will be full, though every vessel be not alike." The people of that fair world will all be righteous, one holy, united and happy people, who will with one voice crown Jesus "Lord of all." Every one will join in the song of redeeming love.

"There lasting bright glories light up the blest plain,
And the King in his beauty triumphantly reigns."

There will be fulness of joy in Christ, who is the Head of principalities and powers.—Psalms 17: 15. The Savior is our redemption now; but the Saviour through eternity. "We may be presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

May we be wise, learn what the word of God teaches, obey its precious lessons, that we may tatain to that world of light and glory.

"THE SHADOWS OF EARTH'S SUNSET."

Earth's sun will soon set; the shadows grow long,
And twilight fast gathers around;
Deep slumber now heavily presses on some,
While others are sleeping profound.

Oh, herald of Jesus! how solemn the warning
That thou to a world lost in sin art to give;
To awaken the sinner, to rouse up the christian,
That they may be ready with Jesus to live.

Already the fields are white for the harvest,
The great autumn of time, with its leaf pale and sere,
Gives token unerring that Jesus is coming,—
O sinner, awaken! for judgment prepare.

Toil on, lonely pilgrim; may Jesus be with thee,
And guide to his praise and glory while here,
Till thy mission is ended, thy warfare is over,
And thou free from all sin in his presence appear.

THE JUBILEE.

Some are of the opinion that the jubilee was the forty-ninth year of the Jewish cycle, others suppose that the jubilee was pointed out by a cycle of fifty years; both of which we think incorrect. Hence, our object in this article is to prove, first, that the jubilee was pointed out by the cycle of forty-nine years; second, that the jubilee was not the forty-ninth, but the fiftieth year, which Moses has made so plain. I am at a loss to know how there could have ever been more than one opinion concerning this, for saith the Lord, "The seventh year shall be a Sabbath of rest unto the land. . . . And thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound on the tenth day of the seventh month."—Lev. 25: 4-9.

From this it is clear that the jubilee begins at the end of the forty-ninth year; therefore, forming no part of the forty-ninth, it is properly the fiftieth year.

To make this plain to all, let us suppose that the tenth day of the seventh month, A. D. 6, was the beginning of a jubilee. If to this we add forty-nine years, we will have the tenth day of the seventh month, A. D. 55, for the beginning of the next jubilee.

Observe that the last day of the forty-ninth year, being in the past, the jubilee can form no part of the forty-ninth, hence, is properly the fiftieth year, and the law says, "a jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you."—Lev. 25: 11. Now, are not two points here made clear? 1. That the jubilee is not the forty-ninth year, for it is not proclaimed until the end of that year. 2. That the "space of the seven Sabbaths of years" between the two days on which the jubilee is proclaimed was forty-nine, and not fifty years, as some seem to suppose.

Josephus teaches the same thing. He says Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year, as he had prescribed to them to rest from working every seventh day, and ordered that then what grew of its own accord, out of the earth, should, in common, belong to all that pleased to use it, making no distinction in that respect between their own countrymen and foreigners; and he ordered that they should do the same after seven times seven years; which is not fifty but forty-nine years. But if you would include the jubilee, he adds, "which in all are fifty years, and that fiftieth year is called by the Hebrews the jubilee."—(An. b. 3, c. 12, s. 3.)

The supposition that Josephus may have meant that the forty-nine years were the interval between two jubilees, has given rise to the opinion that the jubilee cycle was fifty years; but a mere conjecture should not be offered as an argument against the express words both of Josephus and Moses.

Josephus' express words are, that Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year," by which he could not have meant the jubilee; and now in reckoning, not from the jubilee, but from this sabbatical year, he says, Moses "ordered that he should do the same after seven times seven years." So he clearly makes the interval not between two jubilees, but between a sabbatical year and the jubilee just forty-nine years; hence the jubilee is the fiftieth year, which is in exact harmony with Moses.

It will now be discovered that the jubilee was the fiftieth year, in the same way that the first year of their cycle of seven was the eighth year. For example, it is said, "Ye shall sow the eighth year."—Lev. 25: 22. Here the first year of the cycle of seven is by the same writer, and in the same chapter, as clearly called the eighth year, as the first year of the cycle of forty-nine is called the fiftieth year. [illegible] The first year of the cycle is called the eighth year, because it follows the seventh. And so with the jubilee, it is called the fiftieth year, because it follows the forty-ninth [illegible] ing diagram will illustrate how the first year of the cycle of seven was the eighth in reckoning from the last sabbatical year, and how the first year of the cycle of forty-nine was the fiftieth from the beginning of the last jubilee:

1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8
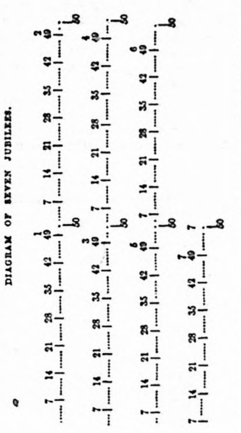
1	2	3	4	5	6	7	1	2	3	4

The first line is the number from the last sabbatical year; the second line from the last jubilee, and the third line the continued cycle of seven years. This diagram will make it plain how the first year of the cycle of seven was the eighth year, and the first of the cycle of forty-nine as properly the fiftieth year, in that it follows the forty-ninth.

We will now add another diagram, by which we wish to show that it is as absurd to say that the jubilee was pointed out by a cycle of fifty years, as to say that the sabbatical year was a cycle of eight years.



The dots in this diagram exhibit the six years which fill the space between each sabbatical year. The lines raised above the dots are the sabbatical years, and the figures placed above them give the number of years since the last jubilee. The figures above each forty-ninth year give the number of jubilees. The lines falling below the dots, against which fifty is placed, point out the year in which the jubilee would fall if reckoned by a cycle of fifty years. By reference to the foregoing diagram, the reader will discover that if we use a cycle of fifty years, the "seven Sabbaths of years," in the second cycle, would occupy the space of only forty-eight years, the third forty-seven, the fourth forty-six, the fifth forty-five, the sixth forty-four, and the seventh only forty-three. But the express law is, that "the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years."

It is added, "Then," that is, at the end of the seven Sabbaths of years, "shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound." But if we use a cycle of fifty years, the trumpet of the jubilee in the second cycle would not sound until two years after; in the third, three years after; in the fourth, four years after; in the fifth, five years after; in the sixth, six years after; and in the seventh, not until seven years after the sabbatical year; for two years must be added to the second cycle of seven Sabbaths, three to the third, four to the fourth, five to the fifth, six to the sixth, to make out the complete cycle of fifty years. And though the express language of the law is, "Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years," we would have to add another entire Sabbath of years unto the seventh cycle, thus making eight Sabbaths where the law requires but seven.

Observe also that in the fifth cycle, the sixth year, which was to supply the demands of the jubilee Sabbath, occurs five years before the beginning of the jubilee; and in the sixth cycle, the jubilee would fall in the very year that was to yield its supply. And the law, "six years shalt thou sow thy field," would in every jubilee cycle be violated.

This being too grossly absurd to be received, some of the advocates of the fifty year cycle commence a new epoch, from which to reckon the sabbatical year, at the end of each jubilee. This is done by leaving the fiftieth year as a blank, or omitting to reckon it in the cycle of seven. By this omission the first year of the next cycle falls one entire year lower, for it is thus made to begin with what is properly the second year of the next cycle, as exhibited in the following diagram:—

4	5	6	7	1	2	3	4	5
46	47	48	49	50	1	2	3	4
4	5	6	7		1	2	3	4

The first line is the continued cycle of seven years, as enjoined in the law. The second is the cycle of fifty years; and the third, the method used by those who, omitting to reckon the fiftieth year, thus begin a new epoch from which to reckon the next cycle.

But observe, that this violates the law,—"At the end of every seven years, thou shalt make a release" (Deut. 15: 1), for "the seventh year is the year of release" (Deut. 15: 9). But this arrangement once in fifty years would place the year of release after eight years, instead of seven. It is also a positive [illegible] the "three years" supply to be intended both for the jubilee and the sabbatical year; but those who commence it in the fall understand the "three years" supply to be intended for the jubilee only, for a supply of only two years is all that is necessary for an ordinary sabbatical year, if commenced in the fall; so all, with one consent, admit that the "three years" supply was intended for the jubilee; and if so, the law, "ye shall sow the eighth year," cannot be evaded by saying that it may have been binding during the ordinary cycle of seven, but not in the one following the jubilee; for it is placed in connection with and has direct allusion to that "three years" supply which all admit was intended for the jubilee. Lev. 25: 21.

The foregoing method of commencing a new cycle once in fifty years, by omitting the fiftieth year, also contradicts the express word of Josephus, who says that Moses "gave then rest to the land from ploughing and planting every seventh year, as he had prescribed to them to rest from work every seventh day." (Jos. Ant., b. 3, c. 12, 13.)

Now it is well known that the seventh day sabbath was observed by a continued and unbroken cycle of seven days, never being moved to another day of the week; and Josephus expressly declares that "the Jews observed this rest every seventh year, as they do every seventh day" (Ant., b. 13, c. 8, s. 1); so those who break this continued cycle of seven years not only violate the law of Moses, but contradict Josephus as to the way he and his people continued to observe the law.

If Tacitus believed that the Jews observed a cycle of seven years, "because of the seven stars by which men are governed," and that the seventh year answered to "the star of Saturn, which moves in the higher orbit, and exerciseth the greater influence" (Tacitus, b. 5, c. 4), he could not have believed that the sabbatical year moved down through each year of the cycle.

Thus it will be seen that the cycle of fifty years not only violates the law of Moses, but contradicts Josephus, Tacitus, and all other ancient writers, both sacred and profane, as to the Jewish continued cycle of seven years. But if the cycle between each day on which the jubilee was proclaimed be just forty-nine years, we find no clashing, but one complete harmony throughout the Bible, Josephus, the Jews, and all that I, at least, have yet met with written by ancient authors.

For example, according to the law, "Thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years, and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years." If against the tenth day of the seventh month, in a sabbatical year, we place forty-nine years, we have seven sabbaths to the day, I may say to the hour; and if the last hour and minute of the forty-ninth year ends with the beginning of the jubilee, Moses has well said, "A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you"; and Josephus could add, "which in all are fifty years, and that fiftieth year is called by the Hebrews the jubilee." And if this fiftieth year be the first of the next cycle of forty-nine, the continued order of things is never interfered with. The sixth year, which supplies the demands of all of the sabbaths, is kept to its proper place, to supply the demands of the jubilee. And if the jubilee ends on the tenth day of the seventh month, the law, "Ye shall sow the eighth year," is never violated.

PROVE ALL THINGS.

To-day the future may be bright before us, but on the morrow dark and gloomy clouds may hover around us, and blight our fair prospects. Some loved one may be torn from our fond embrace to slumber for a while in the silent grave. A certain writer, speaking of the soul, says, "The soul—where goes that? Does it immediately feel and act when separated from the body, or does it slumber for a time in dreamless rest?"

The writer goes on to say, "To my mind the conviction is clear that the soul never slumbers, but when it leaves the body it is only uncaged, freed, and soars away with all its powers and feelings with full force." The writer says, "It is a matter of feeling! Let feeling then decide it."

How can a person rest upon a decision like that? A more substantial proof is desirable. Let us take the word of God for our counsel. He has given it to us for our guide. Let us search the Scriptures and see if these things are so. If we there find that the souls of departed friends ever know what is passing on earth, that their spirits are constantly hovering around us, I say, if we find it written in the word of God, we can rest assured that these things are so. But, on the other hand, if it be contrary to the Scriptures, what are we to do? Believe them, or let our feelings rule? I find nothing to support such an idea. We are dependent upon a resurrection. I think we can find sufficient proof of this. "For there is hope of a tree if it be cut down, that it will sprout again, and that the tender branch thereof will not cease. Though the root thereof wax old in the earth, and the stock thereof die in the ground; yet through the scent of water it will bud again, and bring forth boughs like a plant. But man dieth, and wasteth away; yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he? As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up; so man lieth down and riseth not: till the heavens be no more they shall not awake, nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time, and remember me!" [illegible]

How uncertain is every thing in life! [illegible] among us. Come, christian, although you are weary and heavy laden, do not faint by the way. Come, and he will give you rest. Come often to the throne of grace. Although you lack wisdom and knowledge, if you ask assistance he will not upbraid you, but will freely give unto all those who ask in faith, believing that he is, and that he is a rewarder of them that diligently seek him.

If you have severe trials and afflictions, look unto him; cast your care upon him; for it is said, "Is any among you afflicted? Let him pray." "Now no chastening for the present seemeth to be joyous, but grievous: nevertheless, afterward it yieldeth the peaceable fruits of righteousness unto them which are exercised thereby. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

Come, wanderer, return to the fold of Christ. We can make ourselves no better by staying away. Come just as you are. Jesus will receive you. "Wherefore lay apart all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, and receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls." Do not linger by the way. Come before it shall be too late, and he will have mercy upon you, for his mercy "endureth forever."

Come, sinner, to Jesus; for now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Do you not thirst after righteousness? Come, buy, without money and without price. Do not delay, for time is precious. One day, or even one moment, may be too late; the door may be closed forever.

"Without faith it is impossible to please God." "Let us draw near with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience, and our bodies washed with pure water," if we would be heirs according to promise.

OLIVET'S STAR.

Tune.—"Star of the Evening."

Beautiful star, ere long to rise,
Shedding glory o'er the skies,
Soon thy scepter shall divide,
Out of Judah, Israel's tribe.

Chorus.
Star of the East, Bethlehem's star,
Star of the morning, beautiful, beautiful star.

Thou the bright and morning star,
Shall have glory near and far;
And God shall beautify his place,
And make his feet most glorious.

Beautiful star, whose heavenly light
Shone round the shepherds at midnight;
Then thou biddest the Gentiles "come,"
By thy brightness as the sun.

Beautiful star, whose brilliant reign
Exceeds the right of earth's domain;
Rise! and wave thy scepter here.
Rise! and thy lone subjects cheer.

PATIENCE.

"In your patience possess ye your souls."—Lk. 21: 19.

This is a kind admonition of Jesus, who well knew that trials awaited his children while in their pilgrimage here. He told them they would weep and lament, while the world would rejoice, and that they would be sorrowful. He well understood that this world in its present state was not a congenial place for a renewed heart, with its holy aspirations and hungerings and thirstings after righteousness.

Patience, patience, has had to be the christian's motto all the way through. "Ye have heard of the patience of Job," says the apostle James, referring us to the just man who meekly bowed to the will of God concerning him, still maintaining his integrity, and to "the prophets who have spoken in the name of the Lord, for an example of suffering affliction, and of patience." And we know it took patience in the days of the apostles to preach and follow Jesus, while the great red dragon was seeking to destroy both him and them. Nor was there any less call for this fruit of the Spirit after the dragon gave his seat and great authority to the leopard beast, with seven heads and ten horns, who put to death its million of saints.

James says, "Let patience have her perfect work, that ye may be perfect and entire, wanting nothing." But nowhere in the past has the church had so much occasion to bring into exercise their patience as during that space which Paul calls a "little while." He has told us that we should have need of patience, that after we had done the will of God we might receive the promise; "for yet a little while, and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry. Now the just shall live by faith." Yes, dear reader, faith and patience mingled together during the rest of our journey here. Again James says, "Be patient, therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth, and hath long patience for it, until he receive the early and latter rain. Be ye also patient; establish your hearts; for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh."

A great point is, to get the heart "established," rooted and grounded; not only in the word of the Lord generally, but in the present truth—the Lord's soon coming. When that matter is fully settled in the mind by the sure word of God, which cannot fail, though heaven and earth shall pass away, then "hold fast," for, as John the revelator has said, "here is the patience of the saints; here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Where, John, we may ask, is this particularly located? After the third angel's message (Rev. 14: 12), or the last call to supper (14: 23)? [illegible] christian, at the trial of your patience, here, and yet more as you near the haven of eternal rest. It will only serve to make you "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." It will clean away the dross, and leave the gold to shine [illegible] because the wickedness of the last days is about us, causing the saints to feel like Lot, whose righteous soul was vexed with the filthy conversation and unlawful deeds of the wicked. And then they have felt a little foretaste of the joys of home, and they long to be there, which makes them like John say, Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. May He help us to be patient.

RELIGIOUS EXPERIENCE.

No subject in all the rounds of theological inquiry exceeds that of practical personal experience. Persons must get on the right track or they will reach the wrong destination. If we do not enlist, we shall not become soldiers. If we will not start in the divine life, we shall not make progress.

It demands deep conviction to stir up the soul to its own conscious wants. Appeals, powerful and direct, have to be made. The everlasting gospel is the weapon to be wielded. Ministers must preach earnestly, and rightly divide the word of truth. The church comes up together to secure the salvation of souls. And the prayer of every pious person, fervent and faithful to his calling in winning souls, is, O Lord, revive thy work! When Zion travails she brings forth. Let us labor together.

But to have Bible conversions, and have our efforts result in securing healthy and substantial christians, we must commence our work intelligently. One mistake quite general among professors is, that the sinner must move from mere emotion. It is a fact that feeling is flung in the foreground in four-fifths of our revivals. Feeling is made to take the place of faith. Every honest, earnest Bible reader knows this is stepping out of gospel order.

The work of the ministry is to assert, expound, explain and enforce the truth to the mind of the sinner. When the truth is spoken in love, with earnestness and a becoming solemnity, it must carry conviction to the conscience and heart. Having heard and believed the truth in regard to his condition, character, and destiny out of Christ, the sinner then decides whether he will receive or reject the truth. If he repents and goes forward, he commences his own experience. He knows his sins forgiven and becomes a genuine christian.

I have often heard young persons say, they have "got religion." This expression can only grow out of wrong instruction. In every condition man is a religious being. Such is his nature. And nothing but its practice can satisfy. In primitive times, one of position and royal power cried out, "Almost thou persuadest me to be a christian."

Religion is action towards God and humanity. Religion is daring to be true, right and useful. To become a disciple of Christ is to change from a life of selfishness to one of holiness. The philosophy of this struggle is summed up in these words: "Cease to do evil and learn to do well." This is experience begun. "We only know what we have lived," and we do know that. Now if we continue in the Word our experience will enlarge. Making God the party of the first part, our contract will not be broken. Delighting in his will, our experience will grow with our growth, a good christian character will be formed, and genuine happiness will be secured.

EXPERIENCE OF A UNIVERSALIST.

Bro. Grant:—Feeling that I have peculiar reasons for gratitude to my heavenly Father, I would like to acknowledge the same through the columns of your excellent paper.

But, before I proceed, I would tell you a little about myself. I am a woman of a very limited education (as you will immediately discover). I am thirty-four years of age, and was taught from a child to believe in the final salvation of all men,—that we could not understand the Scriptures aright as we found them, but that many words were changed by the translators to favor their peculiar views; and to obtain the true signification we must depend upon those who could go to the original. I have always attended a Universalist meeting more than any other, and have always read a Universalist paper until very recently, and none could be more attached to their belief than I was.

But, thanks be to God, he has been pleased to remove me from such a slippery foundation and set my feet upon a rock. Three years ago it pleased the Lord to chasten me severely by removing from my side my companion, by that most afflicting of all diseases—cancer. Suffice it to say, I was sufficiently humbled to seek the Lord with all my heart, and from that time was anxious to be established in my belief; and as it was my favorite subject of conversation, I wished to improve every means to obtain information. Therefore, seeing Dr. Cobb's Comments advertised in the Banner, I sent for it, and commenced the study of the New Testament.

I could not believe in endless misery. I could not make it agree with the attributes of our Father. Therefore I tried hard to believe that all would finally be saved, but found that those passages which I had heard explained in meeting, which seemed to me then quite reasonable, by looking over all the references, seemed to stand upon a very narrow foundation. [illegible] prove according to his views. For example, The prophecy of Enoch, Jude 14: 15, 16, [illegible] at a certain period when John was banished to the Isle of Patmos, [illegible] apocalypse out of the Bible. Who would dare believe that?

And I prayed continually that God would not suffer me to sow the seeds of error in the little hearts which he had entrusted to my keeping, and that he would hasten to send his servants unto us, who would "rightly divide the word of truth," giving us "meat in due season." I know that he heard me, for he has given me to know that Universalism is not according to his teachings.

The first Advent preacher I heard after I began to seek for the truth, was Bro. Munger, who showed us so clearly that we were living in Daniel's quick time, that I was convinced; and may God bless him for it. I went home and burned up my Comments, for I did not wish to leave them for a stumbling block for any one, and have since studied my Bible, praying that he would grant me such an outpouring of his Spirit that I might investigate aright,—that I might discern spiritual things.

I do feel to thank God that he has blessed me with a knowledge of my happiness, and the way that leadeth into it, and pray that he may excite in me such ardent desires after the one as shall lead to a diligent prosecution of the other; and that I may never in this life cease my endeavors to drink in the benign spirit of my blessed Jesus; that he would keep afar from me the haughty spirit and the boasting tongue, and let his good Spirit so rule in me that I may do justly, love mercy, and walk humbly before him as a disciple and follower of Him who loved us, and gave himself for us; that he would never suffer me to presume on my own strength, nor distrust his divine assistance; but while I am using my utmost endeavors, that he would ever teach me to depend upon him for success.

My dear reader, are you tending toward Universalism? If so, let me entreat you to call upon God for assistance; for nothing less than his Spirit can dispel the charm which the tempter has thrown around you; for when once its sentiments are instilled into the mind they operate like a mighty opiate, drowning the gentle whisperings of the Spirit, and lulling a guilty conscience to sleep amid its chains. Know you not that you are in rebellion against him? Let me assure you that there is something in religion that you know not of; for when your heart becomes filled with the love of God you will be reconciled to his will, and his word also.

I always read my Bible, but was actuated more by a sense of duty than love. But, thank God, now his word is sweet to my taste, yea, sweeter than honey to my mouth, and I can say that I have none in heaven but him, and none on earth do I desire beside him.

PROGRESS OF SCIENCE.

The human mind is adapted for continual progression. It is so constituted that it cannot remain satisfied with its present attainments, however great these attainments may be; but is ever longing for something higher, purer and nobler than has yet been reached. This is no less true of mind in its social, than in its individual capacity. Under circumstances favoring the development of the social and intellectual faculties of man, science has always rapidly advanced. The light of science and religion has continued to increase in brightness and grandeur, both in the natural and in the moral world. The field of mental vision has grown wider and wider, and objects which yesterday were shrouded in impenetrable darkness, or were dimly seen through the misty vapors of ignorance and error, to-day stand before us unveiled and crowned with light.

The invention of the art of printing forms an important epoch in the history of society. A gradual diffusion of knowledge followed that auspicious event, and as a natural consequence the multitude discovered that they had rights as well as their oppressors. They discovered that they had been not only oppressed but deceived. As a result of this discovery, on the part of the people, a reformation followed; and the degrading and debasing superstitions of former ages were cast aside, never to be resumed, and men asserted their rights to read, think and judge for themselves.

But society did not remain stationary at the point at which it was left by the Reformation. New light continued to pour in upon the benighted world. Every century has witnessed the consignment to the resting place of things "which were, but are not" of many a long cherished superstition. Mankind now rejects with disgust the intellectual food which in ages past was swallowed with a greedy relish.

The American Revolution forms another era in the history of society. A beacon fire was then lighted on our hill-tops, which shed its radiance far and wide. The shout which rent the air when the chains of three millions of people to the throne of a tyrant were broken, was heard even across the mighty ocean, and monarchs trembled on their thrones. Well might they tremble, for their doom was then sealed, their hoary dynasties were shaken to their foundations.

We will pass over many things that have transpired since the Revolution, and speak a little of our civil war that has recently transpired. [illegible] what God has instituted—the government of merit. It is in vain that interested partisans and sectaries attempt to perpetuate those artificial distinctions which separate men into classes. The time has nearly arrived in which all artificial partition walls will be broken down. Men begin to feel that they are bound together by strong and sacred bonds, and they will burst the fetters of every system which tends to check the generous outpourings of their souls. The friends of liberal principles have everything to hope, and nothing to fear.

"The night is far spent, and the day is at hand" for our Judge to appear and cleanse the earth. Dear brethren and sisters, let us prepare to meet him. Here conscience compels me to say, notwithstanding all that has been said and done, there is much yet for us who are on the stage of action to do, to meet the requirements of God. We are at best but ignorant and imperfect beings, and our present condition is exposed to such a conflicting variety of influences that they are constantly bewildering and leading us astray. We greatly need the light of "that wisdom which is from above" to guide and direct us in our precarious pilgrimage.

Among all the maxims which are laid down for our present and future salvation, there is nothing like those contained in the Scriptures of truth. Let us go to them and examine them with a fervent desire to be benefited by their teachings and guided by their counsels.

"Rejoice, ye righteous, in the Lord,
This work belongs to you;
Sing of his ways and of his word,
How holy, just, and true!
His mercy and his righteousness
Let heaven and earth proclaim;
His works of nature and of grace
Reveal his wondrous name."

ANSWER TO PRAYER.

Bro. Grant:—My motive in writing is, to tell of the goodness of God, and, if it may be, to cheer the heart of some lone, suffering one, whose eye may have grown dim with tears, and whose frame prostrated by sickness. Such has been my portion; such the cup I have deeply drank. For more than eight years I have suffered greatly, in consequence of an injury received, by which I was reduced to extreme debility. From this I only partially recovered, never so as to walk, except a few steps with a cane. With the utmost effort I could only get about so far. If I passed over my bounds, suffering and great prostration was the result.

Often have I been where, apparently, there was but a step between me and death; and how often, through those weary years, have those words of the blest Redeemer, "According to your faith be it unto you," been in my mind and heart. Long have I believed the prayer of faith would save the sick in these last days, as well as when the inspired apostle wrote it to cheer the believing heart; but it was a great thing for me to get where I could claim the promise for myself; but by the help of God I gained courage to have my case presented to the Lord, according to the direction given in James 5: 14.

I called upon Brn. N. G. Reed and J. R. Hall,—men who, I think, belong to that class of whom Jesus said, "Ye are the salt of the earth." They pleaded with God, in the name of Jesus, and his name, through faith in his name, prevailed. I received strength to rise and walk. From "that hour" I have been improving, and I desire to give praise ever to Him to whom belongeth glory, and honor, and power.

Brothers and sisters in affliction (if the eyes of such peruse these lines), it is to you I would speak. Trust in God. He will not disappoint those who do truly trust in him. True are his promises, and faithful will he be to fulfill them.

With the hope that these few lines may encourage some poor afflicted one to look to God, to cast their care upon him, I close, praying to meet you where suffering and sorrow will be no more.

ARE THERE DIFFERENT DEGREES OF HAPPINESS HEREAFTER?

Any thing relating to our future state should claim our attention, and if the Bible gives any light in regard to it, it is our duty as well as privilege to have it decide this question. All that is not drawn from the word of God on this subject, must be mere speculation. Therefore we should not take any one's views upon this, unless they are in harmony with the teachings of God's Word.

We learn from the Scriptures there will be degrees in the capacities of the mind in heaven, but not degrees in happiness. We read in Psalm 16: 11:—"In the presence of God there is fullness of joy." "Every vessel will be full, though every vessel be not alike." The people of that fair world will all be righteous, one holy, united and happy people, who will with one voice crown Jesus "Lord of all." Every one will join in the song of redeeming love. AN EXAMPLE.

Pilgrims! You are not left in this world to wander in a path untrodden to the kingdom. You are not left to break your own road through this uneven world without a track to follow, an example to imitate; "because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that we should follow his steps."

1. We should imitate Christ in the practical exhibitions that he made in his life of his system of truth. We find the system of truth, as taught by Christ, to be different from that taught by Moses, inasmuch as Christ "magnified the law, and made it honorable." What saith the law of God, as taught by Moses? "Thou shalt not kill; and whosoever shall kill shall be in danger of the judgment. But I (Christ) say unto you, that whosoever is angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the judgment." "Ye have heard that it hath been said, An eye for an eye, and a tooth for a tooth. But I say unto you, That ye resist not evil."

We might follow Christ from his sermon on the mount to the cross. But you have it to read, and we will not weary you in multiplying scriptures. We find that Christ's mission into the world was to introduce this new and perfect system of truth, based upon the principles taught from the beginning—obedience to God.

We are not only to receive and imitate his system of truth, but we must imitate him as he appears before us in his daily life, in order to fully develop our individual power, and exert a holy influence. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross daily and follow me. For whosoever will save his life shall lose it, but whosoever will lose his life for my sake, the same shall save it."

We read of the sufferings of the apostles and primitive church. The word says;—"Whosoever will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution." Do you revile not when you are reviled? Do you threaten not when you are made to suffer? Are you ready to suffer for Christ? He suffered for you. By his stripes ye are healed. Daily are you brought to suffer the trials, afflictions and insults of an ungodly world, if you live godly in Christ Jesus.

Therefore is our cross daily, and, if our reputation, or even our life is called for, we should be ready to lose them for Christ's sake. All we have and are must be consecrated upon his altar. A band of disciples, following the Savior in this sense, must necessarily be invincible. The word retreat is never heard in their ranks. They can die, but they cannot yield. A force made up of an aggregate of forces; a courage that flowed from many courageous hearts, was mighty through God to the pulling down of the strongholds of sin. It shook Jerusalem, with all her power and pomp and ancient glory. It traveled over the Holy Land, leaving its mark and scattering its blessing wherever it went. It visited distant shores and spread the new religion among the nations of the earth.

We should also follow Christ in order to obtain the mastery over the principles of the world. "Him that overcometh shall sit with me on my throne. Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God; and he shall go no more out. Be not conformed to the world, but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind. Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

Finally, we must follow Christ here, that we may rejoice and reign with him hereafter. "Cast not away therefore your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward. For ye have need of patience, that, after ye have done the will of God, ye might receive the promise." Be not doubtful christians. The day is not far distant when you will receive the "crown," if you are only faithful and follow him to the end. For, "He that shall come will come, and will not tarry."

Take His example "who did no sin." Receive his system of truth; bear the cross daily; that ye may obtain the mastery over the principles of the world, and finally rejoice and reign with him in a world where sin, sorrow and death will no more visit the people of God.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

I am now at Baraboo, Wis., waiting to attend the Western Conference. I had many conflicts on my way here. Am still fighting with the opposers of truth. Attended a Roman Catholic meeting. Heard the priest say we must pray to the Virgin Mary, the mother of God. Told of two great men who had prayed to God, and the Son of God, and could not find any peace until they prayed to the Virgin Mary, when they were both converted immediately. Told his congregation she was the only refuge in the hour of death.

I had an interview with him after the meeting. Told him it was a new doctrine, that I had never heard before. I had been taught that there was only one name given under heaven or among men whereby we could be saved, and that was the name of Jesus.

"O!" says he, "you pray to both, and then you will get the right one."

He asked me if I thought Mary was a saint. I told him I thought she was before she died, and that I believed she would come forth in the morning of the resurrection, blooming with immortality, like all other good women.

I asked him if he was going to preach in English in the afternoon? when he told me he did not want me to stay, but told me to be off, and not come back there again, and drove me out of his house and yard.

Then the members took it up, and said I ought to have known better than to go to the priest for information; he was better than [illegible] I ought to have gone to a [illegible] And they swore at me, at a great rate, for disturbing their priest.

So it is with the old "mother," as well as with the daughters. I see the same spirit in the daughters that is in the mother; and it is increasing very fast. The "image" beast is coming up. Brethren, let us get on the whole armor, that we may be able to withstand all the fiery darts of the enemy.

I am still in my Master's service, contending for the truth. My next tour will be South, to teach the freed men and women and children about Jesus and the resurrection. Pray for me, brethren. The Cain family is very industrious here in raising their tobacco and hops for their winter stock. I think they will not starve this winter. Intemperance is on the increase in this western country. Wicked men and seducers are waxing worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived.

EXPOSITION OF PROPHECY.

The following interesting exposition of the beast of Rev. 13th chap. is from the pen of Jung Stilling, a devoted and distinguished Prof. in the German university at Marburg. He died about 1820. He was deeply interested in the study of prophecy, and believed that the coming of Christ was nigh at hand.

The following extract is a translation from the eighth volume of his works, by Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia.

"Satan is old. He has had much experience during his struggle of 6000 years' duration with the Savior, about ruling the earth and its inhabitants. He has learned much. From one head there have sprang seven now; yet he is neither omniscient nor almighty; therefore he fails in many an attempt; and at the end he will fail together. From these attempt we may with safety conclude that the "man of sin" is at the door. He has found now that he cannot gain his object by mere cruelty and tyranny, because by this men are aroused in such a degree that they break lose before they are fastened in his chains. Neither has he succeeded by a man [Napoleon I.] who with all possible energy and power tries to obtain the supremacy over the whole world, but shows his design too openly, and endeavors to gain his object by war and blood-shed. This at last arouses the other rulers, and the Lord uses them to bring the plan of Satan to naught. Meanwhile the wholesome object is gained by which many are brought to the knowledge of the truth, are awakened and become true christians. There remains therefore no other means for the Prince of darkness in order to gain his object, but bottomless subtlety.

There shall therefore, at some future time, arise a man very silently, who will pretend religion and holiness, distinguish himself from all other men through remarkable and benevolent seeming deeds, and thereby draw the attention of all christendom upon himself, and this is the very thing he seeks. He shall even perform seeming miracles, and hereby deceive all the world, even such who are not firmly established in the religion of Jesus Christ. In all this he will be assisted by "the false prophet," who will be a powerful help to him. By and by he will succeed, through the most subtle policy, to unite with himself diverse powerful rulers, and become their head, by which he obtains great worldly power; then he will commence to announce a universal reformation, and will show with plausible reasons, that the christian religion is not sufficient to make mankind truly happy; yes, that it is even a hindrance to them, and that God has sent him as the true Messiah in order to make mankind happy indeed. This, then, "the false prophet" will try to recommend and demonstrate to the world with all sorts of plausible reasons and demonstrations, and induce the same to bestow upon him divine honor and worship. Then there will be plenty of pictures, portraits, busts, and statutes, which shall represent the great and wonderful monarch, before which they will bow down to worship. At this time the true disciples of Christ will be greatly tried: perhaps also the Jews; then it will be most necessary to heed the awful warning and threatening, Rev. 14; 9–11, and have them continually before their eyes. This is the great, trying hour, that will come upon all christendom, through which the true church of Christ will be separated from all false christians, and the last and final separation between christians and antichristians shall be completed.

Now 'the man of sin' will gradually put off his mask, because his power has reached its highest point. The false prophet also will sound his dragon-voice; 'the son of perdition' will use his power and try to sweep the christian religion from the face of the earth. Now comes his mark and the number of his name to light. But then the Lord will send his Ambassador, who will gather his true church into a safe place, the conversion of the Jews and their return to Palestine will probably take place, if not sooner.

And now begin the terrible judgments of the seven vials, whose outpouring is rather directed upon fallen christianity. 'The man of sin' now makes his last effort; the Lord appears and casts him and all his worshipers into the lake of fire.

Perhaps the man of sin may be the last Pope; he will by hypocrisy deceive the bishops of the church, go through all the lawful degrees, and at last be put by them on the throne. This even affirms a Catholic priest, Peter Lambert, in Paris; in a most interesting work, 'Explanations of the prophecies that are given to the church.'

"We can say nothing about the future, but so much as we know according to the Bible, and that is, the appearing of 'the man of sin,' or the beast 'out of the bottomless pit.' But now the question arises, 'has this man of sin not already been in existence?' People have not looked upon Napoleon as this 'man of sin,' but the answer in the negative is easy. 'The man of sin,' or the beast 'out of the bottomless pit' will reign until the coming of Christ, at which time the Lord will slay him with the sword of his mouth, and cast him and the false prophet, and all his worshipers into the lake of fire. Now, Napoleon has been beaten, and that the Lord has [illegible] there is no doubt about [illegible] defeat at Waterloo in 1815.—[illegible] lator [illegible] of the false prophet as single [illegible] himself as such distinguishing person we know as yet nothing; and then the island of St. Helena is no lake of fire and brimstone. In short, Napoleon had not quite the character of 'the man of sin.' Paul describes him plainly in 2 Thess. 2.

Napoleon's future, or appearing, was not so much the working of Satan, as it was rather a natural consequence of the political affairs in France and its ambitious desires. Several conquerors and despots had in a similar way worked themselves upon the throne. Will you call this the work of Satan? then there lies nothing distinguishing in this expression, by which we can know 'the man of sin.' His origin, his public appearing, and his obtaining the universal monarchy, must have something extraordinarily Satanic, so that at least the most enlightened christians shall not have any doubt about it; of all this we find nothing in the history of Napoleon Bonaparte.

The second characteristic of 'the man of sin' is, that the appearing of 'the man of sin' is after the working of Satan by all kinds of lying and wonders and signs, etc. These have not been done as yet; but that the apostle further says in the 10th, 11th and 12th verses, this rather fits also the present time; for this is the true character of the judgment of hardening, which will continue till the Lord comes and puts an end to it. Napoleon was not the man of sin from another reason; namely, he did not interfere with religion; on the contrary, he was a friend to the Protestants, and introduced everywhere, wherever he had the power, religious freedom. It is true, he placed himself above all, but by all his ambition, he did not set himself in the temple of God; for the expressions in his catechism say in reality nothing more than that he is ruler in his empire in God's stead, and that he has to be obeyed; and this is the case with all governments, and a duty which the christian religion prescribes and requires of us; therefore no characteristic that is applicable to the antichrist.

That Napoleon has not been 'the man of sin' so far, is therefore demonstrated, but it is not demonstrated that he will never become 'the man of sin.' That Napoleon will ever return again is not probable, and even if he should come back, and should be endowed with all powers of darkness, yet he possesses not the real character of 'the man of sin.' This requires serpent's craftiness without example; an appearance of holiness and a hypocrisy without limits, and a secret hatred against Christ, which however will develope itself gradually; of all this Napoleon is but a medium head. It is said, that some time ago, one of his friends asked him the following question:—'Does your majesty know that many people think you to be the antichrist?' Upon which he answered: 'That I am not, but his forerunner.' The time will show it soon who is to be the man of sin."

"The same beast, which comes out of the sea, shall also arise out of the bottomless pit. Napoleon should have also been the beast out of the sea; but when we compare the character of this minister described in Rev. 13, with the history of Napoleon, we find soon that both do not fit together. Now mark what I am going to say. By those beasts which Daniel saw, were not understood individual rulers, but whole kingdoms. So the lion with eagles' wings represented the Babylonian, a bear the Persian, a four-headed leopard the Greek, and a monster with ten horns the Roman empire. Daniel 7.

The last beast now with the ten horns is that which John saw arise out of the sea (Rev. 13), and which has its seat in the city of Rome (chap. 17). This beast, therefore, is not a single person, but a whole kingdom, and, without doubt, the Roman empire; for the angel says distinctly, that the seven-hilled city, that is, Rome, was the seat of the beast and Babylonian harlot, that is, the church, fallen from the truth, represented by a figure. The beast of the sea, the Roman empire, shall go into obscurity [is not]. It will be in existence and at the same time not be, and this is really the fact. For there exists no more a Roman empire; and yet it is existing, and its spiritual regent, Pope Pius VII. was also in existence, and at the same time non-existing. Now we expect that the beast out of the sea will arise out of "the bottomless pit." Namely, there will come up a power in the Roman empire whose head will be a single man, namely, 'the man of sin' 'the son of perdition' (2 Thess. 2.) who finally will fulfill the holy prophecies of the prophets. Whether we know already this power of the bottomless pit, or not, I shall not decide, but leave it to my enlightened cotemporaries to judge for themselves. Enough, this power shall rebuild the ancient Roman empire, and the beast out of the earth, or the false prophet, will be his mighty co-worker."—Stilling's Works, Vol. 8, pp. 573—5; 651—3; 658—9.

INCREASE OF CRIME.

The terrible increase of crime is attracting the attention of all careful observers, and even those who have been determined to believe that the world was growing better, because their creed required it. At present, they are confounded and thunderstruck at the overwhelming amount of horrid crimes committed every twenty-four hours. The daily papers come loaded with accounts of blackest deeds of debauchery, drunkenness, licentiousness, and murder.

It should be remembered that the prophets and our Savior have foretold these things, and given them as signs of "the last days." If it were not as it is, we should not be warranted in believing that the second coming of Christ is near. If there was no apparent increase of wickedness, we should know that it must wait till it should abound to an alarming degree before Jesus would appear. He tells us that the harvest is the end of the world." When speaking of the state of things at that time, says the prophet:—"Put ye in the sickle; for the harvest is ripe; come, get you down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great."—Joel 3: 13. This prophecy shows that at the time of "the harvest," which "is the end of the world," the wickedness will be great. If it should not be so, then the scripture would be broken. Jesus says:—"As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man; ... likewise also as it was in the days of Lot; ... even thus shall it be when the Son of man is revealed."—Luke 17: 26–30. Then the mass of mankind will not be holy.

We think there is no chance to be mistaken on this point. There will certainly be an alarming amount of wickedness at the time when our Savior returns to this planet. "Wickedness is great" now, but each succeeding day will witness an increase till the end.

The following article, from one of our exchanges, is worthy of a careful reading. It presents a sad picture, but truthful. It is headed,—"Crime and its causes."

"The perpetration of fearful outrages against person and property, all over the country, is one of the signs of the times, and, there is no denying it, a symptom of deep rooted social disease. Not to speak of other violations of the moral law, the infractions of the fifth, sixth and seventh precepts of the Decalogue have been of late so glaring and frequent as to force upon us the conviction that many are restrained from the gratification of such degrading passions as revenge, lust, and avarice, solely by the terrors of the criminal law. Conscience, which in a christian community is expected to keep in check all but the most depraved, has lost its hold on many among us who belong to the refined and educated classes; and respectable people are almost every day shocked on finding that they were on intimate terms with persons who, by the merest accident, are found to have been familiar with the most abominable vices and the most dishonest practices. Should this carnival of crime, as it is called, continue, the consequence will be not only that our criminal calendar will be disgraceful to us as a nation, but that mutual confidence, so necessary to cherish respect and friendship between one citizen and another, must eventually disappear, and every man will come to regard his neighbor as a swindler, libertine or murderer. The prisons of almost every State are occupied by wretches against whom such charges are entertained or have been already proved; and there is scarcely a day passes that the police do not ferret out some scoundrel who is afterwards convicted of a series of dark deeds, any one of which, had he received his deserts sooner, should have consigned him years before to the gallows or the penitentiary.

Were these monstrous crimes against justice, purity and human life, perpetrated by the dregs of the population, could they be fairly attributed to squalid ignorance, brutal instincts, or wide-spread social demoralization, or were it possible to assign them a place among the evils which we have inherited from the rebellion, the moralist, much as he might deplore them as discreditable to our national character, might find many a precedent in human history sufficient, if not to justify, at least to excuse them; but the circumstances under which many of them have been committed, much as we might be disposed to defend the fair name of our countrymen, admit of no such palliation. Gladly would we accept of any theory which would enable us to account for the existence of such an abundant harvest of crime as we are reaping at present without being compelled to admit that with our own hands we have planted the seed, and with our own hands have we brought the crop to maturity. But no such theory is admissible; sin lies at our door, and our business is to remove it if we can, if we would reduce the evil within narrower bounds, or even confine it to its present limits.

People may differ in assigning reasons for the flood of immorality with which society is deluged, but the unblushing impurities, the cold blooded murders, the astounding forgeries, and the wholesale robberies that have imparted to the present period an unenviable pre-eminence in the annals of crime, are not to be regarded as among the demoralizing results of war or civil strife, for many of the disorders which we deplore, indeed all that have been referred to by the press as indicative of wide spread social corruption, are confined to districts which were never reached by the disturbing effects of revolution or insurrection. No one will pretend that the inhuman attacks on females (some of whom were mere children) which rendered it even unsafe for little girls to indulge in their usual excursions after berries, that the adroit swindlings by means of which accomplished and respectable rogues contrived to indulge in debaucheries that would have ruined a millionaire, or that the frightful murders in which the knife, the bullet and the cup were so remorselessly plied, had any connection with the rebellion; for these crimes were committed in the midst of communities where the public peace had never for a single moment been disturbed, and where evil doers were not exotic productions, but indigenous plants, deriving their dangerous peculiarities from the soil on which they grew.

If we would reach the source of these social plague spots, we must go back beyond the year 1860, or the firing of the first gun at Sumter. Rebellion or no rebellion the moral epidemic was sure to burst forth; we had opened the way for the advent of the scourge, and its irruption was only a question of time. Look at the nature of the discipline through which the youth of the country has passed for many years. The facilities for education have been for a long time such that at present it would be almost impossible to find a citizen who could not read and write; of this we have all a right to be proud, but we should remember it is one thing to possess and another to exercise a privilege. It is good to be able to read, but it is bad to devote this acquired faculty to the perusal of dangerous books; it is good to be able to write, but it is bad to exercise our penmanship in the production of forged checks. The extension of a benefit often implies a duty on the giver as well as the receiver; when asked for a dollar on account of charity, it is good to give it; but before doing so, it would be well to make sure that the beggar is not likely to spend it at the next tavern. Admitting then that the education we have given our children is of an unexceptionable quality, the principles we have laid down if correct, should satisfy us that the knowledge acquired in the common schools, though intended to render the pupils good citizens, may, unless we do our duty, only develop in a more subtle form the bad points in their character, and thus prepare them to lead a career of crime with a better prospect of success and less chance of detection. For this very reason, the greatest criminals in this country and England have often been among the most highly educated; no more dangerous fallacy than the supposition that what we call education will put an end to the reign of crime. Education, like a two-edged sword, cuts both ways, and is favorable to virtue and vice, according to the disposition of him who handles it. Renan unsheathes it to direct a fatal thrust at the Divinity of our Lord. Newman wields it with powerful effect in the defence of the christian faith. Nothing so much resembles the opposite ends to which secular education may be applied, as the cross purposes for which iron is now used by modern engineers. Some hope to avail themselves of it in the construction of vessels of war, so as to render them perfectly bullet proof; others are sanguine that they can invent a projectile of the same material which will penetrate the thickest armor with which an iron-clad will float; how the question will be solved we cannot tell, but we are confident that the struggle between those who are certain that education is a means of promoting virtue and truth, and those who avail themselves of it to disguise error and vice, will continue as long as there is a soul to be saved by the one class or corrupted by the other.

Education, then, in order to produce not only intelligent, but, what we need above all else, upright citizens, should be under the control of those who are able and willing to use it as a means for the spread of truth and the promotion of virtue. Were, however, such the ends to which education in this country is directed, there are elements at work which would neutralize its good effect; for scarcely has the child succeeded in its first attempt at reading, when its taste for knowledge is vitiated by the bad or worthless books to which it is introduced. Such productions as belong to what is popularly known as the dime literature are exercising a wonderful fascination over the plastic minds of our youth. Gotten up in an attractive style, and filled with such stories as interest the young, they circulate everywhere; and it is no unusual occurrence for a poor boy after being paid for running an errand to hurry off to the booksellers, secure a dime novel, withdraw to the shade, and devour its contents at one sitting. Such reading is in many cases highly objectionable on account of the ruinous principles inculcated, and the false views conveyed of all the practical duties of life. Nor is this all; as the young boy increases in years he begins to patronize places of public amusement, where the immoral scenes with which his reading has made him familiar are produced on the stage, and where owing to the close proximity of the dram shop, and even worse dens, he has a chance of putting in practice all the abominable principles he had hitherto learned. We will not insist any longer on this point, as all who have paid any attention to the matter must admit that the demoralizing effects of infidel and obscene literature, the pestiferous influence of certain theatrical exhibitions, on the minds of the rising generation in America can scarcely be over estimated.

Were the education provided for our children by the Common School Law of the right sort, it might, indeed, save a few, but it could not save all, especially in the cities, where vice assumes the most attractive form and the moral atmosphere is tainted with its poisonous breath. But it is not of that class. We make no allusion to the books used, or the teachers employed, though God knows there is ground enough for complaint here; we merely refer to the promiscuous intermingling of all classes of children permitted, rather rendered necessary at the public schools. Children who have been taught obedience, reverence for God, self-restraint, purity, honesty, and truth, are associated with others already addicted to lying, stealing, swearing, quarreling, and obscene habits, the consequence is most deplorable; for the contagion of vice is thus spread throughout the whole community, till at last it may with truth be said "all flesh has become corrupt." So seriously is this evil felt by all classes that many Protestants had rather employ private tutors, at great outlay, for their children, or send them to select schools, than place them at the common schools, where they have learned to their grief that no one's morals are safe. Such, we believe, are some of the causes to which may be attributed the awful crimes which have lately startled the whole country. Though we may be unable, just now to stem the torrent of iniquity, it is well to be able to trace it to its source; such knowledge may enable us to lessen its fury, if not check its progress altogether."

SPIRIT COMMUNICATION.

The following was published in "The Progressive Age," edited by Moses Hull, April 15th, 1865, and shows how the demons endeavor to convince people that they are the spirits of our friends:—

"Editor Progressive Age.—On the 5th day of August, 1857, I clambered over a knob of the Green Mountains, in Vermont, to a medium, where the journey had to be in part on foot, as the course was too rugged to admit of a buggy ride.

When I got into the little valley and house it was about noon. After dinner the medium retired from her kitchen with me to have a sitting; such an apparent array of spirits I had never realized before. At first some of my relatives took possession of the medium and communicated; then a number of our former statesmen; then Lawrence of Boston family; then the medium began to shudder, and went through an apparent freezing-to-death condition. Then, as soon as she recovered from that condition, the following communication from Sir John Franklin was given.

Yours, Tho. Richmond.

FROM SIR JOHN FRANKLIN.

August 4th, 1857. My vessel was stove to pieces against an iceberg; it was past any effort that I could make to save it. It was run in amongst a school of icebergs, unawares. We used all efforts to save our vessel that we were capable of. We also fell upon our knees and prayed to our Father in heaven that, if it was his will, to save our vessel and us from being destroyed against those ice mountains. But it did not appear to be the will of our Father to save the vessel and us from destruction; so the will of God was done; and I wish to have my dear wife know that the will of God was done, and not the will of man. I feel anxious to have her realize that I am not dead, but present with her mostly. Tell her I wish to have her investigate Spiritualism. It is a great truth; and if I can find a medium in the vicinity, will communicate frequently. I feel very anxious to embrace that dear wife. I have tried hard to impress her that I was present with her, but of no avail. My last words was praying to God to prepare my dear wife to meet with me at last in that glorious home above.

The whole company were frozen to death; I was the last survivor. Charge her from me to be sure and investigate Spiritualism, so that I can come and console her heart and dry her tears. She mourns me dead, but that is a wrong idea. I still live, and I will convince her of it if she will listen to my silent voice. Tell her not to harbor one doubt but that this came from her dear beloved companion.

The vessel was lost Feb. 28, 1853, latitude 77, out of sight of land. I shall give her a more correct statement sometime. Please to tell her that this is the first medium I have found that I could communicate through. Please to say to her that I shall be present with her when she reads this communication.

Direct your letter to Lady John Franklin, in care of the Postmaster General of England. Please say to her that the medium must be pure in heart as I am, else I cannot control them. Sir John Franklin."

The demons might know all the circumstances connected with the loss of Franklin and his crew, and would have only to impress their medium, and make known the facts to the eager inquirer; but in this case, we have not yet any means of testing the truth of their statements.

PAUL'S PUPILS.—2 Tim. 2: 15.

Every preacher ought to study in these days, not to see how many divisions he can get out of one text, nor where he can get the largest and most popular congregation, nor where he can pry open a door to present his particular, one-eyed view, where some one else has built the house; but they should study to feed the flock. Not one sheep or buck, but the lambs also.

First, study to ascertain what kind of a flock you are to feed. Second, what kind of food they have been eating. Third, what kind of food, or truth, will be best for the flock you are among.

If you have got more than one truth or set of ideas, study to divide, or appropriate aright, and if you do, God will approve it in the following ways: First, if there are any lambs or young converts, they will comprehend your preaching, eat it, and grow in grace and the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. See Peter's last words. 2 Pet. 3: 18. To grow in knowledge, and not in grace, shows a want or lack of the ingredient of grace, and that the preacher did not study, or did not know how to divide, or serve up the food for the occasion, or congregation. There need not be so many misshots, or misapplied sermons, if the ministers would study in this direction more, and books less.

Grace and knowledge will always gather with Christ. Self-will and knowledge will always scatter. Grace and ignorance are better than the latter for young minds.

Study to know whether your preaching fed the humble or willful. If the humble are crying or mourning, and the willful doubting and speculating, you may be sure you have given the wrong food, and it is not approved of God or his people; and if you do not study to improve, you had better go back to your worldly occupation, get your living honestly, and stop causing division. If you have not tact enough to work at something to advantage, you have not to work for God, as flock feeders. Some are ingenious and subtle, and will float around and pass for awhile, but God will sooner or later disapprove.

Some may say Christ came to cause division. Fanatics say so; but wisdom and grace say, not in the flock, but to divide them from the world. Jesus says, "Beware of those that cause division in the flock."

Every doctrine is afloat now, and we need to study what to preach and how to select, for soon every man's works (not belief only) will be made manifest. Study brevity, with all the rest; for a long sermon, if ever so good, will cloy. More people get sick by long meals at feasts, than short ones at fasts. A little studying over our subject, and we can generally cut it down one third, and if there is time to spare, fill it up with exhortation, or pressing it home, which will prove more effectual.

Paul knew what kind of study Timothy needed in those days, and we need the same down here, for he was speaking of the last days, and their perils, the very place we now prophetically occupy.

Be careful, brethren, and select such as gather, and not admit every one who pretends to feed the flock, unless you know them. You cannot get the tares out when they once get in. The Lord of the harvest is soon coming.

H. Munger.

MEEKNESS OF CHRIST.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—When I write about the dear and lovely Jesus, I cannot refrain from weeping. I have shed many tears while I reflect upon the dignity and glory of that dear Redeemer, who is soon to be our King in the renewed earth. Do we love him enough? He is the embodiment of love, goodness and mercy. But can it be possible that a being of such high and exalted dignity (as displayed on the Mount), could ever come upon this sin-polluted earth, and bear such insults and abuse from wicked men and devils; who was declared to be the "beloved Son" of the great Jehovah? I do not wonder that amid such a display of glory and splendor, the three disciples fell to the earth; they were but mortals. But the time is close at hand when "we shall be changed from mortal to immortality;" and then we "shall see him as he is," and behold his glory, without being hindered by the dimming veil of mortality. We will follow Jesus down the mountain. How kind he was to the man whose son was possessed with a devil. How ready the divine Redeemer to relieve suffering humanity; and what terror seized the evil spirit when brought into the presence of a being of so much purity and loveliness. The devil is glad to withdraw when Jesus makes his appearance; and so it is, dear reader, when you are tried and tempted and buffeted by Satan; just retire to the grove, or to your closet, and there fall on your knees, and in humble faith call on Jesus for help; and I tell you of a truth, that the tempter will soon flee. This I know by happy experience.

Look at that passage in the fifteenth of Matthew, where Jesus, who was always meek and lowly, was ready to help the poor Gentile woman from Canaan, who cried unto him for help. Although she seemed to meet with a repulse at first, she urged her suit with greater earnestness; and when informed that the crumbs did not belong to Gentile dogs, yet she soon gave the Savior to understand that she was willing to be humble enough to receive the crumbs from his hands; and it appears that she looked upon Christ as an inexhaustible fountain of the bread of life; and therefore would have plenty of crumbs for Gentiles after the Jews had received a full supply of the bread. When Jesus saw her mighty faith, he had only to say to her, that her petition was granted, and the fiend that vexed her daughter was gone.

The Redeemer was always ready to stoop down and relieve suffering humanity in all its forms, although he was the greatest king in human flesh that ever stepped on this sin-cursed earth. How can any one help loving such a being? Well might he be called the "express image of the Father's person." How can one be a christian, and not love Christ's appearing, when it must be the very height of glory to gaze upon the lovely Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world? I fear there are thousands who profess to follow Christ, but do not love Christ, or his appearing. They must be lost. Now if the glory that was displayed on the holy Mount is only a miniature of the kingdom that is about to be revealed from heaven, what must be the reality, when all the saints meet in the kingdom, with their King, and reign with him for ever?

"When we've been there ten thousand years,
Bright shining as the sun,
We've no less days to sing God's praise
Than when we first begun."

REPORT.

Wilbraham Grove, Aug. 26th, 1865. Met according to adjournment to transact business for the Female Union Missionary Association. Meeting called to order by the President, A. E. Smith. Prayer offered by the same. Minutes of the last meeting were read and adopted. Next in order, reports of delegates. Sr. Mussey reported her labors at Poultney, Vt. Preached several times. The church seemed to be on the rise. Preached one evening at the school-house in the west part of the town, and once at the house of a sick brother, by invitation. Was much blessed in trying to comfort the sick with the promises of the Lord, and also in preaching salvation to the lost. There are omens of good in Poultney.

Tuesday, July 3d, left Poultney, and went to Rutland. Preached in their chapel two evenings, and made some visits and had some seasons of family prayer, leaving the result with the Lord, praying my labors may not be lost.

Sunday, July 8th, met with the friends in North Springfield, at Bro. Cook's chapel. Preached three times on Lord's day, once on Tuesday evening. The witnesses for Jesus with the hearty responses from the lovers of Jesus, told the story.

My next appointment was at Vernon, Sunday, July 16th. Preached three times. Quite a number of experiences from Brn. and Srs. gave evidence that God had warm, living children there. Sunday, July 23d, Northfield Farms, Mass. Preached three times in Bro. Streeter's barn. Had quite a large gathering of friends from abroad, showing an interest to hear the female preacher, which made it quite easy to speak to an attentive audience.

Next appointment at Griswoldville, Mass., Wednesday and Thursday evenings, July 25th and 26th. Some good children there, who received me in the Lord. Friday evening, at Charlemont, Ms., at the house of Bro. Hicks. Sunday, July 30th, met my appointment at North Adams, Ms. Staid over two Sundays, and held five evening meetings. Had good attendance. Savoy, Ms., Sunday, Aug. 13th. Preached in Bro. Merrick's house. Full attendance. Tuesday evening, preached in a school-house at Plainfield Pond. Had a free time. Young ladies arose with tears freely flowing. We invited them forward to the front seat, and Sr. Merrick knelt with me beside them and had a season of prayer, and they prayed for themselves, and God blessed them. Thursday evening, preached in a school-house in Bro. Merrick's neighborhood; but a few out, but God gave freedom in speaking. Sunday, Aug. 20th, preached in Savoy. Sr. C. Warren preached in the morning, and myself in the afternoon. I never spoke with such freedom. Some tears and some smiles, and God was honored, glory to his blessed name; then left for the campmeeting at Wilbraham to meet with brethren and sisters in Christ.

Sr. Jennings reported her labors at Poultney, Rutland, and North Adams. The Lord had been with her in her work and labor of love. The church at Poultney was in a prosperous condition.

Sr. Higgins then spoke. Related her experience in reference to her labors in the vineyard of the Lord. She spoke much to the comfort and strengthening of the sisters. We ought to labor in union with the brethren. She and her husband labored together in the field.

Sr. Crumb also related her experience in being called to labor in the vineyard. Sr. Boide reported her labors in different places, New York, Ashland, Montgomery Co., Jersey, Hackensack, Peekskill, and other places, for which she had great cause to bless the Lord; he blessed her labors in those places, and souls were converted to God. While we visit those that are sick and in a destitute condition, the Lord has blessed us with a little means to relieve their wants, which they receive with thankful hearts.

There were other meetings held in Bro. Hastings' large tent. Some of the brethren and sisters wanted an explanation of this Association, what it was for. Sr. A. E. Smith explained, and gave some idea of our labors, and then gave an opportunity to all who had any remarks to make. Several spoke in favor of this movement, and not only by speaking but by contributing, and giving their names to this Association as members.

Names. Dr. C. C. Crossman, Bro. Spencer Brown, Adeline B. Smith, S. Lamprey, Martha Tuttle, Ellen A. White, Harriet Tharall, Eliza D. Hitchcock, Ethan O. Allen, Sr. S. Churchill, Henry Campbell, Margaret Campbell, James Campbell, Daniel Campbell, Bro. Wellcome,—each $1.00.

Adjourned to meet the second Sunday in April, wherever the call is made.

This report has been delayed because of our having so many extra meetings to attend to. The Sec. has not had an opportunity to prepare it for the Crisis till now.

MAINE WESTERN QUARTERLY CONFERENCE REPORT.

Met Thursday evening, Sept. 28th, at Biddeford, in a large hall secured by the brethren for their meetings. Bro. I. C. Welcome delivered a profitable discourse from the words, "She hath done what she could," found in Mark 14 : 8.

Friday. Prayer meeting at nine o'clock A. M. Preaching by Bro. Goud at eleven o'clock. Text 1 John 1 : 3. It was a good season. At two P. M. a sermon by the writer, from Heb. 1 : 4. In the evening we listened to a discourse from Bro. Emery, from Gen. 4 : 7, which was followed by suitable remarks from others.

Saturday A. M. Prayer meeting at nine o'clock, and continued till noon. Met at two P. M. Had a singular meeting. It was evidently Bro. Mitchell's duty to preach, but he urged it upon Bro. Goud, who reluctantly consented to preach. But finding no liberty, he sat down. By this we are taught that the Spirit of God must lead. But notwithstanding this seeming failure, the meeting was turned to good account, by having some stirring exhortations, and we felt that it worked for good. In the evening Bro. A. Ross, who providentially arrived in the afternoon, delivered a discourse from Ps. 2 : 8. We were much interested in the discourse.

Sunday A. M. At nine met for prayer and conference. Many warm exhortations and prayers. At eleven, a discourse by the writer, from 2 Tim. 4 : 1. At two o'clock P. M. Bro. Emery preached from Heb. 9 : 28. The sermon had a good effect. In the evening, from half past six to nine, we had prayer and exhortation. It was interesting to hear the experience of many of our brethren and sisters in the Advent faith.

During the meeting, members of other churches came in and took part with us. In the last meeting an infidel talked. He said he doubted if there were any who carried out the teachings of the Bible. He, however, approved of the spirit we manifested toward those who differ from us in sentiment, as there seemed to be love and union in Christ. Bless the Lord for this fellowship, which constrains infidels even to say, "See how these brethren love one another."

Although there were no conversions during the meeting, yet we think good resulted to the church and community in Biddeford.

Bath, Me. C. H. Leverton.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Grace, peace and truth be multiplied to you, and all the lovers of Jesus and of his appearing. I still live, blessed be the Lord, and am at work in the vineyard of my Master. Still love the work, and find plenty to do.

Since I wrote last, have visited Sandwich and Tamworth. In Sandwich I gave ten lectures in different places with good congregations and respectful attention. The Lord blessed. The devil was a little disturbed in one neighborhood, and appeared in the shape of unruly boys; but no harm was done to the cause. Many friends to the cause were made, and kind hospitality was extended to me in the families of the brethren.

In Tamworth held several meetings. There are a few, even there, who love the coming of Jesus, and several are just getting their eyes open, and need help. I find in all this region scattered ones, who love Jesus and look for his coming; but because they are so few and scattered, they do not have any meetings. Yesterday I traveled twenty miles on foot, and did not get lame. None of our brethren can boast of a better horse than I can, and every poor family can and loves to put him up, and he is kept very easy, and always kind and ready to go.

I arrived at Eaton before dark, somewhat tired, but a good supper and good lodgings fitted me for another day's labor. I have found here an old veteran, who came into the Advent faith before Father Miller preached it. He says he has been looking forward to 1866 this good many years, expecting some great event to come then. And I often find those who have been led by the Word and Spirit to believe what we call the Advent doctrine, before they ever heard of Father Miller.

This old veteran believes, with many others, that there is to be a space, after Jesus comes, in which all the unfulfilled prophecies will be fulfilled. And I find the view very generally prevailing that there will be a thousand years following Jesus' coming, in which he will conquer the wicked nations by sword, famine, and pestilence, until the cities shall be left without an inhabitant, and the houses without a man; and that this thousand years will be the seventh thousand of this world's history, and will begin when the six thousand years end, and when the twenty-three hundred days of Dan. 8th end.

It is so near, it seems to be our privilege to understand it, as it is not of private interpretation, and, like all other scripture, profitable. It was written for our learning, for us, upon whom the ends of the world (or age) are come.

My prospect at Eaton is encouraging. I see people are hungry for the word of life and salvation, ready and willing to hear; and I expect a good interest. Pray for me, all ye who can pray, for I need much grace, and strength of body, holy boldness, and tenderness of mind, and the spirit of faithfulness. Yours, B. Spaulding.

Eaton, N. H.

From Sr. H. F. Moore.

Bro. Grant:—I am very happy that I have found Jesus. Through affliction I am brought where I am. I was educated in the German Lutheran faith. Some three years since, the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ was preached in our neighborhood. Through many cares I was not at first so much interested as my husband; still the Lord was gracious and sent his servants. I made many promises, but this did not do.

By and by came his hand heavily upon me. My health was gone, and I on the confines of the grave. I then began to turn to him with all my heart. I urged my husband to take me to Hammonton to the house of Bro. W., in whom I had confidence as a physician. I was well nigh spent on my arrival, a distance of fourteen miles. After examination, and seeing my extreme debility and night sweats, he frankly told me he had little or no hope in medicines, but recommended me to the Great Physician, to whom, as a family, they constantly presented me in their prayers. O, such prayers as were offered for me! I felt they must be heard. And they were

The third day after my arrival there, I was deeply impressed in my own mind, without a word from them, that I ought to go forward then in baptism. This came upon me while in wrestling prayer, alone, before the Lord. I made my desire known to my Bro. and Sr., and asked him to perform the work for me. He consented in the fear of God, and on the next day (Lord's day) I was buried with Christ in baptism in a placid lake, with an Eden-like margin, where, with a little company of believers, I knelt, and with all my heart asked the Lord to heal me soul and body, to cleanse me outside and in, and make me his forever. My prayer was heard. As I came out of the water I felt strengthened in my breast, and from that time until now (nearly four weeks) I have been gradually improving in health, and my peace is like a river. Praise the Lord.

Should this meet the eye of any afflicted Bro. or Sr., let them obey whatever duty is undone, and they will be blessed in obedience as well as myself. "For the Lord God is a sun and shield; the Lord will give grace and glory; and no good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." "O Lord of hosts, blessed is the man that trusteth in thee." Your sister, Hannah F. Moore.

Brethren and Sisters in Christ:—I feel an ardent desire to see more letters in the Crisis on christian experience. It does me good to read such from the many brethren and sisters who are working in the vineyard of the Lord. It is seldom that I can hear preaching. We are so situated that either my husband or myself is obliged to stay at home. No one can tell the enjoyment there would be in meeting with those who delight in serving the Lord. How my thirsty soul longs for the preaching of the word. Why is there so much indifference among professed christians? I feel alarmed for myself at times, I am so stupid. I say, Arise, my soul, arise, shake of thy slothfulness; and I find by conversing that a great many have just the same feeling.

I see the day approaching. Let us make haste and trim our lamps, and have them brightly burning. Let our light shine abroad. Let us see to our own house, that all things may be in readiness for the reception of our Lord and King. Let us not stand and contend while we are on the verge of that great and eventful day. Let us pray for each other, not bite and devour, for if we do that day will overtake us like a thief. Let us keep a sentinel at every part of our house, to keep the enemy from breaking through and carrying off what little we do possess, and we be left without any thing to shield us from that dreadful storm the word says will come upon the ungodly.

Let us cry to God. He will help us to arouse from our stupidity. If we call on him with full purpose of heart he will answer our petition. He who hears the ravens when they cry will not fail to hear the christian when he prays.

"Satan trembles when he sees
The weakest saint upon his knees."

I sometimes ask myself the question, Do I really put my trust in God? Am I trying to live as God would have me? I want more of the love of God. I am trying to serve the Lord with all my heart, and to overcome self. Others' faults I will try to overlook, and have an abundance of charity, which is the greatest gift. Oh, God! give me purity of heart, which will enable me to see thy face. I want the prayers of christians to aid me in my christian course. Amaret M. Beach.

Pleasant Valley, Ct.

From Bro. B. P. Manning.

Brethren and Sisters in the Lord:—I am still in this wicked world, striving to serve the Lord according to my ability; but the suffering of pain, it seems to me sometimes, is more than I can bear. Still the Lord is very good to me in sparing my life till this present hour. I think I shall lose one of my legs (from erysipelas), if not my life. My leg is a sight to behold. But the great Life-giver is soon coming, and then death will yield the dead, and the sea the dead which are in it, and then eternal life will be given to all God's dear children. They will be free from pain and sickness, sorrow and death, for ever and ever. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Brethren and sisters, pray to the great God that he will raise me up to health again, so I can labor a little longer in his vineyard. How much need of faithful help there is at this time. Souls are perishing all around us, look which way we will. Can there not be something done before it is for "ever too late"? If I only knew what to do I should be about it. May the Lord guide us, into all truth, and save us from all that is not truth.

Brethren, are we ready for the judgment of the great day of the Lord? If not, it is time that we were ready. Jesus says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." I am satisfied that if we ever get into the kingdom, we shall love God with all our heart, and our dear brethren and sisters, too. O that God, by his Spirit, would fasten truth like a nail in a sure place, so that it never will be moved out of our minds. Love is the fulfilling of the law. If we are filled with love we shall rid ourselves of all works of the flesh and spirit, such as hatred, variance, wrath, etc. Brethren, "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children, and walk in love, as Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God for a sweet smelling savor. But fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints, neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting, which are not convenient, but rather giving of thanks."

Do remember me, brethren, at the throne of grace. Your brother in Christ,

Goffstown, N. H. B. P. Manning.

From Mrs. S. G. Bradbury.

Bro. Grant:—I wish to say that the Advent doctrine has been very interesting to me since I first heard it preached, a little over a year ago, and through the Crisis, and at the Alton Bay Campmeeting. The sermon that was preached on the "Cross of Christ," the exhortation from Eld. Hastings afterward, and the prayer meetings, and the baptism, and the Lord's Supper, all these things made the scene very impressive to me. They have dwelt in my mind ever since. Those baptisms I never shall forget. The greatest desire of my heart is to live near to Christ, and know no will but his, and learn of him what is right. It is blessed to live for him, and I feel the need of being more in earnest. I have often thought, when I have seen the earnestness that some of the Adventists have for the cause of Christ, how different from other denominations, and have felt dissatisfied with myself. I think I never obtained that new birth which our Savior speaks of, and if I have not, my greatest desire is that I may obtain it, and be found at the feet of Jesus.

Respectfully, Mrs. S. G. Bradbury.

Obituaries.

Johnson. Died in Lakeville, Minn., Aug. 3d, 1865, Sister Belinda, wife of Samuel Johnson, formerly of Burlington, Ct.

She with her family removed to Minnesota some five years since, where she fell a victim to the King of Terrors. But we trust her sleep will be short, for we believe she was one of those Inspiration designates "Blessed and holy," consequently must have part in the "first resurrection," when Jesus will reward all his servants. Many will remember her labors of love during the campmeeting that was held near her house. Well, God remembers it, too. Bro. and Sister Johnson's house was ever a pilgrim's home. We remember how attentively she used to listen to the word of the Lord when spoken by his servants in Collinsville. But she has fallen! Yet nothing will be lost that belongs to Jesus, for he "will raise it up at the last day." She was brought to her native place, Burlington, Ct., for interment; and there

"Sweet be thy rest, till He bid thee arise,
To hail him in triumph descending the skies."

Bro. H. Pratt spoke words of comfort to the afflicted friends. May the Lord sustain our bereaved brother in his deep trials.

S. G. Mathewson.

Dalton. Died in Rye, N. H., Oct. 8th, of typhoid fever, Miss Eliza A., only daughter of Daniel and Martha Dalton, aged twenty-one years and eight months.

Her funeral was attended on Monday by a large concourse of people, where many eyes unaccustomed to weeping shed the sympathetic tear, while one so active and amiable was snatched away. Thus her fond parents and an only brother are bereft and deeply feel their loss. Also a loved friend, who anxiously lingered from day to day, and night to night, around Eliza's sick and dying bed, ready to lend every possible assistance, desiring that his fondest hopes might not be blasted by death. But, alas! Eliza is laid low. She sleeps to wake no more till the morn of the resurrection. She embraced religion six years ago. When questioned respecting her case, said she had not lived as well as she might, but had given herself up into the hands of the Lord at the commencement of her sickness. Was not afraid to die. Thus her many relatives and mourning friends are comforted by the hope of meeting her again, where death will no more sever fond hearts. S. A. Philbrick.

Stratton. Fell asleep in Christ, at Rouses Point, N. Y., Sept. 28th, 1965, Ezra Stratton, aged eighty-four years.

And thus another has gone from among the few in this village who looked for redemption at hand. It is well. Calm and happy in life, a man of prayer, a lover of song, a good father, a kind husband, a lover for twenty years past of our Lord's advent, a father and pillar in the church,—all is over. He sleeps fast and safe in his lowly grave, where we with tender hands have laid him. But not forever. That "waking" which is "supremely blest" is soon to come. Then immortality. Then the city and kingdom of God.

Sermon by the writer, on the Resurrection of the Just. A daughter and two sons mourn his death. Will they meet father in glory, to part no more?

Staples. Died in Casco, Me., Aug. 18th, 1865, of consumption, Bro. Whitmon J. Staples, in his thirty-sixth year.

Like many others, he neglected the one thing needful till disease had marked him for a victim. Then he sought and found mercy, and found much consolation in the promises of God. His last day was one of much suffering, and as he lay down to rest at night, ere his friends were aware, he had fallen asleep to wake no more till the trump of God shall break the slumbers of the dead. May the Lord sustain his aged father and companion in their affliction, and bring them to the land of promise. J. Gay.

Reed. Died in Richmond, Oct. 5th, after several months distressing illness, Sister Mary R. Reed, aged sixty years and eight months.

For many years Sister Reed had been a faithful christian, and as might have been expected, her "end was peace." She sleeps in hope of eternal life at the coming of the Lord.

May the afflicted family be sustained by the consolation of the gospel, and prepared to meet wife and mother in the better land. R. R. York.

☞ Seek holiness rather than consolation. Not that consolation is to be despised, or lightly thought of; but solid and permanent consolation is the result rather than the forerunner of holiness; therefore, he who seeks consolation as a distinct and independent object, will miss it. Seek and possess holiness, and consolation will follow as assuredly as warmth follows the dispensation of the rays of the sun.—He who is holy must be happy.—Upham.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

From Liverpool the 12th.

Political news unimportant.

The correspondence between Mr. Adams, the American Minister, and Earl Russell, was in relation to the responsibility of England for the ravages committed upon American commerce by rebel pirates fitted out in England. Earl Russell repudiates all liability and refuses all arbitration.

The Times can hardly doubt that the proposal for a commission will ultimately be accepted, and says it is the best if not the only solution, and the candid and friendly tone of the argument between Russell and Adams justifies that expectation. Other journals hope for an amicable solution.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct 18. The Herald's City of Mexico correspondence says that matters grow worse and worse for the Empire. The Republicans are increasing in activity and boldness, and have defeated the Imperial troops in a number of recent engagements. Republican detachments swarm all over the country, and one has appeared within only thirty-six miles of the capital.

In the State of Vera Cruz they defy all efforts to expel them. In Zacatecas and Jalisco they are sweeping all before them. It is said that the rebel officers in Mexico have refused to enter Maximilian's army.

The war between Paraguay and Brazil and her allies, has commenced in real earnest. Details of the battle at Gayty show the sanguinary character of the struggle.

On the 17th of August the allied forces, 8500 strong, encountered 3400 Paraguayans. The latter were summoned to surrender, when they replied by shooting the messenger. For an hour and a quarter the battle raged without the asking or giving quarter. At length the Paraguayans fled, pursued by cavalry, when a slaughter took place, which was a perfect butchery.

The Paraguayans left 1500 dead on the field and only 300 wounded. Their leader, Duarte, and 1200 of his troops were made prisoners, together with all their stores.

The allies state that their loss is only 250 killed and wounded.

Another detachment of Paraguayans, 7000 strong, on the opposite side of the river, were prevented from reinforcing their friends by the Brazilian gunboats, and at last accounts were hemmed in by a vastly superior force. More important battles were daily expected.

New York, Oct. 21. Additional details of the terrible hurricane which swept over the West India Islands are furnished by late files of papers. In Guadaloupe the houses were lifted from the ground, torn to pieces and scattered. In one town the hospital was blown down and all the inmates killed or wounded. Between 200 and 300 persons were killed. The crops were destroyed and vessels stranded.

The Medical Director of the Freedman's Bureau in the Southeast District of North Carolina reports fifteen large rice plantations occupied and cultivated by Freedmen.

Another writer from Galveston, Texas, says that there are not more than ten indigent negroes in that vicinity, and expresses the opinion that the negroes will require but little assistance, as they are earning ample wages for their wants.

The Herald's Mexican letter of the 1st inst. states that the United States Consul presented himself three days in one of the palace offices, in order to make a claim in favor of a Frenchman. He sent his card, and was informed that he was unknown there, and the best he could do was to quit the palace unless he wanted to be put out by the palace guard.

Maximilian's Secretary of War offered to muster into the Emperor's service all the Confederate officers in Mexico, but they refused the proposition, adding that they could serve only under the United States flag; that they might have troubles among themselves, but that was no reason for them to forget that they were North Americans and Republicans, and consequently unwilling to defend an empire.

The Fenians.—The purposes of this organization are sufficiently explicit, if the declarations of the speakers at the public meeting at the Assembly Building in Philadelphia may be relied on. Mr. S. J. Meany, editor of the Toledo Commercial, said:

"He was glad that they had done with the arts and artifices of England. They had determined to succeed this time, and not to bring new miseries upon their unprotected countrymen. They were determined and united to secure the independence of Ireland."

Capt. P. D. Walsh of Philadelphia said:

"The ballot box, the petition, the remonstrance, have all been resorted to without effect, and to day the Irish people are determined to give up all these and grasp the sword that will sunder their bonds. The Irish people have been well schooled in the lesson of experience. They have tried everything in the way of peaceable attempts, only to fail; and they are now to appeal to the God of arms and the Lord of hosts. And he believed there never was a nation striving for independence that had as good a prospect of success as Ireland to-day."

Mr. A. M. Morrison said that "O'Connell used to boast Ireland had nine millions of people. Who brought the famine on her? ('John Bull.') It came through England's abominable laws, and crushing system of land owners. England affects to cry out at the despots of Europe, but in the same year there was a famine in Poland, Austria and Ireland. Those despots forbade the exportation of grain, while England took the opposite course, to exterminate their people. And those who were starved were taken to their graves in coffins with false bottoms to them, so that they were cast into their graves and cheated of their coffins. England thought that we were as dead men in this country, but we shall now teach her we are all alive." (Applause.)

The Cholera in France.—A letter from Toulon says that cholera has broken out with startling suddenness at Sollies-Point, a little town of 3000 inhabitants. In the course of the first night in which it made its appearance there were sixty cases, and thirty-six hours later there had already been fifty-five deaths out of a population reduced to 1000 souls by a panic-stricken people. In Toulon it has a peculiarly virulent character. It has also made its appearance at Paris, where, according to the testimony of Dr. Vacher, the condition of the stagnant water of the basin causes a serious apprehension of its rapid spread.

ITEMS.

☞ The drouth prevails alarmingly in all the regions around New York. No rain of any amount has fallen for months. The ground is like an ash heap for more than two feet below the surface. In some cases cattle are driven from one to three miles to water, and the fall feed is nearly destroyed. Water on the Hudson is carried about the villages and sold from the cart, as milk is sold. The Croton river has reached its minimum, and the Commissioners warn New York to be saving, or terrible consequences will follow. The great dam at Croton Falls is now drawn upon.

☞ Considerable alarm is felt in England in regard to the cholera. Three or four cases, said to be undoubted, have occurred in London, and four cases in the vicinity of Southampton. The excessive dry weather which has prevailed here was continuing in England, and yellow fever and other severe complaints were appearing. A form of prayer relating to the cholera and the cattle plague had been prepared by the church authorities.

☞ The panic in the South of France on account of the cholera is said to be unparalleled. Several bankers in the north of France have given notice that they cannot undertake to get bills paid or protested in Marseilles or Toulon. The cases, however, in both places, are diminishing in number.

☞ A minister who had received a number of calls, and could hardly decide which was the best, asked the advice of his faithful African servant, who replied, "Massa, go where de most debbel."

☞ The South Carolina Leader, owned and edited by colored men, is the name of a new weekly paper which has just appeared in Charleston.

☞ The Siecle, of Paris, calculates that there are in Europe more than 2,000,000 Catholic Free Masons, who do not seem to heed much the thunderbolt of the Vatican.

☞ John Taylor, of New Sharon, picked from his strawberry bed on Saturday, a nice fresh berry of good flavor, measuring three inches.

☞ The World's Washington dispatch says the President recently received a petition of five thousand women of Georgia, for the release of Jeff Davis.

☞ The Pope of Rome was seventy-three years old on the 12th of May, and on the 16th of this month he reached the nineteenth year of his pontificate.

☞ English omnibuses have been established, which run from Jerusalem and Bethlehem to places in the neighborhood.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 525. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid.

If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe.

For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $3.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

TREASURE IN HEAVEN.

"For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?"—MARK 8: 36.

I would not have my treasure here,
This world I would not love;
When Jesus comes (signs speak him near),
I'd have them laid above.

I would not have my only hope
In this my passing life;
Where sinful mortals darkly grope—
Heirs of corruption, strife.

In vain amusements and in ease,
My days I would not spend;
Myself I would not strive to please,
But rather none offend.

Society I would not seek,
Where pride and fashion throng;
But with the humble, pure and meek,
May I fore'er belong.

Fame, earthly wisdom, wealth, renown,—
Nor would I these desire;
To win an everlasting crown,
My soul, for this aspire.

'T will profit nothing in the end,
E'en though the world we gain;
If we have not in heaven a friend,
Our lives will end in pain.

The happiness that earth bestows
Is transient, insecure;
Earth's joys are like the melting snows,
Not long do they endure.

Our brightest hopes here have their fears,
Our fondest ones decay;
Our very smiles are washed by tears—
Who here would wish to stay?

May none of us be so unwise
To lay our treasure here;
But seek that "city of the skies,"
All God's commands revere.

May we take Jesus for our friend,
A home in heaven choose;
'T will profit something in the end,
E'en though this world we lose.

For the World's Crisis.

MEETING AT HACKENSACK.

DEAR SISTERS:—On the 18th of September, Sister Howard, the slave woman, arrived from Philadelphia, according to her agreement. The 19th I took her to Hackensack. On our arrival found that the white Methodists had taken sides with the rowdies to oppose us, because, they said, we baptized the negroes, and preached the second coming of Christ. The M. E. minister of the place had preached two sermons against this doctrine, and had hurt the feelings of those who were assisting us in our Sabbath school. He said he would put a stop to his members going to the mission meetings. He said there were three or four in the church now who believed it, and it was still in them, and he would bring their cases up at the next leader's meeting, and have them examined in reference to their faith, for they were an injury to the church. So the members were scared, some hurt, and some said they would leave the church.

Thus I found there was war among them. I thought I would let them fight it out, and I would attend to my own affairs. Evening came. The church was crowded inside and out, the road in front of the church, and all around it. Put me in mind of the crowds in '42 and '43. The white preacher had said so much about our mission that every body came to see what was going on. Sister Howard preached on the judgment, after which three came forward for prayers. We were so crowded we could scarcely find room to kneel down to pray with the mourners; but we had a good meeting. We closed the meeting and went to my lodgings, but I could not sleep. I felt something was the matter. I lay and talked with the Lord. I began to feel, it may be I went in my own strength; for if the Lord had sent me I should not meet all this persecution. I cried and prayed to the Lord to show me what his will was concerning me. But I could find no rest nor comfort.

In the morning I arose with my whole nervous system prostrated. I went to breakfast, and Bro. Z. said to me,—

"Did you know there is a warrant out for you?"

"What for?"

"Because you hold your meetings so late, and make so much noise that people cannot sleep."

"We close our meetings at half past nine o'clock. But who got out the warrant for me?"

"The Roman Catholics."

I said I did "not believe it, for we were not near any house. Our church was down in the fields, where we could annoy no one. But if there is a warrant for me, it is through your Methodist preacher, and he is mad about the truth. Now this is what I felt all night pressing me down. If I have got to fight with the church as well as with the rowdies, and have no protection or sympathy from any body but the Lord, in his strength I shall take my stand, and in his blessed name defy all the hosts of Satan to do one thing to me. I do not want to fight with the church, but if you make me do it, in God's name I will head the little army and march right out to battle, at the risk of life or limb."

I then called at Sister H.'s lodgings and asked her what we had better do?

"We must fast and pray for the victory."

I found all the colored people had heard of it, and were very much frightened. I told them to put their trust in the Lord and come to church, and if I was arrested to come to the jail and shout and sing so loud that they would either let me out or put them in; and if they put them all in we would ask Daniel's God to send an angel to open the doors.

The evening came, and I found the colored people were very much alarmed. It was my turn to preach. I took for my text Daniel 3: 16–18. And you that are Bible students know what came out of those verses. I related the trials of God's people, and how God had delivered them all the way along, and we were about to bring up the rear; and the same God had said to us, Go forward, and we intended to do it. I defied one of them, in the name of the Lord Jehovah, to touch a hair of our heads.

We entered into the prayer meeting, but the colored people were afraid to pray or sing for a while; but six came forward for prayers, and then the spell was broken. Two were converted, and we shouted the victory. Ten minutes before ten we closed the meeting, and did not get arrested that night.

The next day we appointed to fast and pray, which was a hard thing for this people to do, as they were all hard-working women. Some of them lived at service, and others took in washing and ironing, and others were out in the fields digging potatoes; but with it all they agreed to fast and ask God for the victory. Fasting was something I never could do before, but to set the example I thought I would do it this one time, live or die, and in death cry, "Behold he cometh."

Evening came, and we went to church. The devil came too. The crowd around the church was like a political meeting. I wondered where so many people came from. They were quiet during the preaching, but as soon as the prayer meeting commenced the outsiders began. They threw stones, hickory nuts, corn cobs, dirt clods, pulled up grass, threw it in, dirt and all, into the windows, right into our faces, all over the women; but we kept on praying. Then they got a large wagon from another field, and run it along side of the church; the rowdies got into it, and all went to smoking cigars and blowing the smoke over the tops of the windows, till some thought the house was on fire. Then we shut up the windows.

The house being so crowded, and no air, with the cigar smoke, two or three fainted and had to be carried out. Then the rowdies thought they had the victory. I told the trustees to open the windows, and the door too, for God had made the air for us to breathe as well as for them, and we intended by his help to have our share of it, and for them all to come around the altar and help me, and God would take care of the rowdies. If they did not leave us alone, God would put them in their beds, and they would send for us to pray for them.

When all were quiet, we prayed, and one soul was converted. Praise the Lord. This ended our meeting till Sunday morning, when we had one of the most blessed meetings I ever was in.

In the afternoon we held a love feast. Sr. Howard told her experience, relative to being whipped and imprisoned for the testimony of Jesus. The house was full, and the crowd outside immense. The lot all around the church, and the road in front, and every place was alive with people. To stand in the pulpit and look out the door and windows, reminded me of campmeeting. Many wept while they listened to the sorrows and sufferings of slavery. How when they went to church on Sunday, they were taken on Monday morning, tied up by their thumbs, and thirty-nine lashes laid on the bare back; these cuts reached the bone, and the blood ran to the ground. How they would have to lie on their faces and hands, and have their backs oiled with a feather. Many were the sobs and sighs through the congregation, even from the white people.

In the evening Sister H. preached to another crowd. In the prayer meeting the rowdies commenced again. Cigar smoke seemed to be their main weapon of war, till they got to fighting among themselves, and let us alone. Four came forward for prayers, but none were converted.

Monday night had preaching again. But I had to open a new meeting in New York, and was not present. In this new meeting in New York there were eight arose for prayers. On Tuesday evening I was with them again. Took Sister Boide with me, as I knew she was a favorite with the people, and thought we should have a good time; but such a horror of darkness came over us all we could not work. We could not pray, or sing, or talk, or do any thing, and I almost thought the wicked would swallow us up. We closed the meeting. The trustees said I must go to Bro. L. and make some arrangements with him, and get the deed, so they could take the law on the rowdies.

Next morning I took Sister Boide with me, and went to him. He had promised to give us the lot, and another man promised to give us the house, if we would move it to the place, which we did. Another gave the bricks for the foundation. But when we called on Bro. L., he said he did not promise to give the lot. We found he was not a man of his word. Then we thought we would buy it. We asked him what he would take for it. He said he would take one thousand dollars for the house and lot, three hundred dollars cash, and a mortgage for seven hundred. I told him I would get the money. He said,—

"Who shall I make the deed to?"

"I will see the trustees to-night, and tell you in the morning."

In the evening went again to church. The rowdies behaved worse than ever. I began to find this man had used his influence among them, and made them bold in this wickedness. We had only two forward for prayers. Felt discouraged. Closed the meeting at nine o'clock.

Next morning called on Bro. L. Told him the trustees wished the deed made out in my name, till I could collect the money, and when it was paid for I would give them the deed. He said he would not do it. I asked him what he would do. He said he would make the deed to the trustees. I told him to do so, and I would get him the money. So I went to New York.

While I was gone he went to a lawyer. Told him what he wanted to do, to make a deed to these colored people. The lawyer asked him,—

"Who is this Mrs. Smith?"

He told him I was a Millerite, and had come down there to make money out of the "niggers," and he wanted to fix this deed so she could not cheat them out of it. He told him to have nothing to do with the "Millerites," for they were a bad people. So he would give us no deed for the place.

I then went and bought a lot of land, and paid for it, and got the deed. When he found out what I had done, he said he would oppose me every step of the way. But the Lord is on my side, and what can he do? I had promised me some three or four hundred dollars, by different persons, to build a church. He went to those persons and told them not to give a cent, for I only came there, like all other Millerites, to make money under the cloak of religion; and I being a stranger there, and every body opposed to the truth, they believed him before they would me, and no one would give me any thing.

The poor colored people then gave up and sank in despair. This man we thought was our friend, and we put him in for superintendent of the Sabbath school, and made him our treasurer. So now, he has the lot, the house, and all our collections for eight months, and he wont give up the money without a lawsuit.

Thus I am left with fifty-four converts, without house or home to worship in. I have bought a piece of ground, taken my son's bounty money and paid for it, and am going out on raw faith to build a church, without a dollar, trusting only in God, and I feel sure that God will give me a house for these children. Thus ends a two weeks meeting, of all kinds of difficulties, and twelve souls converted.

Beloved friends, all this trouble came through the M. E. minister. He is so afraid that I will get a place for the Advent preaching in this place that he cannot sleep at night, and, God being my helper, I will do that very thing. Now who will encourage me in this work? Who will pray for me? Sisters, my heart is almost broken while I write these lines for you to read. Are we not living in the last days? The christians of these days are determined that this truth of the coming of Jesus shall not be preached, and I am determined to preach it if I lose my head. Pray for me.

THE POOR.

My good friend, the Book says, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Will you think of them now for a moment—will you "CONSIDER" their case? The winter is near, and many have not the needful clothing to keep them comfortable. Is your brother, or your sister, in such a case?

There are men who have an income of thousands, and also have near relatives in the poor-house. I do not suppose this will apply to any who read this. But I know one such case, and am not afraid of being considered personal, or being accused of slander if I relate it. The man is a prominent member of a Methodist church, and has risen from abject poverty to the estate of a man of great wealth. Some of his relatives are still poor as he was formerly. One of his brothers—not in the church—but according to the flesh—received a dangerous accidental injury. He was not far from the stately mansion of his wealthy brother, and permission was asked to carry the injured man there. But the request met a prompt refusal. Another door was opened, and, under that roof the poor brother soon breathed his last. Many would naturally ask how can such a rich man "enter into the kingdom of heaven?"

And this act is in harmony with the character of the man.

But I will not tell any more about that man, lest I should become personal. You have read about the man who fell among thieves, and was so roughly treated and left helpless, or "half dead." The priest who came that way passed by on the other side. The Levite did the same. And thousands in this present time follow their example.

Well-clad, well-fed, comfortable, and well-to-do people, will say it is as much as they can do to provide for themselves. So when they see a brother or sister in extreme poverty, they will not "consider" the case. But I must say to you, you are "withholding more than is meet," and you will find that this course tendeth to poverty."

I hope most of those who read this brief article may be classed with the good Samaritan, who went to the poor man, and kindly cared for him. And truly such shall be blest, for our text says "blessed is he that considereth the poor."

The poor can help each other, if in no other way, by prayer. Instances, almost without number, might be related, of answers to prayer for temporal blessings. Then let us who are in destitute circumstances pray for each other. GOD will certainly hear our prayers, and send us the relief we need. While we ask earnestly for great spiritual blessings, it is right for us to ask for small temporal blessings also.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER TWENTY.

TO SISTER D——. My Dear Sister:—I am glad that your mind is stirred up more fully to the duty of prayer—importunate prayer; but be sure and have it believing, as well as earnest. Many, very many prayers possess very excellent characteristics. They are expressive of good desires; they contain very important requests; they are offered with great fervor; but after all they are lacking in one thing, and that the essential thing, without which all the rest is valueless. It is the fervent and effectual prayer of the righteous that availeth much; and what is it that makes the prayer effectual? It is faith! Without that all is vain. "He that cometh to God must believe." Believe what? Why, that he is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. "Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have."

I heard a minister relate an anecdote recently touching this matter of prayer. He was attending a Methodist campmeeting in the State of Vermont, when, in one of the social meetings, a brother began to pray with much fervor. While thus engaged, the minister present cried out quite abruptly, "Lord, does he mean it?" What effect was produced by such an interrogation, was not stated. Would it not be well if we carefully pondered the question respecting our own utterances before God, Do I mean it? Am I sincere in these requests that I offer before the throne? Do I really feel my need of these things, and do I expect them to be given me?

It is truly a serious matter to pray to the Holy One, who understandeth perfectly our thoughts and motives. We may pray in a manner to deceive those who look only on the outward appearance; we may seem to them very devout, very eloquent, very fervent, but God knows whether we are or not. He cannot be deceived, "for all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." There are those who pray only in the presence of others; they love not the closet devotion; they have no desire to go alone and, with no ear to hear but God's, pour out their earnest pleadings before him. No times of secret prayer are set apart by them. No wrestlings with the Angel of the Covenant till victory is theirs; no breathings out of the heart's deep yearnings for a closer walk with God; no groanings after the fulness and power of grace; no cryings out for wisdom to guide and illuminate their path; none of these mark the experience of many who have an outward semblance of piety which passes current with the most.

But let me just whisper one thought in your ear, my sister. I have no confidence in the piety and purity of that person who is zealous for God and his truth in the public assembly, while there is no love for closet prayer, no pleadings daily alone with God on their knees before him. I speak, of course, of those who are situated so that they can be alone with God, can have opportunities for secret prayer. This excusing of one's self from daily retirement by the plea—"O, I pray all the time. I pray mentally in my heart," only manifests that there is not a love for secret prayer—closet prayer in the heart. I greatly doubt the assertion that they pray continually, so they need not retire alone for devotion. A truly spiritual christian, one of deep devotion, who carries with him everywhere the spirit of love and communion with God, never makes such a plea—never! Jesus said to his disciples, "Enter into thy closet, and shut thy door about thee, and pray to thy Father which seeth in secret." That means something more than the closet of the heart.

Be assured, we do not pray half enough; and when we do pray, we are too cold, too formal, too stereotyped in our petitions. We do not say, as often as we ought, "I will not let thee go, unless thou bless me."

There is more praying from a form, a habit, a feeling that we must pray, than there is from a deep sense of need, and a love for prayer. Let me give you some brief extracts from the devoted William Bramwell's letters, taken from a Magazine before me.

"I never lived so much with God as at present. I can say, 'My life is praying, and much in agony.' . . . It is praying continually that keeps the mind. I am more convinced of this than ever. . . . Pray, pray, and continue in it, plead in it, groan in it. . . . I am using every means, by prayer, etc., to be fit to live among angels. . . . I am praying always. Nothing less will do."

"'One thing is needful,' which is continual prayer. . . . Forgive me, when I say to you, my life is now prayer. . . . I am more than ever given to prayer, and enjoy much more friendship with my God. . . . I could write it twenty times over to you, that it is continual prayer, with strong faith, which will produce every effect."

Few men have presented a type of such deep, devoted piety, as Bramwell. The secret of his holy walk, and intimate fellowship with God, was his frequent seasons of secret prayer. This kept the spirit of prayer always alive in his heart, so that he could say, "I am praying always." He was not one of those who said this as do some who have no closet. It was knee-work alone with God, and heart-work when occupied with other things.

The more we pray, the more we shall want to pray. Where there is no real love for the duty in itself considered, there is a lack of love for God.

May we understand what the scripture meaneth when it says, "The Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."

Yours in Christ, M. D. W.

A DIALOGUE.

Evangelist.—Good morning, Bro. O., I understand you think that as God foreknew man would sin, it was unjust to bring him into existence.

Bro. O.—I do.

E.—Would you consent to return to non-existence?

O.—No. The present life is better than no life; besides, I have the chance of getting eternal life.

E.—You say this knowing that all the ungodly will be burned to death, finally; yourself, possibly, among the number?

O.—Yes.

E.—Why, then, do you find fault with God?

O.—Your treatment of the subject has cured me of the habit. I suppose it was only a habit common to the unreflecting.

E.—If eternal torment was the punishment to be realized, you would still complain, doubtless, and so would I.

O.—Certainly. And on a second thought, I waver a little, when I consider the greatness and length of suffering some are subjected to in the present life.

E.—Reflect a little, then answer me, whether with all these evils, and yourself being liable to them, you would consent to return to a state of non-existence?

O.—I think I would if I were to suffer as some have.

E.—Probably you are justified in your choice, but only on the ground of not having the gifts suitable to the suffering you speak of. The whole question is to be determined by the kind and degree of suffering we are liable to. But we cannot speak for others, with the present limited evils; not even for our children. H. B.

A SOLDIER REPORTING FOR JESUS;

OR, HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.

In the evening I attended a meeting at the post chapel. Three persons from abroad addressed the company. One was Judge Story, from Cincinnati, who spoke affectingly of the feeling of the folks at home, accompanied with an excellent exhortation. The second, a business man, who told some very interesting cases which he had witnessed. The third was a member of the Christian Commission from the army. He knew just how to talk to soldiers.

He said he attended a meeting at City Point, and persons were invited to come forward for prayers. Among those that came, several remained after the meeting for religious conversation. He sat down by a fine-looking young man, and asked him his name.

"Tom Brown."

"Where are you from?"

"New York."

"Do you want to be a christian?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Do you know what it is to be a christian?"

"I do not know; I ought to know; my parents have been trying to teach me what a christian should be ever since I can remember."

"Then why do you not become a christian?"

"Because I do not know how. I have been trying and cannot."

The speaker said he tried some time to make the way plain to him, but failed. Finally, he said to him, "If Lieutenant ——," speaking the name of a lieutenant in command of the boys, "should send word to you to report to him immediately, what would you do?"

"Why, I should report, sir."

"Well, when you got to the officer, what would you say?"

"I would tell him I had reported according to orders."

"Then what would you do?"

"I would wait until I received orders."

"Well, then, when you got orders, what would you do?"

"Then I would do them."

"That is just what I want you to do in this case. I bring orders for you to report to Christ immediately, for duty; will you do it?"

"Yes, I do report now."

"Very well. Do not expect to hear any voice telling you what to do, but turn your mind within, and see if something is not telling you what to do."

"Yes, it seems to me I ought to pray."

"Very well, that is Order No. 1. Will you pray?"

"Yes (kneeling.) O Lord, I want to be a christian. I have reported for duty. Teach me what I ought to do. Forgive me all my sins. Amen."

"Now do you know anything else you ought to do?"

"Yes, I ought to go and talk with ——," mentioning the name of his mate.

"Well, that is Order No. 2. So you are to hold yourself in readiness to hear and to obey orders."

Very soon Tom Brown was seen making his way out of the door. Some one observing him, and supposing he was trying to get away from the meeting, got in his way, and began to talk with him, but soon found he was in a very different frame of mind from what he had supposed, and said,—

"Why, a man cannot talk as you do without being a christian."

The next morning the speaker said Tom came to see him, his countenance beaming with joy, and feeling so light he hardly touched the floor.

"Well," said he, "I talked with my mate about being a christian, and it is all right."

Tom holds himself in readiness to obey Christ's orders, he being the Captain of his salvation. The incident was told in such a way that it made a deep impression on the audience, all of whom were soldiers and could appreciate it.—Guide to Holiness.

THE PILGRIM'S HOPE.

TUNE.—"Tramp, tramp, tramp."

In our pilgrimage below,
We are thinking of the time
When our Savior will descend and take us home;
And the tears will fill our eyes,
As we near the holy prize,—
O! we love to talk and sing of that blest home.

CHORUS.

Yes, yes, yes, a home with Jesus,
Cheer up, brethren, soon he'll come;
And beneath his gentle reign
We shall breathe the air of heaven,
Free from sorrow in the saint's eternal home.

But while here we do remain,
Let's be strong in Jesus' name,
Patient every trial, and bear every cross;
He will keep his faithful few,
And will guide them safely through,
And will crown them his at last in that blest home.

CHORUS.

Home, home, home, a home with Jesus,
Cheer up, brethren, soon he'll come, etc.

THE DEMAND OF THE DRUNKARD

AT THE COUNTER OF THE LIQUOR SELLER.

There's my money. Give me drink.

There's my clothing and my food. Give me drink.

There's the clothing, food and fire of my wife and children. Give me drink.

There's the education of the family, and the peace of the house. Give me drink.

There's the rent I have taken from my landlord, fees that I have robbed the schoolmaster, and innumerable articles I have had from the storekeeper. Give me drink. Pour me out drink, for more I will have, and pay for it.

There's my health of body and peace of mind. There's my character as a man, and my profession as a christian. I give up all. Give me drink.

More yet I have to give. There's my heavenly inheritance, and the eternal friendship of the redeemed. There, there is all hope of salvation. I give up my Savior. I give up my God. I resign all. All that is great, good and glorious in the universe, I resign forever, that I may be drunk.—Selected by N. L. Curtiss.

HEART AND TONGUE.

"For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—MATT. 12: 34.

The cure of an evil tongue must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the work-house where is the forge of deceits and slanders; and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door of it. Such ware as is made within, such and no other can come out.

One Mr. Tongue of much renown,
Who lived at large in Tattle Town,
Was mischief full and wicked too,
As all could tell if Tongue they knew.
The statute brought, the charge was plain,
That Tongue was full of deadly bane.
Tongue then was seized and brought to court,
Pleading himself the impending suit.
"'Tis Neighbor Heart," plead Mr. Tongue,
"Who leads me into so much wrong;
I should be good as neighbors are,
As Mr. Nose, or Eye, or Ear,
If Neighbor Heart, who lives below,
Were changed by grace, or made anew.
'Tis very hard to bear the wrong
Of neighbor Heart," said Mr. Tongue.
The plea was sound of Mr. Tongue,
Jurors and Judge said all as one;
While Neighbor Heart is also wrong,
No good, they said, could come from Tongue.
The court decide as the best good,
To renovate the neighborhood;
That Mr. Heart must be renewed,
Or never Tongue can be subdued.

POWER OF SACRED SONG.—Concerning the power of united sacred song, Bishop Jewell in 1560 wrote to Peter Martyn: "Religion is now somewhat more established than it was. The people are every where exceedingly inclined to the better part. Ecclesiastical and popular music has very much conduced to this result; for as soon as they had once commenced to sing publicly in only one little church in London, immediately not only the other neighboring churches, but even the towns far distant, began to vie with each other in the same practice. At times, you may see, at Paul's Cross, after sermon, six thousand persons, old and young, of both sexes, singing together and praising God. This sadly annoys the priests and the devil, for they see that, by these means, the sacred discourses sink more deeply into men's minds, and that their kingdom is shaken and shattered at almost every note." That, now, is sacred music worth having. The "shakes" are too much on the other side in our day.—Ex.

A KEEN REPLY.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining with great earnestness the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yet," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

A QUALIFIED FORGIVENESS.—An old negro was on his dying bed. Some one had done him a great injury, the committer of which his faithful minister had labored hard to induce him to forgive. At length, when just on the verge of the border land, a last strong appeal was made.

"Tom, won't you forgive him?"

"Well, massa, if I'm going to die, I suppose I must; but if I ever get well, I'll give him another dig."

"This is for your health."—Paul.

"THE BREATH OF LIFE."

BY ELLEN H. GOODELL, M. D.

"And God breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living soul." "The breath of life," what is it? An atmosphere impregnated with poison, to breathe which is contamination, disease and premature decay? No; but 'tis an atmosphere so pure and vitalizing that he who partakes freely will 'live, move, and have his being," all other conditions being favorable, to a "good old age." Pure air is the first demand of nature, and the latest of our physical necessities.

A human being comes into existence; what is it? A senseless form of flesh, blood, and bones, arteries, veins, organs, etc; there it lies motionless until a breath from heaven gently kisses its brow, when lo, it moves, it feels! The little form so dark and torpid for want of oxygen, now assumes a livelier hue. A new fountain of life has been unsealed, the crimson tide, with its rich vermillion tints, gently, noiselessly wends its way through all the delicate and intricate channels of the body; all the little springs hidden from mortal ken, have been set in motion by the divine Architect, and all is now in harmonious action; this we say is life; how wonderful, how glorious!

Deprive the little one of this life-giving, life-sustaining element, and it assumes again its livid hue, its breath grows fainter and fainter, until the last flickering ray expires, and we have but a lifeless lump of clay, past all hopes of physical redemption. Pure air is so essential to the growth and development of the child, that when deprived of it, it must seriously suffer.

But how is it? Let us commence at the foundation. Nearly all women who are enciente, live too much within doors; consequently they do not breathe enough to purify their own blood, and how can their children have good blood, or well developed lungs? It is utterly impossible; inasmuch as the child is formed from the mother's blood, and must of necessity, to a greater or less extent become the inheritor of her physical conditions. Then how all-important is it that you breathe freely, live out of doors as much as possible, and never confine yourself, day or night, in an unventilated room. If your lungs are weak and sensitive, take special pains to improve their condition at this time, and your offspring may be blessed with stronger and better lungs than you have. Although I feel that it is wrong for women with weak lungs and consumptive tendencies to bear children, lest they should ruin their own health, and their offspring be sickly and short-lived, yet if they properly understood, and would obey the physical laws of life, they might bear comparatively healthy children, who, with proper training, would, despite all the unfortunate conditions of the mother, enjoy life and health for many years.

You may say it is all nonsense, this talk about giving children pure air before their birth; but if deprivation of air after birth proves injurious—why is not just as detrimental, perhaps more so, when in embryo, and entirely helpless?

Now let us see how it is after birth. The room is too warm, the windows have been closed for hours, so that not a breath of air can enter; what little there was at first, has been appropriated by those present, all the oxygen has been consumed, and with no means of a fresh supply, and the poisonous, exhalations, which constantly emanate from the lungs and bodies of those present, the little stranger is ushered into existence, surrounded by an atmosphere laden with the seeds of death. Is it not wrong to subject a helpless infant to such a poisoning process every time it breathes, to send the breath of death, instead of life, through those lungs, composed of millions of delicate air cells? The blood not being properly purified, or oxygenated, the child begins to look blue and cold; this is an indication for the nurse to make the room still warmer, examine every crack in doors and windows, put a few more wrappings around the baby, who is already overburdened with clothing, for it must be suffering with the cold.

But just listen to the baby's plea,—"Please do give me a little fresh air, I am suffering for the want of oxygen!" But you do not hear the silent pleading, and hundreds of these little helpless ones are hurried out of existence through the ignorance of mothers and nurses.

When the child sleeps it must of course be placed in bed with its mother, where it gets in a perspiration from being nearly smothered; in this condition it is not allowed even the privilege of breathing its own breath, but must take in the exhalations from its mother's body. This is decidedly wrong. Children should sleep by themselves, in a crib by the bed side, with head and face uncovered, and plenty of air in the room; if it will get uncovered then fasten the clothes on in any way that your ingenuity can invent.

Your children should early become accustomed to outside air; but when you take them out, do not suffocate them with blankets, cloaks, hoods, and veils—many a one has been killed in this way—but wrap the body in sufficient covering, and let the gentle zephyrs play over its little face; if it is a very unpleasant day, however, you may protect its face with a thin veil. What, do you think I am going to take my child out in a storm of wind, rain, or snow? Yes: why not take your child out, as well as go yoursels, provided they are accustomed to take the air?

I have a friend who eight years ago had pulmonary consumption, and was regarded as "hopeless" by friends and physicians, and even by one of our best hydropathic practitioners; but her will was so strong that she recovered, and is now quite healthy. She has a child a year and a half old, who is comparatively healthy; but if he had been treated as other children are, would have been in his grave. Before his birth the mother accustomed herself so much to the open air, that if he does not go out every day he becomes languid and half sick; then the mother sends him out in his carriage, when he becomes quiet, and oftimes sleeps for hours in warm weather, out of doors. When he was about six months old, I visited the family, and was not a little surprised at the effect produced by subjecting the little one to pure air. One day I was anxious to go several miles on business, but it was storming and I thought I must delay; but my friend said "No, I will take you there." "But what will you do with the baby?" "Take him of course; he always goes when I do." "Why, you do not take him out in a storm like this; he will take cold!" "No fear of that, he is used to it, and as he has not been out to-day, and is getting restless, it will do him good." I must confess that I did not exactly relish the idea of going out in a snow storm; however we were soon on our way; the baby became quiet, and slept, and when we reached home seemed perfectly well. I would not advise any of you mothers to take your children out the first stormy day that comes, for they would most likely take cold; but just commence in pleasant weather, and see if you are not well repaid for the time you spend in thus caring for them.

How is it in the school-room? There the children are confined in close rooms, six hours a day, when they should be out of doors, educating, and developing their bodies, until they are at least ten years of age, unless schools are conducted on a better basis than at present. Being so confined, required to obey the strictest rules, sit up straight with folded hands, they get uneasy, dull, stupid, their heads ache, and "oh dear, they would give anything if they could be free;" and very often we hear them say, "How I do hate school!" If schools were rightly managed, as we hope and trust they will be in "the good time coming," children will hail with delight the hours of school, and some of their happiest moments will be spent in the presence of their teachers.

If your children are sick with measles, scarlet fever, or are indisposed in any way, do not at once exclude them from the air, for they will recover much more rapidly if pure air is freely admitted to their rooms. I was listening to an interesting lecture, a few days since, at a Medical College in this city; the lecturer was speaking of the necessity of proper ventilation in the sick room, and related a case that recently came under his own observation. A family of three children had been ill with scarlet fever; two had died; the only one remaining had been very ill for three weeks, had passed through the different stages of the disease, and seemed in a state of very tardy convalescence; the physicians in attendance were unable to tell why the child did not recover more rapidly; it was restless, and could not sleep; he was called in council. "Why," said he, "gentlemen, this child has been shut up here three weeks, and needs some oxygen." He directed another room to be prepared for it, made as warm as the one it was then occupying, and the child was transferred to a pure, wholesome atmosphere; its restlessness gave way to quiet, and sleep, "nature's sweet restorer," blessed it again, and it is now rapidly recovering. I repeat, then, do not exclude the air from the sick room; it has much to do with dissipating disease, and if one of your family is ill with a contagious disease, the others will not be so liable to get it, if due attention is given to thorough ventilation. There are hundreds and thousands of cases where sickness is prolonged week after week, and in many instances death occurs, from neglect in this one department of sanitary science.

If then, you would have your children healthy and vigorous, see that they are well supplied with an abundance of pure air, both night and day, and they will escape many of "the ills which flesh is heir to," in the form of mental and physical suffering; they will be more cheerful and happy, all the functions of life will be more perfect in their action, and all other things being equal, as life advances it will be to them a bright and glorious reality to be enjoyed in the present, and not "a burden grievous to be borne," from which the wearied spirit longs to be released.—Herald of Health.

NEGLECTING COLDS.

Every intelligent physician knows that the best possible method of promptly curing a cold is, that the very day in which it is observed to have been taken, the patient should cease absolutely from eating a particle for twenty-four or forty-eight hours, and should be strictly confined to a warm room, or be covered up well in bed, taking freely hot drinks. It is also in the experience of every observant person, that when a cold is once taken, very slight causes indeed increase it. The expression, "It is nothing but a cold," conveys a practical falsity of the most pernicious character, because an experienced medical practitioner feels that it is impossible to tell in any given case, where a cold will end; hence, and when highly valuable lives are at stake, his solicitudes appear sometimes to others to verge on folly or ignorance.

A striking and most instructive example of these statements is found in the case of Nicholas the First, the Emperor of all the Russias. For more than a year before his death, his confidential medical adviser observed that in consequence of the Emperor "not giving to sleep the hours needed for restoration," his general vigor was declining, and that exposures which he had often encountered with impunity, were making unfavorable impressions on the system—that he had less power of resistance. At length, while reviewing his troops on a January day, he took a severe cold, which at once excited the apprehensions of his watchful physician, who advised him not to repeat his review.

"Would you make as much of my illness if I were a common soldier?" asked the Emperor, in a tone of good-natured pleasantry.

"Certainly, please your majesty; we should not allow a common soldier to leave the hospital if he were in the state in which your majesty is."

"Well, you would do your duty—I will do mine," and the exposure was repeated, with the result of greatly increasing the bad effects of this original cold, and he died in a week afterwards.—Hall's Journal of Health.

SEVERAL WAYS BY WHICH PEOPLE GET SICK.—Eating too fast, and swallowing food imperfectly masticated.

Taking too much fluid during meals.

Keeping late hours at night, and sleeping too late in the morning.

Wearing the clothes so tight as to impede circulation.

Wearing thin shoes.

TREASURE IN HEAVEN.

For what shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?—MARK 8: 20.

I would not have my treasure here,
This world I would not love;
When Jesus comes (signs speak him near),
I'd have them laid above.

I would not have my only hope
In this my passing life;
Where sinful mortals darkly grope—
Heirs of corruption, strife.

In vain amusements and in ease,
My days I would not spend;
Myself I would not strive to please,
But rather none offend.

Society I would not seek,
Where pride and fashion throng;
But with the humble, pure and meek,
May I fore'er belong.

Fame, earthly wisdom, wealth, renown,—
Nor would I these desire;
To win an everlasting crown,
My soul, for this aspire.

'T will profit nothing in the end,
E'en though the world we gain;
If we have not in heaven a friend,
Our lives will end in pain.

The happiness that earth bestows
Is transient, insecure;
Earth's joys are like the melting snows,
Not long do they endure.

Our brightest hopes here have their fears,
Our fondest ones decay;
Our very smiles are washed by tears—
Who here would wish to stay?

May none of us be so unwise
To lay our treasure here;
But seek that "city of the skies,"
All God's commands revere.

May we take Jesus for our friend,
A home in heaven choose;
'T will profit something in the end,
E'en though this world we lose.

MEETING AT HACKENSACK.

DEAR SISTERS:—On the 18th of September, Sister Howard, the slave woman, arrived from Philadelphia, according to her agreement. The 19th I took her to Hackensack. On our arrival found that the white Methodists had taken sides with the rowdies to oppose us, because, they said, we baptized the negroes, and preached the second coming of Christ. The M. E. minister of the place had preached two sermons against this doctrine, and had hurt the feelings of those who were assisting us in our Sabbath school. He said he would put a stop to his members going to the mission meetings. He said there were three or four in the church now who believed it, and it was still in them, and he would bring their cases up at the next leader's meeting, and have them examined in reference to their faith, for they were an injury to the church. So the members were scared, some hurt, and some said they would leave the church.

Thus I found there was war among them. I thought I would let them fight it out, and I would attend to my own affairs. Evening came. The church was crowded inside and out, the road in front of the church, and all around it. Put me in mind of the crowds in '42 and '43. The white preacher had said so much about our mission that every body came to see what was going on. Sister Howard preached on the judgment, after which three came forward for prayers. We were so crowded we could scarcely find room to kneel down to pray with the mourners; but we had a good meeting. We closed the meeting and went to my lodgings, but I could not sleep. I felt something was the matter. I lay and talked with the Lord. I began to feel, it may be I went in my own strength; for if the Lord had sent me I should not meet all this persecution. I cried and prayed to the Lord to show me what his will was concerning me. But I could find no rest nor comfort.

In the morning I arose with my whole nervous system prostrated. I went to breakfast, and Bro. Z. said to me,—

"Did you know there is a warrant out for you?"

"What for?"

"Because you hold your meetings so late, and make so much noise that people cannot sleep."

"We close our meetings at half past nine o'clock. But who got out the warrant for me?"

"The Roman Catholics."

I said I did not believe it, for we were not near any house. Our church was down in the fields, where we could annoy no one. But if there is a warrant for me, it is through your Methodist preacher, and he is mad about the truth. Now this is what I felt all night pressing me down. If I have got to fight with the church as well as with the rowdies, and have no protection or sympathy from any body but the Lord, in his strength I shall take my stand, and in his blessed name defy all the hosts of Satan to do one thing to me. I do not want to fight with the church, but if you make me do it, in God's name I will head the little army and march right out to battle, at the risk of life or limb."

I then called at Sister H.'s lodgings and asked her what we had better do?

"We must fast and pray for the victory."

I found all the colored people had heard of it, and were very much frightened. I told them to put their trust in the Lord and come to church, and if I was arrested to come to the jail and shout and sing so loud that they would either let me out or put them in; and if they put them all in we would ask Daniel's God to send an angel to open the doors.

The evening came, and I found the colored people were very much alarmed. It was my turn to preach. I took for my text Daniel 3: 16–18. And you that are Bible students know what came out of those verses. I showed the trials of God's people, and how God had delivered them all the way along, and we were about to bring up the rear; and the same God had said to us, Go forward, and we intended to do it. I defied one of them, in the name of the Lord Jehovah, to touch a hair of our heads.

We entered into the prayer meeting, but the colored people were afraid to pray or sing for awhile; but six came forward for prayers, and then the spell was broken. Two were converted, and we shouted the victory. Ten minutes before ten we closed the meeting, and did not get arrested that night.

The next day, we appointed to fast and pray, which was a hard thing for this people to do, as they were all hard-working women. Some of them lived at service, and others took in washing and ironing, and others were out in the fields digging potatoes; but with it all [illegible]

Evening came, and we went to church. The devil came too. The crowd around the church was like a political meeting. I wondered where so many people came from. They were quiet during the preaching, but as soon as the prayer meeting commenced the outsiders began. They threw stones, hickory nuts, corn cobs, dirt clods, pulled up grass, threw it in, dirt and all, into the windows, right into our faces, all over the women; but we kept on praying. Then they got a large wagon from another field, and run it along side of the church; the rowdies got into it, and all went to smoking cigars and blowing the smoke over the tops of the windows, till some thought the house was on fire. Then we shut up the windows.

The house being so crowded, and no air, with the cigar smoke, two or three fainted and had to be carried out. Then the rowdies thought they had the victory. I told the trustees to open the windows, and the door too, for God had made the air for us to breathe as well as for them, and we intended by his help to have our share of it, and for them all to come around the altar and help me, and God would take care of the rowdies. If they did not leave us alone, God would put them in their beds, and they would send for us to pray for them.

When all were quiet, we prayed, and one soul was converted. Praise the Lord. This ended our meeting till Sunday morning, when we had one of the most blessed meetings I ever was in.

In the afternoon we held a love feast. Sr. Howard told her experience, relative to being whipped and imprisoned for the testimony of Jesus. The house was full, and the crowd outside immense. The lot all around the church, and the road in front, and every place was alive with people. To stand in the pulpit and look out the door and windows, reminded me of campmeeting. Many wept while they listened to the sorrows and sufferings of slavery. How when they went to church on Sunday, they were taken on Monday morning, tied up by their thumbs, and thirty-nine lashes laid on the bare back; these cuts reached the bone, and the blood ran to the ground. How they would have to lie on their faces and hands, and have their backs oiled with a feather. Many were the sobs and sighs through the congregation, even from the white people.

In the evening Sister H. preached to another crowd. In the prayer meeting the rowdies commenced again. Cigar smoke seemed to be their main weapon of war, till they got to fighting among themselves, and let us alone. Four came forward for prayers, but none were converted.

Monday night had preaching again. But I had to open a new meeting in New York, and was not present. In this new meeting in New York there were eight arose for prayers. On Tuesday evening I was with them again. Took Sister Boide with me, as I knew she was a favorite with the people, and thought we should have a good time; but such a horror of darkness came over us all we could not work. We could not pray, or sing, or talk, or do any thing, and I almost thought the wicked would swallow us up. We closed the meeting. The trustees said I must go to Bro. L. and make some arrangements with him, and get the deed, so they could take the law on the rowdies.

Next morning I took Sister Boide with me, and went to him. He had promised to give us the lot, and another man promised to give us the house, if we would move it to the place, which we did. Another gave the bricks for the foundation. But when we called on Bro. L., he said he did not promise to give the lot. We found he was not a man of his word. Then we thought we would buy it. We asked him what he would take for it. He said he would take one thousand dollars for the house and lot, three hundred dollars cash, and a mortgage for seven hundred. I told him I would get the money. He said,—

"Who shall I make the deed to?"

"I will see the trustees to-night, and tell you in the morning."

In the evening went again to church. The rowdies behaved worse than ever. I began to find this man had used his influence among them, and made them bold in this wickedness. We had only two forward for prayers. Felt discouraged. Closed the meeting at nine o'clock.

Next morning called on Bro. L. Told him the trustees wished the deed made out in my name, till I could collect the money, and when it was paid for I would give them the deed. He said he would not do it. I asked him what he would do. He said he would make the deed to the trustees. I told him to do so, and I would get him the money. So I went to New York.

While I was gone he went to a lawyer. Told him what he wanted to do, to make a deed to these colored people. The lawyer asked him,—

"Who is this Mrs. Smith?"

He told him I was a Millerite, and had come down there to make money out of the "niggers," and he wanted to fix this deed so she could not cheat them out of it. He told him to have nothing to do with the "Millerites," for they were a bad people. So he would give us no deed for the place.

I then went and bought a lot of land, and paid for it, and got the deed. When he found out what I had done, he said he would oppose me every step of the way. But the Lord is on my side, and what can he do? I had promised me some three or four hundred dollars, by different persons, to build a church. He went to those persons and told them not to give a cent, for I only came there, like all other Millerites, to make money under the cloak of religion; and I being a stranger there, and every body opposed to the truth, they believed him before they would me, and no one would give me any thing.

The poor colored people then gave up and sank in despair. This man we thought was our friend, and we put him in for superintendent of the Sabbath school, and made him our treasurer. So now he has the lot, the house, and all our collections for eight months, and he wont give up the money without a lawsuit.

Thus I am left with fifty-four converts, without house or home to worship in. I have bought a piece of ground, taken my son's bounty money and paid for it, and am going out on raw faith to build a church, without a dollar, trusting only in God, and I feel sure that God will [illegible]

the M. E. minister. He is so afraid that I will get a place for the Advent preaching in this place that he cannot sleep at night, and, God being my helper, I will do that very thing. Now who will encourage me in this work? Who will pray for me? Sisters, my heart is almost broken while I write these lines for you to read. Are we not living in the last days? The christians of these days are determined that this truth of the coming of Jesus shall not be preached, and I am determined to preach it if I lose my head. Pray for me.

THE POOR.

My good friend, the Book says, "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." Will you think of them now for a moment—will you "CONSIDER" their case? The winter is near, and many have not the needful clothing to keep them comfortable. Is your brother, or your sister, in such a case?

There are men who have an income of thousands, and also have near relatives in the poor-house. I do not suppose this will apply to any who read this. But I know one such case, and am not afraid of being considered personal, or being accused of slander if I relate it. The man is a prominent member of a Methodist church, and has risen from abject poverty to the estate of a man of great wealth. Some of his relatives are still poor as he was formerly. One of his brothers—not in the church—but according to the flesh—received a dangerous accidental injury. He was not far from the stately mansion of his wealthy brother, and permission was asked to carry the injured man there. But the request met a prompt refusal. Another door was opened, and, under that roof the poor brother soon breathed his last. Many would naturally ask how can such a rich man "enter into the kingdom of heaven?"

And this act is in harmony with the character of the man.

But I will not tell any more about that man, lest I should become personal. You have read about the man who fell among thieves, and was so roughly treated and left helpless, or "half dead." The priest who came that way passed by on the other side. The Levite did the same. And thousands in this present time follow their example.

Well-clad, well-fed, comfortable, and well-to-do people, will say it is as much as they can do to provide for themselves. So when they see a brother or sister in extreme poverty, they will not "consider" the case. But I must say to you, you are "withholding more than is meet," and you will find that this course tendeth to poverty."

I hope most of those who read this brief article may be classed with the good Samaritan, who went to the poor man, and kindly cared for him. And truly such shall be blest, for our text says "blessed is he that considereth the poor."

The poor can help each other, if in no other way, by prayer. Instances, almost without number, might be related, of answers to prayer for temporal blessings. Then let us who are in destitute circumstances pray for each other. GOD will certainly hear our prayers, and send us the relief we need. While we ask earnestly for great spiritual blessings, it is right for us to ask for small temporal blessings also.

LETTERS ILLUSTRATIVE OF CHRISTIAN EXPERIENCE.

NUMBER TWENTY.

TO SISTER D——. My Dear Sister:—I am glad that your mind is stirred up more fully to the duty of prayer—importunate prayer; but be sure and have it believing, as well as earnest. Many, very many prayers possess very excellent characteristics. They are expressive of good desires; they contain very important requests; they are offered with great fervor; but after all they are lacking in one thing, and that the essential thing, without which all the rest is valueless. It is the fervent and effectual prayer of the righteous that availeth much; and what is it that makes the prayer effectual? It is faith! Without that all is vain. "He that cometh to God must believe." Believe what? Why, that he is the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. "Believe that ye receive, and ye shall have."

I heard a minister relate an anecdote recently touching this matter of prayer. He was attending a Methodist campmeeting in the State of Vermont, when, in one of the social meetings, a brother began to pray with much fervor. While thus engaged, the minister present cried out quite abruptly, "Lord, does he mean it?" What effect was produced by such an interrogation, was not stated. Would it not be well if we carefully pondered the question respecting our own utterances before God, Do I mean it? Am I sincere in these requests that I offer before the throne? Do I really feel my need of these things, and do I expect them to be given me?

It is truly a serious matter to pray to the Holy One, who understandeth perfectly our thoughts and motives. We may pray in a manner to deceive those who look only on the outward appearance; we may seem to them very devout, very eloquent, very fervent, but God knows whether we are or not. He cannot be deceived, "for all things are naked and open to the eyes of Him with whom we have to do." There are those who pray only in the presence of others; they love not the closet devotion; they have no desire to go alone and, with no ear to hear but God's, pour out their earnest pleadings before him. No times of secret prayer are set apart by them. No wrestlings with the Angel of the Covenant till victory is theirs; no breathings out of the heart's deep yearnings for a closer walk with God; no groanings after the fulness and power of grace; no cryings out for wisdom to guide and illuminate their path; none of these mark the experience of many who have an outward semblance of piety which passes current with the most.

But let me just whisper one thought in your ear, my sister. I have no confidence in the piety and purity of that person who is zealous for God and his truth in the public assembly, while there is no love for closet prayer, no pleadings daily alone with God on their knees before him. I speak, of course, of those who are situated so that they can be alone with God, can have opportunities for secret prayer. This excusing of one's self from daily retirement [illegible] they need not retire alone for devotion. A truly spiritual christian, one of deep devotion, who carries with him everywhere the spirit of love and communion with God, never makes such a plea—never! Jesus said to his disciples, "Enter into thy closet, and shut thy door about thee, and pray to thy Father which seeth in secret." That means something more than the closet of the heart.

Be assured, we do not pray half enough; and when we do pray, we are too cold, too formal, too stereotyped in our petitions. We do not say, as often as we ought, "I will not let thee go, unless thou bless me."

There is more praying from a form, a habit, a feeling that we must pray, than there is from a deep sense of need, and a love for prayer. Let me give you some brief extracts from the devoted William Bramwell's letters, taken from a Magazine before me.

"I never lived so much with God as at present. I can say, 'My life is praying, and much in agony.' . . . It is praying continually that keeps the mind. I am more convinced of this than ever. . . . Pray, pray, and continue in it, plead in it, groan in it. . . . I am using every means, by prayer, etc., to be fit to live among angels. . . . I am praying always. Nothing less will do."

"'One thing is needful,' which is continual prayer. . . . Forgive me, when I say to you, my life is now prayer. . . . I am more than ever given to prayer, and enjoy much more friendship with my God. . . . I could write it twenty times over to you, that it is continual prayer, with strong faith, which will produce every effect."

Few men have presented a type of such deep, devoted piety, as Bramwell. The secret of his holy walk, and intimate fellowship with God, was his frequent seasons of secret prayer. This kept the spirit of prayer always alive in his heart, so that he could say, "I am praying always." He was not one of those who said this as do some who have no closet. It was knee-work alone with God, and heart-work when occupied with other things.

The more we pray, the more we shall want to pray. Where there is no real love for the duty in itself considered, there is a lack of love for God.

May we understand what the scripture meaneth when it says, "The Spirit helpeth our infirmities, and maketh intercession for us with groanings which cannot be uttered."

Yours in Christ, M. D. W.

A DIALOGUE.

Evangelist.—Good morning, Bro. O., I understand you think that as God foreknew man would sin, it was unjust to bring him into existence.

Bro. O.—I do.

E.—Would you consent to return to non-existence?

O.—No. The present life is better than no life; besides, I have the chance of getting eternal life.

E.—You say this knowing that all the ungodly will be burned to death, finally; yourself, possibly, among the number?

O.—Yes.

E.—Why, then, do you find fault with God?

O.—Your treatment of the subject has cured me of the habit. I suppose it was only a habit common to the unreflecting.

E.—If eternal torment was the punishment to be realized, you would still complain, doubtless, and so would I.

O.—Certainly. And on a second thought, I waver a little, when I consider the greatness and length of suffering some are subjected to in the present life.

E.—Reflect a little, then answer me, whether with all these evils, and yourself being liable to them, you would consent to return to a state of non-existence?

O.—I think I would if I were to suffer as some have.

E.—Probably you are justified in your choice, but only on the ground of not having the gifts suitable to the suffering you speak of. The whole question is to be determined by the kind and degree of suffering we are liable to. But we cannot speak for others, with the present limited evils; not even for our children. H. B.

A SOLDIER REPORTING FOR JESUS;

OR, HOW TO BECOME A CHRISTIAN.

In the evening I attended a meeting at the post chapel. Three persons from abroad addressed the company. One was Judge Story, from Cincinnati, who spoke affectingly of the feeling of the folks at home, accompanied with an excellent exhortation. The second, a business man, who told some very interesting cases which he had witnessed. The third was a member of the Christian Commission from the army. He knew just how to talk to soldiers.

He said he attended a meeting at City Point, and persons were invited to come forward for prayers. Among those that came, several remained after the meeting for religious conversation. He sat down by a fine-looking young man, and asked him his name.

"Tom Brown."

"Where are you from?"

"New York."

"Do you want to be a christian?"

"Yes, sir, I do."

"Do you know what it is to be a christian?"

"I do not know; I ought to know; my parents have been trying to teach me what a christian should be ever since I can remember."

"Then why do you not become a christian?"

"Because I do not know how. I have been trying and cannot."

The speaker said he tried some time to make the way plain to him, but failed. Finally, he said to him, "If Lieutenant ——," speaking the name of a lieutenant in command of the boys, "should send word to you to report to him immediately, what would you do?"

"Why, I should report, sir."

"Well, when you got to the officer, what would you say?"

"I would tell him I had reported according to orders."

"Then what would you do?"

"I would wait until I received orders."

"Well, then, when you got orders, what would you do?"

"Then I would do them."

"That is just what I want you to do in this case. I bring orders for you to report to Christ immediately, for duty; will you do it?"

"Yes, I do report now."

"Very well. Do not expect to hear any voice telling you what to do, but turn your mind within, and see if something is not telling you what to do."

[illegible]

me what I ought to do. Forgive me all my sins. Amen."

"Now do you know anything else you ought to do?"

"Yes, I ought to go and talk with ——," mentioning the name of his mate.

"Well, that is Order No. 2. So you are to hold yourself in readiness to hear and to obey orders."

Very soon Tom Brown was seen making his way out of the door. Some one observing him, and supposing he was trying to get away from the meeting, got in his way, and began to talk with him, but soon found he was in a very different frame of mind from what he had supposed, and said,—

"Why, a man cannot talk as you do without being a christian."

The next morning the speaker said Tom came to see him, his countenance beaming with joy, and feeling so light he hardly touched the floor.

"Well," said he, "I talked with my mate about being a christian, and it is all right."

Tom holds himself in readiness to obey Christ's orders, he being the Captain of his salvation. The incident was told in such a way that it made a deep impression on the audience, all of whom were soldiers and could appreciate it.—Guide to Holiness.

THE PILGRIM'S HOPE.

TUNE.—"Tramp, tramp, tramp."

In our pilgrimage below,
We are thinking of the time
When our Savior will descend and take us home;
And the tears will fill our eyes,
As we near the holy prize,—
O! we love to talk and sing of that blest home.

CHORUS.
Yes, yes, yes, a home with Jesus,
Cheer up, brethren, soon he'll come;
And beneath his gentle reign
We shall breathe the air of heaven,
Free from sorrow in the saint's eternal home.

But while here we do remain,
Let's be strong in Jesus' name,
Patient every trial, and bear every cross;
He will keep his faithful few,
And will guide them safely through,
And will crown them his at last in that blest home.

CHORUS.
Home, home, home, a home with Jesus,
Cheer up, brethren, soon he'll come, etc.

THE DEMAND OF THE DRUNKARD

AT THE COUNTER OF THE LIQUOR SELLER.

There's my money. Give me drink.

There's my clothing and my food. Give me drink.

There's the clothing, food and fire of my wife and children. Give me drink.

There's the education of the family, and the peace of the house. Give me drink.

There's the rent I have taken from my landlord, fees that I have robbed the schoolmaster, and innumerable articles I have had from the storekeeper. Give me drink. Pour me out drink, for more I will have, and pay for it.

There's my health of body and peace of mind. There's my character as a man, and my profession as a christian. I give up all. Give me drink.

More yet I have to give. There's my heavenly inheritance, and the eternal friendship of the redeemed. There, there is all hope of salvation. I give up my Savior. I give up my God. I resign all. All that is great, good and glorious in the universe, I resign forever, that I may be drunk.—Selected by N. L. Curtiss.

HEART AND TONGUE.

"For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh."—MATT. 12: 34.

The cure of an evil tongue must be done at the heart. The weights and wheels are there, and the clock strikes according to their motion. A guileful heart makes a guileful tongue and lips. It is the work-house where is the forge of deceits and slanders; and the tongue is only the outer shop where they are vended, and the door of it. Such ware as is made within, such and no other can come out.

One Mr. Tongue of much renown,
Who lived at large in Tattle Town,
Was mischief full and wicked too,
As all could tell if Tongue they knew.
The statute brought, the charge was plain,
That Tongue was full of deadly bane.
Tongue then was seized and brought to court,
Pleading himself the impending suit.
"'Tis Neighbor Heart," plead Mr. Tongue,
"Who leads me into so much wrong;
I should be good as neighbors are,
As Mr. Nose, or Eye, or Ear,
If Neighbor Heart, who lives below,
Were changed by grace, or made anew.
'Tis very hard to bear the wrong
Of neighbor Heart," said Mr. Tongue.
The plea was sound of Mr. Tongue,
Jurors and Judge said all as one;
While Neighbor Heart is also wrong,
No good, they said, could come from Tongue.
The court decide as the best good,
To renovate the neighborhood;
That Mr. Heart must be renewed,
Or never Tongue can be subdued.

POWER OF SACRED SONG.—Concerning the power of united sacred song, Bishop Jewell in 1560 wrote to Peter Martyn: "Religion is now somewhat more established than it was. The people are every where exceedingly inclined to the better part. Ecclesiastical and popular music has very much conduced to this result; for as soon as they had once commenced to sing publicly in only one little church in London, immediately not only the other neighboring churches, but even the towns far distant, began to vie with each other in the same practice. At times, you may see, at Paul's Cross, after sermon, six thousand persons, old and young, of both sexes, singing together and praising God. This sadly annoys the priests and the devil, for they see that, by these means, the sacred discourses sink more deeply into men's minds, and that their kingdom is shaken and shattered at almost every note." That, now, is sacred music worth having. The "shakes" are too much on the other side in our day.—Ex.

A KEEN REPLY.—John Wesley, in a considerable party, had been maintaining with great earnestness the doctrine of Vox populi vox Dei against his sister, whose talents were not unworthy the family to which she belonged. At last the preacher, to put an end to the controversy, put his argument in the shape of a dictum and said,

"I tell you, sister, the voice of the people is the voice of God."

"Yes," she replied, mildly, "it cried, 'Crucify him! crucify him!'"

A more admirable answer was perhaps never given.

A QUALIFIED FORGIVENESS.—An old negro was on his dying bed. Some one had done him a great injury, the committee of which his faithful minister had labored hard to induce him to forgive. At length, when just on the verge of the border land, a last strong appeal was made.

"Tom, won't you forgive him?"

"Well, massa, if I'm going to die, I suppose I must; but if I ever get well, I'll give him another dig."

"THE BREATH OF LIFE."

BY ELLEN H. GOODELL, M. D.

"And God breathed into man the breath of life, and man became a living soul." "The breath of life," what is it? An atmosphere impregnated with poison, to breathe which is contamination, disease and premature decay? No; but 'tis an atmosphere so pure and vitalizing that he who partakes freely will 'live, move, and have his being," all other conditions being favorable, to a "good old age." Pure air is the first demand of nature, and the latest of our physical necessities.

A human being comes into existence; what is it? A senseless form of flesh, blood, and bones, arteries, veins, organs, etc; there it lies motionless until a breath from heaven gently kisses its brow, when lo, it moves, it feels! The little form so dark and torpid for want of oxygen, now assumes a livelier hue. A new fountain of life has been unsealed, the crimson tide, with its rich vermillion tints, gently, noiselessly wends its way through all the delicate and intricate channels of the body; all the little springs hidden from mortal ken, have been set in motion by the divine Architect, and all is now in harmonious action; this we say is life; how wonderful, how glorious!

Deprive the little one of this life-giving, life-sustaining element, and it assumes again its livid hue, its breath grows fainter and fainter, until the last flickering ray expires, and we have but a lifeless lump of clay, past all hopes of physical redemption. Pure air is so essential to the growth and development of the child, that when deprived of it, it must seriously suffer.

But how is it? Let us commence at the foundation. Nearly all women who are enciente, live too much within doors; consequently they do not breathe enough to purify their own blood, and how can their children have good blood, or well developed lungs? It is utterly impossible; inasmuch as the child is formed from the mother's blood, and must of necessity, to a greater or less extent become the inheritor of her physical conditions. Then how all-important is it that you breathe freely, live out of doors as much as possible, and never confine yourself, day or night, in an unventilated room. If your lungs are weak and sensitive, take special pains to improve their condition at this time, and your offspring may be blessed with stronger and better lungs than you have. Although I feel that it is wrong for women with weak lungs and consumptive tendencies to bear children, lest they should ruin their own health, and their offspring be sickly and short-lived, yet if they properly understood, and would obey the physical laws of life, they might bear comparatively healthy children, who, with proper training, would, despite all the unfortunate conditions of the mother, enjoy life and health for many years.

You may say it is all nonsense, this talk about giving children pure air before their birth; but if deprivation of air after birth proves injurious—why is not just as detrimental, perhaps more so, when in embryo, and entirely helpless?

Now let us see how it is after birth. The room is too warm, the windows have been closed for hours, so that not a breath of air can enter; what little there was at first, has been appropriated by those present, all the oxygen has been consumed, and with no means of a fresh supply, and the poisonous, exhalations, which constantly emanate from the lungs and bodies of those present, the little stranger is ushered into existence, surrounded by an atmosphere laden with the seeds of death. Is it not wrong to subject a helpless infant to such a poisoning process every time it breathes, to send the breath of death, instead of life, through those lungs, composed of millions of delicate air cells? The blood not being properly purified, or oxygenated, the child begins to look blue and cold; this is an indication for the nurse to make the room still warmer, examine every crack in doors and windows, put a few more wrappings around the baby, who is already overburdened with clothing, for it must be suffering with the cold.

But just listen to the baby's plea,—"Please do give me a little fresh air, I am suffering for the want of oxygen!" But you do not hear the silent pleading, and hundreds of these little helpless ones are hurried out of existence through the ignorance of mothers and nurses.

When the child sleeps it must of course be placed in bed with its mother, where it gets in a perspiration from being nearly smothered; in this condition it is not allowed even the privilege of breathing its own breath, but must take in the exhalations from its mother's body. This is decidedly wrong. Children should sleep by themselves, in a crib by the bed side, with head and face uncovered, and plenty of air in the room; if it will get uncovered then fasten the clothes on in any way that your ingenuity can invent.

Your children should early become accustomed to outside air; but when you take them out, do not suffocate them with blankets, cloaks, hoods, and veils—many a one has been killed in this way—but wrap the body in sufficient covering, and let the gentle zephyrs play over its little face; if it is a very unpleasant day, however, you may protect its face with a thin veil. What, do you think I am going to take my child out in a storm of wind, rain, or snow? Yes: why not take your child out, as well as go yourselves, provided they are accustomed to take the air?

I have a friend who eight years ago had pulmonary consumption, and was regarded as "hopeless" by friends and physicians, and even by one of our best hydropathic practitioners; but her will was so strong that she recovered, and is now quite healthy. She has a child a year and a half old, who is comparatively healthy; but if he had been treated as other children are, would have been in his grave. Before his birth the mother accustomed herself so much to the open air, that if he does not go out every day he becomes languid and half sick; then the mother sends him out in his carriage, when he becomes quiet, and oftimes sleeps for hours in warm weather, out of doors. When he was about six months old, I visited the family, and was not a little surprised at the effect produced by subjecting the little one to pure air. One day I was anxious to go several miles on business, but it was storming and I thought I must delay; but my friend said "No, I will take you there." "But what will you do with the baby?" "Take him of course; he always goes when I do." "Why, you do not take him out in a storm like this; he will take cold!" "No fear of that, he is used to it, and as he has not been out to-day, and is getting restless, it will do him good." I must confess that I did not exactly relish the idea of going out in a snow storm; however we were soon on our way; the baby became quiet, and slept, and when we reached home seemed perfectly well. I would not advise any of you mothers to take your children out the first stormy day that comes, for they would most likely take cold; but just commence in pleasant weather, and see if you are not well repaid for the time you spend in thus caring for them.

How is it in the school-room? There the children are confined in close rooms, six hours a day, when they should be out of doors, educating, and developing their bodies, until they are at least ten years of age, unless schools are conducted on a better basis than at present. Being so confined, required to obey the [illegible] often we hear them say, "How I do hate school!" If schools were rightly managed, as we hope and trust they will be in "the good time coming," children will hail with delight the hours of school, and some of their happiest moments will be spent in the presence of their teachers.

If your children are sick with measles, scarlet fever, or are indisposed in any way, do not at once exclude them from the air, for they will recover much more rapidly if pure air is freely admitted to their rooms. I was listening to an interesting lecture, a few days since, at a Medical College in this city; the lecturer was speaking of the necessity of proper ventilation in the sick room, and related a case that recently came under his own observation. A family of three children had been ill with scarlet fever; two had died; the only one remaining had been very ill for three weeks, had passed through the different stages of the disease, and seemed in a state of very tardy convalescence; the physicians in attendance were unable to tell why the child did not recover more rapidly; it was restless, and could not sleep; he was called in council. "Why," said he, "gentlemen, this child has been shut up here three weeks, and needs some oxygen." He directed another room to be prepared for it, made as warm as the one it was then occupying, and the child was transferred to a pure, wholesome atmosphere; its restlessness gave way to quiet, and sleep, "nature's sweet restorer," blessed it again, and it is now rapidly recovering. I repeat, then, do not exclude the air from the sick room; it has much to do with dissipating disease, and if one of your family is ill with a contagious disease, the others will not be so liable to get it, if due attention is given to thorough ventilation. There are hundreds and thousands of cases where sickness is prolonged week after week, and in many instances death occurs, from neglect in this one department of sanitary science.

If then, you would have your children healthy and vigorous, see that they are well supplied with an abundance of pure air, both night and day, and they will escape many of "the ills which flesh is heir to," in the form of mental and physical suffering; they will be more cheerful and happy, all the functions of life will be more perfect in their action, and all other things being equal, as life advances it will be to them a bright and glorious reality to be enjoyed in the present, and not "a burden grievous to be borne," from which the wearied spirit longs to be released.—Herald of Health.

NEGLECTING COLDS.

Every intelligent physician knows that the best possible method of promptly curing a cold is, that the very day in which it is observed to have been taken, the patient should cease absolutely from eating a particle for twenty-four or forty-eight hours, and should be strictly confined to a warm room, or be covered up well in bed, taking freely hot drinks. It is also in the experience of every observant person, that when a cold is once taken, very slight causes indeed increase it. The expression, "It is nothing but a cold," conveys a practical falsity of the most pernicious character, because an experienced medical practitioner feels that it is impossible to tell in any given case, where a cold will end; hence, and when highly valuable lives are at stake, his solicitudes appear sometimes to others to verge on folly or ignorance.

A striking and most instructive example of these statements is found in the case of Nicholas the First, the Emperor of all the Russias. For more than a year before his death, his confidential medical adviser observed that in consequence of the Emperor "not giving to sleep the hours needed for restoration," his general vigor was declining, and that exposures which he had often encountered with impunity, were making unfavorable impressions on the system—that he had less power of resistance. At length, while reviewing his troops on a January day, he took a severe cold, which at once excited the apprehensions of his watchful physician, who advised him not to repeat his review.

"Would you make as much of my illness if I were a common soldier?" asked the Emperor, in a tone of good-natured pleasantry.

"Certainly, please your majesty; we should not allow a common soldier to leave the hospital if he were in the state in which your majesty is."

"Well, you would do your duty—I will do mine," and the exposure was repeated, with the result of greatly increasing the bad effects of this original cold, and he died in a week afterwards.—Hall's Journal of Health.

SEVERAL WAYS BY WHICH PEOPLE GET SICK.—Eating too fast, and swallowing food imperfectly masticated.

Taking too much fluid during meals.

Keeping late hours at night, and sleeping too late in the morning.

Wearing the clothes so tight as to impede circulation.

Wearing thin shoes.

Neglecting to take sufficient exercise to keep the hands and feet warm.

Neglecting to wash the body sufficiently to keep the pores of the skin open.

Keeping up a constant excitement by fretting the mind with imaginary troubles.

Taking meals at irregular intervals.

Starving the stomach to gratify a vain and foolish passion for dress.

Exchanging the warm clothing worn during the day for the light costumes worn to evening parties.

WAITING!

O, light of Peace from Eden land,
Whose streams illume the fadeless shore,
Sweep your soft billows to the strand,—
This Time-land where I longing stand—

Stand waiting till the folding skies
Their misty substance roll afar;
Till happiest views of Paradise
Gleam broad and glorious on my eyes.

The sunniest isles in all our seas,
The loveliest vales where summer glows,
Are wanting in the power to ease
The soul which seeks the heavenly peace.

But once the portals open swung,
Which let the golden glories through,
The spirit's anthems, erst unsung,
Rise thro' the radiance, earthward flung.

And with the Prophet's holy eyes,
Faith sees the splendor drawing near;
O. City of God's Paradise,
Come to us thro' the op'ning skies!

O, hidden Age beyond all Time,
O, Rest of rests which art to come,
We hear thy thrilling advent chime
Ring through the years its notes sublime!

Its music, heard above the din
Of soulless strife and bootless toil,—
To this great hope our glad hearts win,
We may behold it ushered in!

THE JUBILEE.

We shall now produce a list of sabbatical years observed by the Jews, and thus prove that the method of beginning a new cycle in fifty years was at that day unknown, hence only a modern invention of men.

We can establish the first sabbatical year thus: We learn from Deuteronomy 15: 15, that the Jews observed the year of release, in commemoration of their redemption from Egyptian bondage, and if so, the first year of release was the seventh after they left Egypt.

If law is always in force from the time the covenant is made, we can point out the first release, not only the year, but the very day: for "thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, at the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee." Jer. 34: 13, 14.

The law here alluded to is found in Exodus 21: 2, and reads thus,—"If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go out free from working," for "the seventh year is the year of release" (Deut. 15; 9); that is, the seventh from the time Israel left Egypt; for that was the beginning of a new epoch with them. And if, as Jeremiah expressly declares, the "covenant" was made "on the day that" the Lord "brought them forth out of the land of Egypt," that is, on the "fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the passover" (Num. 33: 3), Thursday, April 5th, B. C. 1611, the first release was "on the morrow after the passover," in the year B. C. 1605; for thus saith the Lord, "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee; therefore I command thee this thing to-day" (Deut. 15: 15); that is, the fifteenth of the first month, "the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen," as the day to be commemorated by making a release, for "at the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release" (Deut. 15: 1), "and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee;" hence the seventh from the time they left Egypt was the sabbatical year of release.

It is now clear that if Moses left Egypt B. C. 1611, the first sabbatical year was B. C. 1605. Having now established the time of the first sabbatical year, we can, by the continued cycle of seven, know all of the Sabbaths. "And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month" (Josh. 4: 19), in the sixth year of the cycle of seven: hence the following year was a Sabbath, which we can again prove to be correct thus,—"The Lord spoke unto Moses in Mount Sinai, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, when ye come in to the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord." Lev. 25: 1, 2.

From this law, it is evident that Israel was under obligation to give rest to the land at the earliest period that they obtained the power of doing so, which could not have been the year in which they entered the land, for nine days of the year had passed before they crossed the Jordan, and they must first break the power of those who were in possession of the land before they could give rest to it.

The falling of the walls of Jericho, and other victories achieved, put them in possession of enough land during the first year, to answer to the expression, "come in to the land;" hence the law, "then shalt thou keep a Sabbath unto the Lord," restricts us to the second year of their entering Canaan for the Sabbath of the land.

As the first year was spent in wars, that could not have been the Sabbath, for when "that year on which the Jews used to rest came on," they were "released from war," "for the Jews observe this rest every seventh year, as they do every seventh day." (Jose. Ant. b. 3, c. 8, s. 1.) And the law, "when ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord," restricts us to the earliest period at which they could secure rest to the land, which, as we have observed on page 65 of "The Book of Daniel Opened," was the second year of their entering Canaan, that is, B. C. 1570.

That the second year after Israel entered the land was a sabbatical year, we can prove again, in another way: "Moses commanded them, saying, at the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing" (Deut. 31: 10, 11), which was strictly observed by Joshua, in the second year after entering the land of Canaan, when "he read all the words of the law." "There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them" (Josh. 8: 35); which being required at no other time, but during the sabbatical year of release, clearly proves that this was a sabbatical year. "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord" (Deut. 16: 16), but "women and children, and the stranger that is within thy gates," were only required to appear during the seventh year. Deut. 31: 12. This same law proves the twelfth of Solomon to have been a sabbatical year, for "at that time Solomon held a feast, and ALL ISRAEL with him." 1 King 8: 65.

"The house was finished" in "the eighth month," in "the eleventh year of Solomon's reign," and dedicated eight months after, at the feast of tabernacles, in the sabbatical year; an additional proof that the twelfth of Solomon was a seventh year, in B. C. 975.

By the foregoing mentioned law, we can prove that "the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa" was a sabbatical year, for "the gathered ALL JUDAH, and Benjamin, and the stranger, with them" (2 Chron. 15: 9), which was only required during the sabbatical year. Deut. 31: 12.

The law further required women to be present only during the solemnities of the seventh year, and at this time we find the women also assembled (2 Chron. 15: 10). "All Judah and Benjamin" "gathered themselves together at Jerusalem, in the third month" (2 Chron. 15: 10), a season too busy for farmers thus to leave home at any other time, but during the Sabbath of the Lord; hence the fifteenth of Asa, or B. C. 912, was a sabbatical year.

From 2 Chron. 17: 7–10, it would appear that the third year of Jehoshaphat was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 884. The first year of Jehoash is called both "the seventh year" and "the Sabbath." 2 Chron. 11: 47. This sabbatical year occurred B. C. 849.

That Amos wrote during a sabbatical year would appear from this: The seventh year Sabbath was the only one that ended with the appearing of the new moon, or with the ending of the Jewish month; and at the time he wrote the Jews were with impatience waiting for the Sabbath to end, saying, "when will the new moon be gone?" or, as some render it, "when will the month be over" (Amos 8: 5)? from which we conclude that he wrote during the last month of the sabbatical year.

We can again, in another way, prove that he wrote during a Sabbatical year, thus:—"The third year is the year of tithing." Deut. 26: 12. And Amos wrote three years before the time of tithing, for he says, "bring your tithes after three years." Amos 4: 4.

Amos wrote "two years before the earthquake (Chron. 1: 1); and with this earthquake ended the forty-first year of Jeroboam. (See Book of Dan. Opened, p.77.) Therefore the thirty-ninth year of Jeroboam was a sabbatical year. On the day of the earthquake there was a total eclipse of the sun (Amos 8: 8), which eclipse occurred May 31st B. C. 755; thus, by astronomical demonstration, we have proven that B. C. 758 was a sabbatical year. (See Book of Daniel Opened, p.74.) That the fourteenth of Hezekiah was a sabbatical year, we learn from Isaiah 37: 30, B. C. 674.

Josiah, in the eighteenth year of his reign, "went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small, and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant, that was found in the house of the Lord" (2 Chron. 34: 30); which being enjoined but once in seven years shows that this was a sabbatical year; that is, B. C., 583.

"The beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah," was "in the fourth year" (Jer. 28: 1), hence his third, or B. C. 555, was a sabbatical year. From the thirty-fourth chapter of Jeremiah, we learn that the tenth year of Zedekiah was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 548.

That B. C. 485 was a sabbatical year, see page 149 of "The Book of Daniel Opened." From Exodus 9: 40, it would appear that the ninth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, B. C. 429, was a sabbatical year. From Nehemiah 13: 12, we learn that the thirty-third year of Artaxerxes was the tithing year; that is, "the third year, which is the year of tithing" (Deut. 26: 12); hence the thirtieth year of Artaxerxes was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 408.

We learn from 1 Mac. 6: 20, 49, 53, that the one hundred and fiftieth year of the Seleucidæ was a sabbatical year, that is, B. C. 163. By comparing 1 Mac. 16: 14, with Josephus (Ant. b. 13, c. 8, s. 1), we learn that the one hundred and seventy-eighth year of the Seleucidæ was a sabbatical year. This answers to B. C. 135.

Josephus further informs us, that the third year of the one hundred and eighty-fifth olympiad, that is, B. C. 37, was a sabbatical year. "According to the Hebrews, both temples were destroyed in years immediately succeeding sabbaths." We have already noticed that the destruction of the first temple did follow a sabbatical year. The second temple was destroyed B. C. 70, hence B. C. 69 was a sabbatical year.

For convenience, we will now give a table of sabbatical years, to which we will add the years which are admitted and proved to be years of jubilee. We have also added the jubilee according to the arrangement of the Duke of Manchester, to exhibit the jubilee as used by those who make the cycle fifty years.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

1. This table exhibits at one view the twenty sabbatical years mentioned in the Bible and history. The figures in the first column, under B. C., give the year before Christ in which they occurred.

2. The second column, under 49, shows that they occurred in the Jewish seventh year, and that the cycle of forty-nine, by which the jubilee was pointed out, does in no way interfere with this continued cycle of seven years.

3. The third column, under 50, shows where the seventh year would fall, if we use a cycle of fifty for the jubilee, instead of forty-nine. In its arrangement, we have followed the Duke of Manchester. He gives B. C. 429 for a jubilee, to which add twelve hundred years, and we have B. C. 1629 for a jubilee. From which take 1605, and we have 24, in which there are three sabbatical years and three over. Therefore, the cycle of fifty would make B. C. 1605, the third year of the cycle of seven, instead of the seventh, which proves the incorrectness of the idea of using a cycle of fifty years to point out the jubilee.

By tracing down this third column, as placed under fifty, it will be seen that out of twenty sabbatical years, found recorded in the Bible and history, there are but three that could have been sabbatical years, according to the arrangement of the fifty years cycle, as used by the Duke of Manchester.

The reader will now discover that this table in a clear, positive, and undeniable way, exposes the absurdity of supposing that the Jews may have used a cycle of fifty years to point out the jubilee, and proves to absolute certainty that their cycle was forty-nine years.

4. The fifties in the fourth column show where the jubilee would fall, according to the arrangement of the Duke of Manchester.

5. The forty-nines in the same column give the four years which are admitted to be years of jubilee. They are admitted thus: The Jews say that "the fourtenth year after that the city was smitten," that is what Ezekiel calls "the five and twentieth year of our captivity" (Ezek. 41: 1), was a jubilee. In proof of which, they ask "what year began on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" "The fourteenth year after that the city was smitten" was B. C. 534.

"The Jews say that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee." That they are correct in this would appear from Ezek. 1: 1, 2; for there we learn that the thirtieth year of the cycle of forty-nine was "the fifth year of King Jehoachin's captivity." (See p. 108 of The Book of Daniel Opened.) The eighteenth of Josiah was B. C. 583, from which take forty-nine, and we have 534, which was "the fourteenth year after the city was smitten." Therefore, if, as the Jews say, these two years were jubilees, their cycle could not have been fifty, but was forty-nine years.

Says Bishop Usher, "the twelfth of Solomon was a jubilee, which, descending to our chronology, was B. C. 975; if from this we take 583, we have 392, which, divided by 49, leaves no remainder; but if divided by 50, there is a remainder of 42 years; so we have in many ways proved that the cycle of jubilees was forty-nine, and not fifty years.

WM. C. THURMAN.

(To be concluded.)

WILBERFORCE.—"Come and sit near me, and let me lean on you," said Wilberforce to a friend a few minutes before his death. Afterwards putting his arms around that friend, he said: "Let us talk of heaven. Do not weep for me. I am happy. Think of me and let the thought press you forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ a Savior. Read the Bible—read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place; through all my perplexities and distresses I never read any other books, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study, and all my knowledge of the doctrines and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been drawn from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do in the place of the simple truth of the Bible."—Dying Words of Wilberforce.

THE STANDARD.

Is the Bible our standard of faith and practice? Are we to judge of our religious state from the correspondence of our experience and practice with its teachings? So says the whole Protestant church. Whatever they divide upon, they are united in this, that the word of God is the supreme law of human action. Here they meet upon common ground. And this is the true view of the case. If the Bible is of any authority it is of the highest authority. By this word we must be judged at the last day, and by this word we should prove ourselves. The great tendency is to ignore the teaching of the Bible. And it requires watchfulness and energy to resist the common tendency. In a rapid stream he who would not be borne down by the current must row hard and constantly. Preaching, by explaining and forcing the word of God, has well nigh gone out of fashion. The text is generally taken from the Bible, though some modern pulpit orators base their Sunday evening discourses upon popular proverbs, slang phrases, or quotations from Shakspeare. But from whatever source the text is taken, the body of the sermon is made from the sayings of men, or from the periodical literature of the day. We have a great deal of preaching for the times; we need preaching for eternity. Preachers are demanded who can "speak with authority, and not as the scribes" who read smooth essays that lull their hearers into a feeling of false security. Who, as he goes into modern, fashionable churches, and impartially surveys the congregation and their worship, would ever dream that they are the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus?

1. Where is the humility he required? His first blessing was pronounced upon the poor in spirit. To them belongs the kingdom of heaven. His followers are told that theirs is a state of peculiar exaltation when men despise them and persecute them, and say all manner of evil of them falsely, for Christ's sake. Does the "costly apparel" of that gay looking congregation of worshipers bear much resemblance to the modest raiment of humility? Do those ear-rings, and breast-pins, and finger-rings, and gold watches and chains, worn in such profusion, in instances not a few, by even the preacher and his family, look as if they were commanded by the highest authority not to adorn themselves with gold or pearls or costly array? Do they undertake to justify the practice from the Bible? The apology that they attempt to make for this plain violation of God's command is, "my conscience does not condemn me." They thus show that in their judgment the word of God is not supreme. They have another arbiter, whose decisions they practically place above the commands of God. They have tampered with conscience until it has become perverted, and they set up its dictates in opposition to the requirements of the Bible. Does that tall steeple, that pretending edifice, have the appearance of humility? Is that a place so in keeping with the feelings of "the poor in spirit" that they would naturally congregate there? There may be a show of humility where that grace is wanting; but wherever it really exists its fruit will be apparent.

2. Where is the spiritual worship that Christ requires? God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. Outward acts of worship are enjoined, but their value does not consist in the artistic skill, but in the spirit in which they are executed. That organ or melodeon may send forth harmonious sounds, but is God specially pleased with strains of music, no matter what the source from which they originate? If not, then the musical part of the worship, as an act of devotion, can be of but little value. The most valuable portion, doubtless, is that performed by the organ, for that inanimate machine is at least innocent. It does not quarrel, nor have fits of jealousy, nor drink brandy, nor swear, nor go to theatres on week-days, nor flirt, nor make love on the Sabbath while the minister is preaching. It behaves with becoming seriousness and decorum. You cannot, by any figure of speech, call that brilliant execution of a difficult piece of music, set to words of devotion, spiritual worship. Do the people worship God by sitting upon their seats and perhaps politely bowing their heads while the minister reads or makes a prayer? Is listening to a literary production, read in an affected style, worshiping God? It were better to heed the Psalmist's invitation, "O, come let us worship, and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord, our Maker."

3. Where does the Bible sanction that respect of persons so common in modern houses of worship? If the poor have the gospel preached unto them, it is not in these representative churches. They are not wanted, and they know it. Why does the church say to the rich man, as he enters the house of worship, "'Sit thou here in a good place!' You have the money; only pay for the privilege, and you shall have the exclusive occupancy of the seat of your choice every Sabbath in the year. Your gold shall secure you from the intrusion of any but those of your own selection. No common person—none of the poorer classes shall be allowed to kneel by your side." Is there a single passage of the Bible that can be brought to the support of this practice which heathenism itself condemns? * * *

There are many other points in which the word of God is made of no effect by modern interpretations or traditions. We give these as specimens. So great is the general departure from gospel simplicity, that it requires the courage of martyrs to come out and plant ourselves in all things upon Bible ground. There must be no half-way work in this matter. If the Bible is of God, we must cordially submit to its teachings. We should strive to interpret it as God will interpret it at the judgment day. Let us then come back to the Bible standard of experimental and practical piety. The first aim should be to get in your own soul that grace that will bear you in triumph through all the difficulties of life, and take you safely to heaven. Seek, until you obtain, righteousness and true holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Be not satisfied with the superficial experience that characterizes the mass of professing christians. Go to the bottom. Build upon the rock. Confess and restore where you have wronged others.

As you receive the light, walk in it and let it shine. Be a witness every where both to God's fidelity and to his truth. Bear your unequivocal testimony against all practices, no matter by whom sanctioned, which the Bible condemns. Be not deterred because opposition is provoked or charges made of the want of chartiy. Have the love that beareth all things, and then deal faithfully with your fellows. Be not afraid of any truth which you find in the Bible. We do well to heed the solemn words of Jesus, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."—Earnest Christian.

LIFE'S OCEAN.

The blue bounding wave is crested with foam,
And angrily tossing our bark;
The surging billows sweep over our home,
And are sporting with us for a mark.

The clouds and the ocean seem bent with the gale
To swallow us up 'neath the wave;
And adversity's storm carried away every sail,
Nor content if our lives we save.

But onward they sweep, more loud and more shrill,
Unheeding our prayers and our tears;
Then we look far away to Zion's hill,
And behold, our Savior appears.

His appearance brings peace, their rage is staid,
A heavenly calm prevails;
O, the sweet peaceful rest his presence has made
In life's rough, keen, heart-searching gales.

BROTHERLY KINDNESS.

I have often heard people talk about acts of kindness and deeds of charity; but, in order to imitate our kind Master, we must do something more than talk about kindness. Real acts of kindness, prompted by the holy principle of that charity which is the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, will be shown by all true and humble followers of Jesus, in extending the hand of relief to our suffering brethren and sisters, whether black, white, red or yellow.

We know that in Peter's catalogue of christian graces, he places "brotherly kindness" before "charity," and next to it; and I think that all the difference between charity and kindness is, that charity is a heaven-born principle, or a great and glorious reservoir, from whence all acts of brotherly kindness flow out in little streams, or small rivers, like brooks that flow from a large pond, and refresh every thing in their course, and cause the flowers to bud and blossom, and the grass to look green and beautiful, and the meadows gay; and all living animals quench their thirst from the refreshing streams. Brotherly kindness, when manifested in kind acts and efforts to relieve the suffering poor, is like refreshing streams from the great fountain of charity, which cause every thing to rejoice in their course.

Now you who have been blessed by a kind Providence, and have barns and cellars full of the products of the good Lord's fertile earth, in kindness remember thy suffering brother or sister, whether in bonds, or in hunger, or nakedness; and let us never do as the priest and Levite did; but do as the good Samaritan did, who dismounted from his own beast, put the sufferer thereon, and conveyed him to a place of safety and comfort, where he supplied his wants.

It is very true that we have many of our dear brethren and sisters near by, who are poor, and who are suffering for the comforts that we are blessed with, and should by all means be relieved and converted by those who have their full stores of provision and money, for our dear Redeemer says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these my brethen, ye have done it unto me," to whom he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

Think, for one moment, of the thousands of our colored brethren and sisters at the South; and of the many white people there, who, in consequence of the dreadful war, so lately closed, are left in a destitute and suffering condition. There is a cold winter coming on, and thousands at the South must suffer greatly for want of food and clothing between now and spring; and you know the great Teacher tells us, that "whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." St. Paul says (Gal. 5: 13), "By love serve one another;" and in the next verse, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

A few more words about charity, which is the "bond of perfectness." It is said by one of the prophets (Neh. 9: 17), that "God is slow to anger, and of great kindness:" and Paul says (1 Cor. 13: 4), "Charity suffereth long and is kind." Of course, if charity, or God's love, is established in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, then we shall manifest great kindness towards our suffering brethren, wherever we can find them; and, as the good Lord said to Isaiah the prophet (Isaiah 54: 8), "But with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord, thy Redeemer."

Thus noble acts of kindness grow out of the great fountain of God's love to poor, sinful creatures; and, therefore, I sincerely think that any brother or sister, who has one spark of that noble principle of the love of God in the heart, will be just as sure to show that principle of love by acts of kindness, so far as they are able, just as sure as they would eat when they were hungry, or drink when they were thirsty. What sweet peace it brings to our minds to do acts of kindness to our dear and suffering brethren. For one, I shall do all I can.

Yours, waiting for the kingdom,

A COMPUTATION.

IS THE EARTH LARGE ENOUGH TO CONTAIN ALL THE REDEEMED UPON ITS SURFACE?

Some understand the doctrine taught in the Bible in relation to the final abode of the saints to be, as declared therein, that they will "inherit the earth"—this very identical one which we now inhabit, after its reconstruction and purification. Others think that the saints, even in their resurrected state, will live in a kingdom in heaven, away off beyond the stars, in a "land elysian, far, far away,"

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,"

as sung by poets, and believe this earth too small so contain all the righteous who ever lived upon it.

If this be so, we must be careful how we preach God's word, that "the meek shall inherit the earth." But let us be candid and examine the subject, and so determine if it is unreasonable that the earth is for the saint's eternal inheritance.

The population of the earth is estimated to be about one thousand millions, which is probably not far from correct. The chronological age of the world is calculated to be about six thousand years; and according to the latest chronologers, the world will arrive at its six-thousandth year before the year 1880.

We will presume that from the beginning of the creation of man, each generation has been thirty years in length. The world being about six thousand years old, we thus have two thousand generations since that time. This is a generous number to suppose; for it is plain that in the early age of the world a generation was much longer than thirty years, and that till within a few generations, they were much over thirty years. So in fact there have not been nigh so many as two thousand generations. But, for argument's sake, let it remain that number.

The first generation consisted of two persons, Adam and Eve; and the last, the present one, the two thousandth generation from the first, comprising a thousand millions, and we have an average of five hundred millions to a generation. This being the average number of each, and there being two thousand generations, we find the number of persons who have lived during the six thousands years past, to be one hundred billions, or, as some express it, one hundred thousand millions. As there have not been two thousand generations since the creation of man, and all who lived in the year of the Deluge perished, excepting eight persons; then not so large a number ever lived as we have calculated, but for argument's sake let it remain as stated at first.

Supposing a space of ground two feet square, or four square feet, be required for each person to stand upon, these one thousand million, if all alive at one time, would require four hundred thousand millions square feet, or a little over 14,348¼ square miles of land to stand upon. This would be about twice the size of Massachusetts, less than half the size of Maine, less than one third of New York; so that New York state alone would hold more than three times as many as ever lived on the whole earth. The United States and Territories, with Mexico, contain about 2,564,000 square miles. Now each person requiring four square feet to stand upon, these United States and Territories, etc., contain surface enough for one hundred and seventy-seven times as many as ever lived; provided all the land was suitable for that purpose.

On an average, man requires twelve square feet to lie upon; or for his grave. And though many giants have lived and died, yet many infants have died, enough, no doubt, to balance the difference in size. If all the one thousand millions who ever lived on earth, were buried side by side, that would require 43,044 square miles of land. There are 46,220 square miles in New York state. If we allow 3176 square miles for the surface covered by water, we have an area of 43,044 square miles of land—just the space required for the graves of all earth's inhabitants, each one having twelve square feet for that purpose.

Thus it is seen that all who ever lived on earth—yes, more than all—could be buried in the state of New York; not one above the other either, as in some graveyards, where they lie two and three and more, in some places, deep—but each one alone, none above and none beneath.

It has gone the rounds in many public prints, and is believed by many persons, that every part of the earth has been dug over seven times to bury the dead,—that the dead are so numerous there are seven layers of human beings in the ground all over the whole world. This is a mere assumption, as will at once be seen by reflecting a moment, and considering how many have ever lived on earth, and how much space is necessary for each one's grave; and readily it will be seen that every mortal that ever drew the breath of life, now dead, together with every soul now alive, could all be buried one deep in the state of New York alone.

The surface of the globe contains two hundred millions square miles, nearly three-quarters of which is water, leaving about fifty millions square miles of land. At the present time the average number of persons to a square mile is twenty. Allowing twelve square feet for a grave, one square mile contains space enough to bury more than two millions of persons. There being fifty millions square miles of land on the globe, gives sufficient room to bury one hundred and sixteen trillions, and one hundred and sixty billions, more than a thousand times as many as ever were born; and if the earth were covered with persons standing erect, there would be room enough for three times as many as this countless number, above enumerated.

The United States contains over two millions square miles; and nearly sixty times as many as ever existed could be buried beneath its surface. Even if only half the United States be suitable for a graveyard, there would be ample room for the burial of thirty times as many persons as ever drew a breath since the creation of man, six thousands years ago.

Suppose all who ever lived, and who now are living, to be alive on the earth at once, there would be about two thousand persons to a square mile of 640 acres, or about three to an acre; giving a lot of land one hundred and eighteen feet square to each individual; large enough to build a convenient sized house and all other needed buildings.

The New Jerusalem city, of Rev. 21: 16, being 12,000 furlongs, or 1500 miles in measure—probably the whole distance around it; though some suppose it means 1500 miles square; but the city was four square, and its measure being 12,000 furlongs, we understand it to be the whole distance around, not a quarter of it. Allowing this to be the distance around, would make the city 375 miles square, and would contain 140,625 square miles, or ninety million acres. All who ever lived on earth could stand within the walls of this city, and each one would have a space of over thirty-nine square feet, over six and a quarter feet square. The city would cover an area of land nearly equal to the seven states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania. It would cover land equal to the whole of Palestine, Syria, and all of Mesopotamia excepting the southeast part, below the ruins of old Babylon. Or, it would extend from the southwest corner of Palestine, northward, the whole eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea, and beyond as far north as Tarsus, in Asia Minor; and from thence eastward about fifty miles beyond the ruins of ancient Nineveh, and from there southward, within fifty miles of old Babylon, and down to a point one hundred miles into the desert of Arabia, and from there westward to the southwest corner of Palestine.

If the city were fifteen hundred miles square, it would be six thousand miles around its walls, and would contain two million, two hundred and fifty thousand square miles. The countries of Turkey in Europe, and Asia, Persia, Arabia, Greece, and Italy, contain less surface than the supposed area of this city. The whole of the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf of Mexico to the British Possessions, would be about the right size, shaped into a square, for such a monstrous city, which would extend one seventeenth around the earth. And hence we conclude that it must be only three hundred and seventy-five miles square, and this size, it will be seen, is of sufficient magnitude to contain all who ever lived on earth.

And now, having shown how small a space would be needed to contain all mankind, the question may arise, Can enough food be procured from the earth to sustain all its occupants, provided they need it? The curse being removed from the earth, the land will yield its increase, and grapes may grow in clusters as large as a man can lift, as they did in Canaan, when Caleb and Joshua went to spy; and all vegetation would be invigorated proportionately, and sufficient food would be obtained from each lot of land of seven rods square, at only one crop a year, to feed half a dozen persons, even allowing each one to eat a ton of food per year. Without going into details, we think it will be admitted that no difficulty will ever be experienced in this respect.

From what we have above shown, it will be seen that the earth, even a small portion of it,—even one of these (once) United States, viz., New York,—contains room enough for, not only every soul that breathed the breath of life on earth, and all who now inhabit it, from every nation under the sun, to stand upon comfortably, but ample space to bury every mortal who ever existed, and room to spare.

As the word of God declares that the "meek shall inherit the earth," the promise will be fulfilled, literally, we believe. S. D. B.

MAN.

If man cometh by the uniform working of natural law, why do we not see that same law working? It would be a miracle to see the working of common law change, as much so as it would to see man formed without it. Gen. 2: 7.—"God created man in his own image."

Observation and natural experience teach that man came by an intelligent agent. If at first a child, then the law of helplessness governs it. Could natural law teach it to eat and drink? Do we see external law teaching a child to articulate sounds? It is proven by a deaf and dumb person, that a child not hearing articulations could never make them. Dumbness being the consequence of not hearing.

Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Rom. 11: 17. The conclusion is of necessity, reasoning from effect to cause, that God made man, and the faculty of speech is a gift in his creation. Adam told his children of his condition, and by the law of memory (which is easier resorted to, and better kept than any written code), the most remote of all nations, and the heathen in particular, have got the name and the belief of God.

Adam remembered the first conversation he had with his Father, and from him as our common father, speech is derived.

For the World's Crisis

WAITING!

O, light of Peace from Eden land,
 Whose streams illume the fadeless shore,
Sweep your soft billows to the strand,—
 This Time-land where I longing stand—

Stand waiting till the folding skies
 Their misty substance roll afar;
Till happiest views of Paradise
 Gleam broad and glorious on my eyes.

The sunniest isles in all our seas,
 The loveliest vales where summer glows,
Are wanting in the power to ease
 The soul which seeks the heavenly peace.

But once the portals open swung,
 Which let the golden glories through,
The spirit's anthems, erst unsung,
 Rise thro' the radiance, earthward flung.

And with the Prophet's holy eyes,
 Faith sees the splendor drawing near;
O, City of God's Paradise,
 Come to us thro' the op'ning skies!

O, hidden Age beyond all Time,
 O, Rest of rests which art to come,
We hear thy thrilling advent chime
 Ring through the years its notes sublime!

Its music, heard above the din
 Of soulless strife and bootless toil,—
To this great hope our glad hearts win,
 We may behold it ushered in!

THE JUBILEE.

We shall now produce a list of sabbatical years observed by the Jews, and thus prove that the method of beginning a new cycle in fifty years was at that day unknown, hence only a modern invention of men.

We can establish the first sabbatical year thus: We learn from Deuteronomy 15: 15, that the Jews observed the year of release, in commemoration of their redemption from Egyptian bondage, and if so, the first year of release was the seventh after they left Egypt.

If law is always in force from the time the covenant is made, we can point out the first release, not only the year, but the very day: for "thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, I made a covenant with your fathers in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying, at the end of seven years let ye go every man his brother Hebrew, which hath been sold unto thee; and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee." Jer. 34: 13, 14.

The law here alluded to is found in Exodus 21: 2, and reads thus,—"If thou buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go out free from working," for "the seventh year is the year of release" (Deut. 15; 9); that is, the seventh from the time Israel left Egypt; for that was the beginning of a new epoch with them. And if, as Jeremiah expressly declares, the "covenant" was made "on the day that" the Lord "brought them forth out of the land of Egypt," that is, on the "fifteenth day of the first month, on the morrow after the passover" (Num. 33: 3), Thursday, April 5th, B. C. 1611, the first release was "on the morrow after the passover," in the year B. C. 1605; for thus saith the Lord, "Thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee; therefore I command thee this thing to-day" (Deut. 15: 15); that is, the fifteenth of the first month, "the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen," as the day to be commemorated by making a release, for "at the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release" (Deut. 15: 1), "and when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee;" hence the seventh from the time they left Egypt was the sabbatical year of release.

It is now clear that if Moses left Egypt B. C. 1611, the first sabbatical year was B. C. 1605. Having now established the time of the first sabbatical year, we can, by the continued cycle of seven, know all of the Sabbaths. "And the people came up out of Jordan on the tenth day of the first month" (Josh. 4: 19), in the sixth year of the cycle of seven: hence the following year was a Sabbath, which we can again prove to be correct thus,—"The Lord spoke unto Moses in Mount Sinai, saying, speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, when ye come in to the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord." Lev. 25: 1, 2.

From this law, it is evident that Israel was under obligation to give rest to the land at the earliest period that they obtained the power of doing so, which could not have been the year in which they entered the land, for nine days of the year had passed before they crossed the Jordan, and they must first break the power of those who were in possession of the land before they could give rest to it.

The falling of the walls of Jericho, and other victories achieved, put them in possession of enough land during the first year, to answer to the expression, "come in to the land;" hence the law, "then shalt thou keep a Sabbath unto the Lord," restricts us to the second year of their entering Canaan for the Sabbath of the land.

As the first year was spent in wars, that could not have been the Sabbath, for when "that year on which the Jews used to rest came on," they were "released from war," "for the Jews observe this rest every seventh year, as they do every seventh day." (Jose. Ant. b. 3, c. 8, s. 1.) And the law, "when ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a Sabbath unto the Lord," restricts us to the earliest period at which they could secure rest to the land, which, as we have observed on page 65 of "The Book of Daniel Opened," was the second year of their entering Canaan, that is, B. C. 1570.

That the second year after Israel entered the land was a sabbatical year, we can prove again, in another way: "Moses commanded them, saying, at the end of every seven years, in the solemnity of the year of release, in the feast of tabernacles, when all Israel is come to appear before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose, thou shalt read this law before all Israel in their hearing" (Deut. 31: 10, 11), which was strictly observed by Joshua, in the second year after entering the land of Canaan, when "he read all the words of the law." "There was not a word of all that Moses commanded, which Joshua read not before all the congregation of Israel, with the women and the little ones, and the strangers that were conversant among them" (Josh. 8: 35); which being required at no other time, but during the sabbatical year of release, clearly proves that this was a sabbatical year. "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord" (Deut. 16: 16), but "women and children, and the stranger that is within thy gates," were only required to appear during the seventh year. Deut. 31: 12. This same law proves the twelfth of Solomon to have been a sabbatical year, for "at that time Solomon held a feast, and ALL ISRAEL with him." 1 King 8: 65.

"The house was finished" in "the eighth month," in "the eleventh year of Solomon's reign," and dedicated eight months after, at the feast of tabernacles, in the sabbatical year; an additional proof that the twelfth of Solomon was a seventh year, in B. C. 975.

By the foregoing mentioned law, we can prove that "the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa" was a sabbatical year, for "he gathered ALL JUDAH, and Benjamin, and the stranger, with them" (2 Chron. 15: 9), which was only required during the sabbatical year. Deut. 31: 12.

The law further required women to be present only during the solemnities of the seventh year, and at this time we find the women also assembled (2 Chron. 15: 10). "All Judah and Benjamin" "gathered themselves together at Jerusalem, in the third month" (2 Chron. 15: 10), a season too busy for farmers thus to leave home at any other time, but during the Sabbath of the Lord; hence the fifteenth of Asa, or B. C. 912, was a sabbatical year.

From 2 Chron. 17: 7–10, it would appear that the third year of Jehoshaphat was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 884. The first year of Jehoash is called both "the seventh year" and "the Sabbath." 2 Chron. 11: 47. This sabbatical year occurred B. C. 849.

That Amos wrote during a sabbatical year would appear from this: The seventh year Sabbath was the only one that ended with the appearing of the new moon, or with the ending of the Jewish month; and at the time he wrote the Jews were with impatience waiting for the Sabbath to end, saying, "when will the new moon be gone?" or, as some render it, "when will the month be over" (Amos 8: 5)? from which we conclude that he wrote during the last month of the sabbatical year.

We can again, in another way, prove that he wrote during a Sabbatical year, thus:—"The third year is the year of tithing." Deut. 26: 12. And Amos wrote three years before the time of tithing, for he says, "bring your tithes after three years." Amos 4: 4.

Amos wrote "two years before the earthquake (Chron. 1: 1); and with this earthquake ended the forty-first year of Jeroboam. (See Book of Dan. Opened, p.77.) Therefore the thirty-ninth year of Jeroboam was a sabbatical year. On the day of the earthquake there was a total eclipse of the sun (Amos 8: 8), which eclipse occurred May 31st B. C. 755; thus, by astronomical demonstration, we have proven that B. C. 758 was a sabbatical year. (See Book of Daniel Opened, p.74.) That the fourteenth of Hezekiah was a sabbatical year, we learn from Isaiah 37: 30, B. C. 674.

Josiah, in the eighteenth year of his reign, "went up into the house of the Lord, and all the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and the priests, and the Levites, and all the people, great and small, and he read in their ears all the words of the book of the covenant, that was found in the house of the Lord" (2 Chron. 34: 30); which being enjoined but once in seven years shows that this was a sabbatical year; that is, B. C., 583.

"The beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah," was "in the fourth year" (Jer. 28: 1), hence his third, or B. C. 555, was a sabbatical year. From the thirty-fourth chapter of Jeremiah, we learn that the tenth year of Zedekiah was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 548.

That B. C. 485 was a sabbatical year, see page 149 of "The Book of Daniel Opened." From Exodus 9: 40, it would appear that the ninth year of the reign of Artaxerxes, B. C. 429, was a sabbatical year. From Nehemiah 13: 12, we learn that the thirty-third year of Artaxerxes was the tithing year; that is, "the third year, which is the year of tithing" (Deut. 26: 12); hence the thirtieth year of Artaxerxes was a sabbatical year, which was B. C. 408.

We learn from 1 Mac. 6: 20, 49, 53, that the one hundred and fiftieth year of the Seleucidæ was a sabbatical year, that is, B. C. 163. By comparing 1 Mac. 16: 14, with Josephus (Ant. b. 13, c. 8, s. 1), we learn that the one hundred and seventy-eighth year of the Seleucidæ was a sabbatical year. This answers to B. C. 135.

Josephus further informs us, that the third year of the one hundred and eighty-fifth olympiad, that is, B. C. 37, was a sabbatical year. "According to the Hebrews, both temples were destroyed in years immediately succeeding sabbaths." We have already noticed that the destruction of the first temple did follow a sabbatical year. The second temple was destroyed B. C. 70, hence B. C. 69 was a sabbatical year.

For convenience, we will now give a table of sabbatical years, to which we will add the years which are admitted and proved to be years of jubilee. We have also added the jubilee according to the arrangement of the Duke of Manchester, to exhibit the jubilee as used by those who make the cycle fifty years.

EXPLANATION OF THE TABLE.

1. This table exhibits at one view the twenty sabbatical years mentioned in the Bible and history. The figures in the first column, under B. C., give the year before Christ in which they occurred.

2. The second column, under 49, shows that they occurred in the Jewish seventh year, and that the cycle of forty-nine, by which the jubilee was pointed out, does in no way interfere with this continued cycle of seven years.

3. The third column, under 50, shows where the seventh year would fall, if we use a cycle of fifty for the jubilee, instead of forty-nine. In its arrangement, we have followed the Duke of Manchester. He gives B. C. 429 for a jubilee, to which add twelve hundred years, and we have B. C. 1629 for a jubilee. From which take 1605, and we have 24, in which there are three sabbatical years and three over. Therefore, the cycle of fifty would make B. C. 1605, the third year of the cycle of seven, instead of the seventh, which proves the incorrectness of the idea of using a cycle of fifty years to point out the jubilee.

By tracing down this third column, as placed under fifty, it will be seen that out of twenty sabbatical years, found recorded in the Bible and history, there are but three that could have been sabbatical years, according to the arrangement of the fifty years cycle, as used by the Duke of Manchester.

The reader will now discover that this table in a clear, positive, and undeniable way, exposes the absurdity of supposing that the Jews may have used a cycle of fifty years to point out the jubilee, and proves to absolute certainty that their cycle was forty-nine years.

4. The fifties in the fourth column show where the jubilee would fall, according to the arrangement of the Duke of Manchester.

5. The forty-nines in the same column give the four years which are admitted to be years of jubilee. They are admitted thus: The Jews say that "the fourteenth year after that the city was smitten," that is what Ezekiel calls "the five and twentieth year of our captivity" (Ezek. 41: 1), was a jubilee. In proof of which, they ask "what year began on the tenth of the month but that of the jubilee?" "The fourteenth year after that the city was smitten" was B. C. 534.

"The Jews say that the eighteenth of Josiah, when the law was found in the temple, was a jubilee." That they are correct in this would appear from Ezek. 1: 1, 2; for there we learn that the thirtieth year of the cycle of forty-nine was "the fifth year of King Jehoachin's captivity." (See p. 108 of The Book of Daniel Opened.) The eighteenth of Josiah was B. C. 583, from which take forty-nine, and we have 534, which was "the fourteenth year after the city was smitten." Therefore, if, as the Jews say, these two years were jubilees, their cycle could not have been fifty, but was forty-nine years.

Says Bishop Usher, "the twelfth of Solomon was a jubilee, which, descending to our chronology, was B. C. 975; if from this we take 583, we have 392, which, divided by 49, leaves no remainder; but if divided by 50, there is a remainder of 42 years; so we have in many ways proved that the cycle of jubilees was forty-nine, and not fifty years.

WILBERFORCE.—"Come and sit near me, and let me lean on you," said Wilberforce to a friend a few minutes before his death. Afterwards putting his arms around that friend, he said: "Let us talk of heaven. Do not weep for me. I am happy. Think of me and let the thought press you forward. I never knew happiness till I found Christ a Savior. Read the Bible—read the Bible! Let no religious book take its place; through all my perplexities and distresses I never read any other books, and I never felt the want of any other. It has been my hourly study, and all my knowledge of the doctrines and all my acquaintance with the experience and realities of religion, have been drawn from the Bible only. I think religious people do not read the Bible enough. Books about religion may be useful enough, but they will not do in the place of the simple truth of the Bible."—Dying Words of Wilberforce.

THE STANDARD.

Is the Bible our standard of faith and practice? Are we to judge of our religious state from the correspondence of our experience and practice with its teachings? So says the whole Protestant church. Whatever they divide upon, they are united in this, that the word of God is the supreme law of human action. Here they meet upon common ground. And this is the true view of the case. If the Bible is of any authority it is of the highest authority. By this word we must be judged at the last day, and by this word we should prove ourselves. The great tendency is to ignore the teaching of the Bible. And it requires watchfulness and energy to resist the common tendency. In a rapid stream he who would not be borne down by the current must row hard and constantly. Preaching, by explaining and forcing the word of God, has well nigh gone out of fashion. The text is generally taken from the Bible, though some modern pulpit orators base their Sunday evening discourses upon popular proverbs, slang phrases, or quotations from Shakspeare. But from whatever source the text is taken, the body of the sermon is made from the sayings of men, or from the periodical literature of the day. We have a great deal of preaching for the times; we need preaching for eternity. Preachers are demanded who can "speak with authority, and not as the scribes" who read smooth essays that lull their hearers into a feeling of false security. Who, as he goes into modern, fashionable churches, and impartially surveys the congregation and their worship, would ever dream that they are the followers of the meek and lowly Jesus?

1. Where is the humility he required? His first blessing was pronounced upon the poor in spirit. To them belongs the kingdom of heaven. His followers are told that theirs is a state of peculiar exaltation when men despise them and persecute them, and say all manner of evil of them falsely, for Christ's sake. Does the "costly apparel" of that gay looking congregation of worshipers bear much resemblance to the modest raiment of humility? Do those ear-rings, and breast-pins, and finger-rings, and gold watches and chains, worn in such profusion, in instances not a few, by even the preacher and his family, look as if they were commanded by the highest authority not to adorn themselves with gold or pearls or costly array? Do they undertake to justify the practice from the Bible? The apology that they attempt to make for this plain violation of God's command is, "my conscience does not condemn me." They thus show that in their judgment the word of God is not supreme. They have another arbiter, whose decisions they practically place above the commands of God. They have tampered with conscience until it has become perverted, and they set up its dictates in opposition to the requirements of the Bible. Does that tall steeple, that pretending edifice, have the appearance of humility? Is that a place so in keeping with the feelings of "the poor in spirit" that they would naturally congregate there? There may be a show of humility where that grace is wanting; but wherever it really exists its fruit will be apparent.

2. Where is the spiritual worship that Christ requires? God is a Spirit, and they that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth. Outward acts of worship are enjoined, but their value does not consist in the artistic skill, but in the spirit in which they are executed. That organ or melodeon may send forth harmonious sounds, but is God specially pleased with strains of music, no matter what the source from which they originate? If not, then the musical part of the worship, as an act of devotion, can be of but little value. The most valuable portion, doubtless, is that performed by the organ, for that inanimate machine is at least innocent. It does not quarrel, nor have fits of jealousy, nor drink brandy, nor swear, nor go to theatres on week-days, nor flirt, nor make love on the Sabbath while the minister is preaching. It behaves with becoming seriousness and decorum. You cannot, by any figure of speech, call that brilliant execution of a difficult piece of music, set to words of devotion, spiritual worship. Do the people worship God by sitting upon their seats and perhaps politely bowing their heads while the minister reads or makes a prayer? Is listening to a literary production, read in an affected style, worshiping God? It were better to heed the Psalmist's invitation, "O, come let us worship, and bow down, let us kneel before the Lord, our Maker."

3. Where does the Bible sanction that respect of persons so common in modern houses of worship? If the poor have the gospel preached unto them, it is not in these representative churches. They are not wanted, and they know it. Why does the church say to the rich man, as he enters the house of worship, "'Sit thou here in a good place!' You have the money; only pay for the privilege, and you shall have the exclusive occupancy of the seat of your choice every Sabbath in the year. Your gold shall secure you from the intrusion of any but those of your own selection. No common person—none of the poorer classes shall be allowed to kneel by your side." Is there a single passage of the Bible that can be brought to the support of this practice which heathenism itself condemns? * * *

There are many other points in which the word of God is made of no effect by modern interpretations or traditions. We give these as specimens. So great is the general departure from gospel simplicity, that it requires the courage of martyrs to come out and plant ourselves in all things upon Bible ground. There must be no half-way work in this matter. If the Bible is of God, we must cordially submit to its teachings. We should strive to interpret it as God will interpret it at the judgment day. Let us then come back to the Bible standard of experimental and practical piety. The first aim should be to get in your own soul that grace that will bear you in triumph through all the difficulties of life, and take you safely to heaven. Seek, until you obtain, righteousness and true holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. Be not satisfied with the superficial experience that characterizes the mass of professing christians. Go to the bottom. Build upon the rock. Confess and restore where you have wronged others.

As you receive the light, walk in it and let it shine. Be a witness every where both to God's fidelity and to his truth. Bear your unequivocal testimony against all practices, no matter by whom sanctioned, which the Bible condemns. Be not deterred because opposition is provoked or charges made of the want of chartiy. Have the love that beareth all things, and then deal faithfully with your fellows. Be not afraid of any truth which you find in the Bible. We do well to heed the solemn words of Jesus, "If any man shall add unto these things, God shall add unto him the plagues that are written in this book; and if any man shall take away from the words of the book of this prophecy, God shall take away his part out of the book of life, and out of the holy city, and from the things which are written in this book."—Earnest Christian.

LIFE'S OCEAN.

The blue bounding wave is crested with foam,
 And angrily tossing our bark;
The surging billows sweep over our home,
 And are sporting with us for a mark.

The clouds and the ocean seem bent with the gale
 To swallow us up 'neath the wave;
And adversity's storm carried away every sail,
 Nor content if our lives we save.

But onward they sweep, more loud and more shrill,
 Unheeding our prayers and our tears;
Then we look far away to Zion's hill,
 And behold, our Savior appears.

His appearance brings peace, their rage is staid,
 A heavenly calm prevails;
O, the sweet peaceful rest his presence has made
 In life's rough, keen, heart-searching gales.

BROTHERLY KINDNESS.

I have often heard people talk about acts of kindness and deeds of charity; but, in order to imitate our kind Master, we must do something more than talk about kindness. Real acts of kindness, prompted by the holy principle of that charity which is the love of God shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost, will be shown by all true and humble followers of Jesus, in extending the hand of relief to our suffering brethren and sisters, whether black, white, red or yellow.

We know that in Peter's catalogue of christian graces, he places "brotherly kindness" before "charity," and next to it; and I think that all the difference between charity and kindness is, that charity is a heaven-born principle, or a great and glorious reservoir, from whence all acts of brotherly kindness flow out in little streams, or small rivers, like brooks that flow from a large pond, and refresh every thing in their course, and cause the flowers to bud and blossom, and the grass to look green and beautiful, and the meadows gay; and all living animals quench their thirst from the refreshing streams. Brotherly kindness, when manifested in kind acts and efforts to relieve the suffering poor, is like refreshing streams from the great fountain of charity, which cause every thing to rejoice in their course.

Now you who have been blessed by a kind Providence, and have barns and cellars full of the products of the good Lord's fertile earth, in kindness remember thy suffering brother or sister, whether in bonds, or in hunger, or nakedness; and let us never do as the priest and Levite did; but do as the good Samaritan did, who dismounted from his own beast, put the sufferer thereon, and conveyed him to a place of safety and comfort, where he supplied his wants.

It is very true that we have many of our dear brethren and sisters near by, who are poor, and who are suffering for the comforts that we are blessed with, and should by all means be relieved and converted by those who have their full stores of provision and money, for our dear Redeemer says, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these my brethen, ye have done it unto me," to whom he will say, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom."

Think, for one moment, of the thousands of our colored brethren and sisters at the South; and of the many white people there, who, in consequence of the dreadful war, so lately closed, are left in a destitute and suffering condition. There is a cold winter coming on, and thousands at the South must suffer greatly for want of food and clothing between now and spring; and you know the great Teacher tells us, that "whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets." St. Paul says (Gal. 5: 13), "By love serve one another;" and in the next verse, "For all the law is fulfilled in one word, even this; thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

A few more words about charity, which is the "bond of perfectness." It is said by one of the prophets (Neh. 9: 17), that "God is slow to anger, and of great kindness:" and Paul says (1 Cor. 13: 4), "Charity suffereth long and is kind." Of course, if charity, or God's love, is established in our hearts by the Holy Ghost, then we shall manifest great kindness towards our suffering brethren, wherever we can find them; and, as the good Lord said to Isaiah the prophet (Isaiah 54: 8), "But with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord, thy Redeemer."

Thus noble acts of kindness grow out of the great fountain of God's love to poor, sinful creatures; and, therefore, I sincerely think that any brother or sister, who has one spark of that noble principle of the love of God in the heart, will be just as sure to show that principle of love by acts of kindness, so far as they are able, just as sure as they would eat when they were hungry, or drink when they were thirsty. What sweet peace it brings to our minds to do acts of kindness to our dear and suffering brethren. For one, I shall do all I can.

Yours, waiting for the kingdom,

Vernon, Vt. B. PERHAM.

A COMPUTATION.

IS THE EARTH LARGE ENOUGH TO CONTAIN ALL THE REDEEMED UPON ITS SURFACE?

Some understand the doctrine taught in the Bible in relation to the final abode of the saints to be, as declared therein, that they will "inherit the earth"—this very identical one which we now inhabit, after its reconstruction and purification. Others think that the saints, even in their resurrected state, will live in a kingdom in heaven, away off beyond the stars, in a "land elysian, far, far away,"

"Beyond the bounds of time and space,"

as sung by poets, and believe this earth too small so contain all the righteous who ever lived upon it.

If this be so, we must be careful how we preach God's word, that "the meek shall inherit the earth." But let us be candid and examine the subject, and so determine if it is unreasonable that the earth is for the saint's eternal inheritance.

The population of the earth is estimated to be about one thousand millions, which is probably not far from correct. The chronological age of the world is calculated to be about six thousand years; and according to the latest chronologers, the world will arrive at its six-thousandth year before the year 1880.

We will presume that from the beginning of the creation of man, each generation has been thirty years in length. The world being about six thousand years old, we thus have two thousand generations since that time. This is a generous number to suppose; for it is plain that in the early age of the world a generation was much longer than thirty years, and that till within a few generations, they were much over thirty years. So in fact there have not been nigh so many as two thousand generations. But, for argument's sake, let it remain that number.

The first generation consisted of two persons, Adam and Eve; and the last, the present one, the two thousandth generation from the first, comprising a thousand millions, and we have an average of five hundred millions to a generation. This being the average number of each, and there being two thousand generations, we find the number of persons who have lived during the six thousands years past, to be one hundred billions, or, as some express it, one hundred thousand millions. As there have not been two thousand generations since the creation of man, and all who lived in the year of the Deluge perished, excepting eight persons; then not so large a number ever lived as we have calculated, but for argument's sake let it remain as stated at first.

Supposing a space of ground two feet square, or four square feet, be required for each person to stand upon, these one thousand million, if all alive at one time, would require four hundred thousand millions square feet, or a little over 14,348½ square miles of land to stand upon. This would be about twice the size of Massachusetts, less than half the size of Maine, less than one third of New York; so that New York state alone would hold more than three times as many as ever lived on the whole earth. The United States and Territories, with Mexico, contain about 2,564,000 square miles. Now each person requiring four square feet to stand upon, these United States and Territories, etc., contain surface enough for one hundred and seventy-seven times as many as ever lived; provided all the land was suitable for that purpose.

On an average, man requires twelve square feet to lie upon; or for his grave. And though many giants have lived and died, yet many infants have died, enough, no doubt, to balance the difference in size. If all the one thousand millions who ever lived on earth, were buried side by side, that would require 43,044 square miles of land. There are 46,220 square miles in New York state. If we allow 3176 square miles for the surface covered by water, we have an area of 43,044 square miles of land—just the space required for the graves of all earth's inhabitants, each one having twelve square feet for that purpose.

Thus it is seen that all who ever lived on earth—yes, more than all—could be buried in the state of New York; not one above the other either, as in some graveyards, where they lie two and three and more, in some places, deep—but each one alone, none above and none beneath.

It has gone the rounds in many public prints, and is believed by many persons, that every part of the earth has been dug over seven times to bury the dead,—that the dead are so numerous there are seven layers of human beings in the ground all over the whole world. This is a mere assumption, as will at once be seen by reflecting a moment, and considering how many have ever lived on earth, and how much space is necessary for each one's grave; and readily it will be seen that every mortal that ever drew the breath of life, now dead, together with every soul now alive, could all be buried one deep in the state of New York alone.

The surface of the globe contains two hundred millions square miles, nearly three-quarters of which is water, leaving about fifty millions square miles of land. At the present time the average number of persons to a square mile is twenty. Allowing twelve square feet for a grave, one square mile contains space enough to bury more than two millions of persons. There being fifty millions square miles of land on the globe, gives sufficient room to bury one hundred and sixteen trillions, and one hundred and sixty billions, more than a thousand times as many as ever were born; and if the earth were covered with persons standing erect, there would be room enough for three times as many as this countless number, above enumerated.

The United States contains over two millions square miles; and nearly sixty times as many as ever existed could be buried beneath its surface. Even if only half the United States be suitable for a graveyard, there would be ample room for the burial of thirty times as many persons as ever drew a breath since the creation of man, six thousands years ago.

Suppose all who ever lived, and who now are living, to be alive on the earth at once, there would be about two thousand persons to a square mile of 640 acres, or about three to an acre; giving a lot of land one hundred and eighteen feet square to each individual; large enough to build a convenient sized house and all other needed buildings.

The New Jerusalem city, of Rev. 21: 16, being 12,000 furlongs, or 1500 miles in measure—probably the whole distance around it; though some suppose it means 1500 miles square; but the city was four square, and its measure being 12,000 furlongs, we understand it to be the whole distance around, not a quarter of it. Allowing this to be the distance around, would make the city 375 miles square, and would contain 140,625 square miles, or ninety million acres. All who ever lived on earth could stand within the walls of this city, and each one would have a space of over thirty-nine square feet, over six and a quarter feet square. The city would cover an area of land nearly equal to the seven states of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania. It would cover land equal to the whole of Palestine, Syria, and all of Mesopotamia excepting the southeast part, below the ruins of old Babylon. Or, it would extend from the southwest corner of Palestine, northward, the whole eastern coast of the Mediterranean Sea, and beyond as far north as Tarsus, in Asia Minor; and from thence eastward about fifty miles beyond the ruins of ancient Nineveh, and from there southward, within fifty miles of old Babylon, and down to a point one hundred miles into the desert of Arabia, and from there westward to the southwest corner of Palestine.

If the city were fifteen hundred miles square, it would be six thousand miles around its walls, and would contain two million, two hundred and fifty thousand square miles. The countries of Turkey in Europe, and Asia, Persia, Arabia, Greece, and Italy, contain less surface than the supposed area of this city. The whole of the United States, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Gulf of Mexico to the British Possessions, would be about the right size, shaped into a square, for such a monstrous city, which would extend one seventeenth around the earth. And hence we conclude that it must be only three hundred and seventy-five miles square, and this size, it will be seen, is of sufficient magnitude to contain all who ever lived on earth.

And now, having shown how small a space would be needed to contain all mankind, the question may arise, Can enough food be procured from the earth to sustain all its occupants, provided they need it? The curse being removed from the earth, the land will yield its increase, and grapes may grow in clusters as large as a man can lift, as they did in Canaan, when Caleb and Joshua went to spy; and all vegetation would be invigorated proportionately, and sufficient food would be obtained from each lot of land of seven rods square, at only one crop a year, to feed half a dozen persons, even allowing each one to eat a ton of food per year. Without going into details, we think it will be admitted that no difficulty will ever be experienced in this respect.

From what we have above shown, it will be seen that the earth, even a small portion of it,—even one of these (once) United States, viz., New York,—contains room enough for, not only every soul that breathed the breath of life on earth, and all who now inhabit it, from every nation under the sun, to stand upon comfortably, but ample space to bury every mortal who ever existed, and room to spare.

As the word of God declares that the "meek shall inherit the earth," the promise will be fulfilled, literally, we believe. S. D. B.

MAN.

If man cometh by the uniform working of natural law, why do we not see that same law working? It would be a miracle to see the working of common law change, as much so as it would to see man formed without it. Gen. 2: 7.—"God created man in his own image."

Observation and natural experience teach that man came by an intelligent agent. If at first a child, then the law of helplessness governs it. Could natural law teach it to eat and drink? Do we see external law teaching a child to articulate sounds? It is proven by a deaf and dumb person, that a child not hearing articulations could never make them. Dumbness being the consequence of not hearing.

Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God. Rom. 11: 17. The conclusion is of necessity, reasoning from effect to cause, that God made man, and the faculty of speech is a gift in his creation. Adam told his children of his condition, and by the law of memory (which is easier resorted to, and better kept than any written code), the most remote of all nations, and the heathen in particular, have got the name and the belief of God.

Adam remembered the first conversation he had with his Father, and from him as our common father, speech is derived.

THE WORK FOR TO-DAY.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Eccl. 9: 10.

This morning I saw Bro. Neal, of Connecticut. He told me Bro. H. L. Bradley was dead. I felt shocked. I felt like dying too. He and I traveled together in '42 and '43, endeavoring to wake up the church and world in reference to the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior. Our hearts blended together. I never felt it more so with any in all my labors. I think we visited every town on the west side of the Connecticut river, from Hartford to Old Saybrook, and from Saybrook to New Haven, and many other towns in the interior of Connecticut. When I was in Connecticut last spring we talked of going over the old ground again, and see if we could wake up an interest along the seashore of Connecticut; but it is too late now.

As I heard of his death this morning, the past seems to come before me, and our talk of what we would do in the future. The text named came forcibly to my mind,—"Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do, do it." There is much to be done. The church professing to be waiting for the Lord have become worldly, and in many instances sensual, and need some one to stir them up to a sense of what they once were and what they ought to be. If the Advent church are not raised up to a higher state of piety and philanthropy, God will take their crown from them and give it to some other people. He will have a people to bear this truth to the world,—Behold, the Lord cometh!

The popular churches are conformed to the world, but here and there is a spot where the christian character is visible. God has some among them whose hearts are in harmony with Christ; but not but few.

The world is fast going into infidelity; in fact, every thing is going on to ruin as fast as sin and Satan can drive it. Here we stand, like Lot in Sodom. Disease rushing upon us, sweeping off the people at an alarming rate. The judgment just upon us. War breeding the world over. The world and church all in a hurry to get rich. Pride, fashion, luxury, bring a host of cares upon the heads of families. Fretting and frowning among the children, if they cannot appear as well as others, especially as well as the minister's family.

What is done for the world, north and south, must be done soon. God will have his house filled, and he will have it done by men and means; and if we do not act our part, some others will do it, and receive the reward. God says, "Son, work in my vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will pay thee." He will be up to his word. What is done for ourselves must be done soon, or left undone forever. Then all is lost; this world, and that to come. We had better judge ourselves now.

If you see any thing you can do for God, the church, the world, or yourselves, do it. Do it now. To-morrow may be too late. If any thing is to be done for God and the souls of men, you need not ask first, what shall I gain or lose? God will see you paid to your full satisfaction.

Brethren, let us awake to duty and truth; seek others' good, and the glory of God; have our wills submissive to God's will, that we at last may have the happiness to hear the Judge say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter the joy of your Lord." This is the prayer of MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Rutland, Vt.

P. S. I meant to say a few words about Low Hampton. This is the place where Bro. Miller lived and died, where a church was raised by him and others. I saw in print some weeks ago, a statement in reference to that church, which I feel I ought to correct. The writer said he passed through L. H., found that by deaths, removals and heresy, the church was so reduced that they had no regular preaching. I would just say, I preached for them half of the time from April '63 to April '64. Since that time they have had preaching more than half the time, and during the last summer they had a very interesting Sunday school. I preached there the first Sunday in this month, to a full and attentive congregation. I expect to preach there half the time until next spring. Brethren, pray for us at L. H., that the light may be kept burning there until Jesus comes. For it I will always pray. M. B.

CONVERSION OF SLAVES.

The following extract from the "Mission Journal" of Bro. Childs, at Nashville, Tenn., affords some interesting facts in connection with the operation of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of the poor slaves at the South.

"This people are peculiar for a thorough conversion. No light work will answer, and usually they demand that the sealing work be repeated. Never did I realize the words of Joel 2: 28, 'Your old men shall dream dreams; your young men shall see visions,' until I labored with this people. None are converted without visions; not one is satisfied short of hearing a voice. They expect it and receive it, and at the relation of their experience there is a striking correspondence with the age of revelation. The voice first declares itself as the 'First and the Last,' and then either bids them seek on, or else they feel a hand that touches them. Sometimes it strikes them on the head, in some cases changes their hands, feet and body to pure gold or light, and then the voice sings to them, and they always remember the tune in which the song was sung. Usually it is a singing kind of expression, using various portions of Scripture. As the imagination is varied, so are the pictures that are drawn. At first I suspected that this was but fancy work, but by carefully watching and weighing their experience, I now conclude that as the mind of this people demands pictures, so, as in former days when letters were unknown and the Bible beyond the reach of the ordinary mind, the Holy Spirit reveals itself through these workings of the mind, and thus shows that God's grace is equal to every condition of man, and scorns no channel through which it can flow to the soul. Before I left home, I was strongly impressed with the independent existence of the Holy Ghost, and that in the absence of the Word, it could find and convert the sinner's heart, and that the Bible was the result of the Holy Spirit, and not the Spirit the result of the Word."

HABITS.—Habits are more easily formed than altered. It takes more time to abridge one book than it does to write half a dozen. The same remark will apply to letters. The only reason people write a three-paged epistle is because they have not time to condense it into one. It may seem like a paradox, still it's a fact, that almost every editor finds it easier to write a half column article than he does to get up one that only contains two or three paragraphs.

The World's Crisis and Second Advent Messenger.

Boston, Tuesday, Oct. 31, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

NAMES.

After all that has been said against the practice, we still receive communications for the Crisis without any names signed to them. Sometimes the articles are excellent; but the writers must not expect to see them published, if they withhold their names. Please remember this. No one should be ashamed to be introduced to their christian brothers and sisters who read their interesting epistles. They would feel insulted should we introduce them to a company of their friends as "Mrs. A. B.," or "Mr. C. D.;" besides those to whom they were presented would have reason to wonder why names were not given. It is considered a bad sign, when a man assumes a fictitious name in society; why should it be done when he writes for his friends to read? Do not be ashamed of your names.

"REIGN OF TERROR."

The daily periodicals talk about a "reign of terror" as about to commence, in consequence of the daring deeds of crime that are being committed daily in our large cities and villages. Good men may well stand appalled at the alarming state of things in the world. Instead of any abatement, the tide of iniquity is rapidly rising on every side. Virtue has no safety when walking alone in the streets after dark. Justice is thrown down by the mob, and but few dare stand up in its defense, lest they receive a pelting from the lawless crowd, who regard neither man nor God. None can now reasonably dispute that we have come to the perils of "the last days," as foretold by the apostle Paul in 2 Tim. 3: 1–5; but worse things are at hand. Let us keep on "the whole armor of God," that we "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

"THE DAY AND THE HOUR."

The above heading is the title of a new work, by Capt. W. A. Baker, Royal Bombay Engineers. It is published in London, by William Macintosh, 24 Paternoster Row.

When speaking on the saying of our Lord, —"Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only," the author very properly says, the present tense is used, and that we have no right to substitute "shall ever know" for "knoweth." Capt. Baker appears to be very much awake to the subject of the immediate second coming of Christ. Indeed, it is remarkable to see the interest that is being felt on this all important subject. Many of the most devoted and intelligent men and women in the various churches, on both continents, are now well satisfied that our Savior will very soon appear, and are proclaiming it to others. The Spirit of the Lord appears to be impressing the humble christians that the end of the present dispensation is at hand.

Capt. Baker has come to the conclusion that the 6,000 years from creation will close in the last part of the year 1874. He speaks with much confidence on the subject. The following is the table of contents of his work: "The study of prophecy a duty; On unbelief; The Destiny of Great Britain; Who is Michael? Who is the Prince of the Covenant? Who is Antichrist? The Day and the hour; The Signs of the Times; On Numbers—the past; the Future, to the appearance of Antichrist; the Future—to the appearance of Christ; the Future—the world to come; Conclusion."

This work of Capt. Baker's is producing some stir among those who have been indifferent on the subject of the Lord's coming. There appears to be quite a general expectation among all the students of prophecy, that the day of the Lord is really at hand; and many are speaking out boldly on the subject. Dr. Seiss, in Philadelphia, Editor of the Prophetic Times, an ably conducted monthly, devoted to the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, is preaching powerful sermons to large and intelligent audiences, on the subject of the speedy coming of Christ. Those who hear him say he seems to be almost inspired when he speaks on the subject of the second advent of the Messiah. This great truth is taking strong hold of the lovers of Christ. There seems to be a certainty about the matter, never felt before, and the evidence is continually increasing in clearness and strength.

While in Philadelphia, we called on an Episcopal minister, who thinks the Lord will come next year. He has presented a memorial to the great meeting of the Episcopalian bishops and clergy now in session (Oct. 25th) in Philadelphia, entreating them, in the most respectful manner, to consider the subject of the second coming of Christ, and express their opinion as to the evidence of its near approach; but they passed the subject in silence, and voted that he have leave to withdraw his memorial. It cannot be expected that popular ecclesiastical bodies will embrace the light on this subject, and proclaim it to the world. One is not prepared to receive the whole truth till he renounces the world with all its pomp and pride, and consents to become "of no reputation," like our blessed Savior. But few are willing to do this. The cross is so heavy, they are unwilling to bear it. They wish to enjoy the honors of the world, and drink of its pleasure cup with worldly friends; but they can never stand free in Christ so long as they do it; neither can they, in that state, see the evidences that are now beaming upon the humble followers of the Lamb, that show them that the night of sorrow will soon close.

The hour in which we are living is one of great peril, and the dangers are daily increasing. Dear reader, are you ready for the coming of the Son of man? Is your heart pure? Is the old man crucified with the affections and lusts? Remember, without holiness, we have no promise of salvation.

NAPOLEONISM.

"Napoleonism" is but another name for Spiritualism. It is well known that Napoleon III. has been a Spiritualist for some years, and has been consulting Mr. Home, who is said to be the most noted medium in the world. So far as we can learn the principles of Napoleon, we find them harmonizing, in the main, with those of the Spiritualists every where. We look upon him as Satan's prime minister on our planet, practically co-operating with the designs of the great deceiver in leading all nations away from the Lord and his worship, to a system of "humanitarianism," or man-worship. We think the true character of Napoleon will soon be better known. Already it is beginning to be developed, but not seen, or noticed, except by the student of prophecy, who is closely watching the signs of the times. He may well be called "a man of wonder," for such he truly is. He has no equals, or rivals.

It is a point of interest to know his purposes and principles; the former he keeps concealed, but some of the latter are made known to the world; such as may tend to make him popular; while the deep infidel and atheistical ones are yet hid with his purposes, to be expressed when the favored opportunity arrives to throw off the mask.

The following are some that have been expressed. We introduce them in order to point out the similarity between them and those uttered by the Spiritualists. They are from an interesting work entitled, "The Speaking Image; or Napoleonism Prophetically Unveiled," published in London.

When speaking of "the policy of the Emperor . . . as regards Europe generally," the author says:—It "does not indicate any desire for actual conquest; he wishes, doubtless, to subjugate Europe, and to exercise a paramount influence over the people; but the ascendancy which he covets is moral." It is evident he wishes to unite both the temporal and spiritual supremacy in his own person. A pamphlet has lately appeared in France, written by M. Cayla, one of his Majesty's special friends. It is well known that when Napoleon wishes to adopt some new measure, that might receive opposition, instead of speaking out openly himself, he gets some friend of his to write the book, or publish one written by himself, in which is set forth the plan he wishes to execute; and after he has thus made the people somewhat familiar with the object proposed, and seen how it affects the public mind, he steps forward, and boldly executes the work. In the pamphlet by M. Cayla, it is indicated "that the Emperor should sever the connection between the Pope and the French Catholic church," and become himself the "head"; for as he has "been known as 'the Savior of society,' the Emperor might claim the title of 'the Savior of religion.'" The claim corresponds with the position of Spiritualists.

When Napoleon was making a journey in the south of France, he "was compared to Charlemagne, to St. Louis, and the Messiah." During the war in Italy, the Italians formed a parody on the Apostle's Creed, and addressed Napoleon I. as the "almighty maker of the first empire of the kingdom of Italy," and Napoleon III. as "our omnipotent Savior."

In the coinage made for the first empire, under Napoleon I., on one side might be seen "the emblems of liberty, and the inscription 'Republique Francaise,'—[French Republic], whilst on the reverse occurs the head of Napoleon Buonaparte, with the words, 'Napoleon 1 re. Empereur,'"—[Napoleon first Emperor." Here we have the strange idea of a republic and an empire united in one system of government. It should be remembered that this is just what the Spiritualists propose to do, as directed by the spirits. "Napoleonism," alias Spiritualism, or more properly Demonism, is spreading most rapidly in all parts of the world, and the time is at hand, beyond all doubt, for the demons to take the control of political and religious matters as they now exist in their very corrupt state. The hour has arrived when all true christians should come out and be separate, and prepare to meet their Bridegroom King, who is about to appear in all his glory.

"Napoleonism," like Spiritualism, is called a "NEW RELIGION." An English writer,—the author of "The Speaking Image," says:—"This new religion, as it may be called, is known in England under the title of Liberalism, and on the Continent as Napoleonism."

The creed of this new religion is expressed as follows:—"Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity." This is also the creed of the Spiritualists. It is stated that Napoleonism tolerates "all religions," "whether true or false, but none are allowed to influence, or to thwart, the aims of the liberal faith." The same is true of Spiritualism. Says the author of "The Speaking Image":—"The pretensions of the new religion are unbounded; the nations of the earth are to be regenerated by its influence, for 'it is the only civilizing agency in Europe.' It is to unite the people in a bond of common love and interest, and to bring about 'peace and plenty, indefinite progress, and a millennium.' The god of this new faith is termed by its apostles the crowned representative of the French Revolution, the Savior of society in France; and as our Omnipotent Savior and Temporary Providence in Italy. Indeed, the man who receives these idolatrous flatteries, and proposes them to his soul, regards his own dynasty as the Messiah of the new principles."

The writer then very properly remarks:—"Is not Satan's last counterfeit, in all its solemn proportions, now before us? Where is christianity, the religion of the Bible, if not almost buried beneath the seductive illusions of the Liberal Faith? . . . Where, we ask, but lost amid the delusions of an earthly and mock millennium? . . . In a word, Louis Napoleon promises to Europe that which christianity and the righteous sceptre of Jesus alone can impart. Is he, then, the Antichrist?"

Spiritualism makes the same promises as Napoleonism; and it is evident that the principles have a common origin, and that Satan is the father of the whole.

A RISING CLOUD.

The present aspect of England and America looks rather stormy. It will be recollected that the English allowed the pirate ship Alabama to sail from her port for the purpose of destroying the shipping of the Union navy. The United States claim damages at the hands of the English government for what the Alabama was allowed to do. A correspondence has been going on between Earl Russell and Charles F. Adams, the American Minister at the court of London, in relation to the matter. The British government absolutely refuses to pay any damages for the destructive works of the Alabama. Mr. Adams thinks the United States will not agree to the terms of Earl Russell, and thus the matter stands. We wait for the issue.

Says the Philadelphia Inquirer:—

"The comments of the English papers on this matter, so far as they are made known to us, are somewhat apprehensive. The London Star proceeds to point out the probability of a rupture, if the British Government continues to maintain its position, refusing to submit to arbitration. Undoubtedly the situation is very delicate. If Earl Russell thinks that the American people will abandon their claims for compensation because he says that none will be made, he is very much mistaken. Every sentiment of justice to ourselves demands that we shall insist upon reparation."

SUNDAYS AT NIAGARA.

A traveler stopping at Niagara thus writes of the state of religion at that place as exhibited by the traveling public, which is supposed to be composed of our first class citizens:—

"It is a lamentable fact that christianity is not popular at Niagara Falls. The permanent population is large, and the number of visitors through the summer is very great, but notwithstanding it is a rare sight to see any of the three small churches here well filled on the Sabbath. On the contrary, the Sabbath is very little regarded here. The myriads of lager-beer and liquoring saloons which exist, so profitably to their proprietors, are kept open on Sunday the same as any other day, and so are curiosity shops, fancy goods establishments, and some of the provision markets and grocery stores. It is probably a "time-honored custom" at Niagara, as the people and authorities seem to pay little if any attention to such a wicked and unnecessary desecration of the Lord's day.

It is a fact which all who have visited the Falls have noticed, that a multitude of the hackmen here are the meanest and most unprincipled beings that ever disgraced a civilized community. You can hire them to perform extraordinary service for a mere trifle, but when you come to pay the bill, it is doubly multiplied. If you remonstrate or refuse to pay it, as you would seem to have a right to do, they knock you down and rob you. If the police interfere, the force is overpowered by the hackmen in superior numbers, and you thus lose your money and get half killed without any redress whatever. In one case of this kind, a few days since, quite a serious riot was threatened, and would probably have occurred, had not the colored waiters in the hotels come to the rescue of the police and assisted them in overpowering the army of hackmen."

Of course, where christianity dies out, abounding iniquity will come in. Jesus' disciples are called "the light of the world,"—"the salt of the earth;" but when that light is put under a bushel, and they cease to exert a saving influence upon community, corruption deep must be expected to follow, as is the case at the present time. How rapidly the tide of iniquity is rising, and with it comes a general spread of infidel principles, calculated to destroy all confidence in the Bible.

BOSTON MORALS.

Boston is said to be the most moral city of its size, in the world; and that in the millennium it will be about as it is in Boston. The following, from a Boston paper, will give some idea of the morals of Boston, which are continually growing worse:—

"Liquor is sold by the glass in one hundred and thirty two places on North street, in this city. One block which is owned by a rich fashionable Boston lady, contains five liquor shops, five brothels and a large dance hall."

Such would be a strange millennium. But we do not find in the Bible any promise of a better state of things than we now see before the second personal coming of Christ. Wickedness has increased in Boston during the last ten years; but while time lasts, we may expect to see the morals continue to grow worse till Jesus comes to end earth's long, dreary night of sin and sorrow, by setting up his glorious kingdom.

THE PROPHETIC TIMES.

"The Prophetic Times," edited by Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, and other distinguished ministers in different denominations, is a valuable monthly, that should be read by all Bible students. Price only $1.00. Address "Prophetic Times," P. O. Box 2245, Philadelphia, Pa.

AMER. ADVENT MISSION SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Executive Board was held at their office, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Oct. 17th, at 3 P. M. Elder Himes in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Eld. Cunningham, and the minutes of previous meetings were read and approved. After which some unfinished business was taken up,—the election of Chairman and Secretary; whereupon Elder Joshua V. Himes was chosen permanent Chairman of the Board, and William B. Herron Recording and Corresponding Secretary.

The proceedings of organization with the Secretary's Address was announced to be ready for press, and five thousand copies were ordered to be printed, for sale and free distribution among the friends of the mission work.

Elder Himes expressed his intention to proceed South about the middle of November; and the Treasurer was authorized to pay into his hands the sum of $300 to defray the expenses of establishing a mission among the freedmen; and Eld. H. K. Flagg was appointed to accompany him as an assistant in the work.

Letters were read from brethren and sisters desiring to go as teachers to the freedmen; all of which were referred to the Committee on Schools and Missions.

Several manuscripts for freedmen's tracts were laid before the Board, and referred to the Committee on Publications.

The importance of having a uniformity of text books for the freedmen's schools was considered; and a series of Reading Books, published by the American Tract Society (Boston), expressly for the freedmen, were offered for examination, and referred to the Committee on Publications.

A letter was read from Sr. Anna E. Smith, desiring to be recognized as a teacher among the colored people in New York and vicinity, and a letter of recommendation was ordered to be given to her.

A letter was read from a missionary in the South, containing some information and suggestions as to the mission work, teachers, etc. (an extract from which will be found in another column).

A letter from M. B. Czechowski, now in Switzerland, was read, asking for help to meet his present necessities; and the sum of $100 was ordered to be sent to him for that purpose.

A letter was read from an evangelist in Massachusetts, suggesting the appointment of Home Missionaries to travel and labor in destitute regions in the North. This work was contemplated in the organization of the Society, and provided for in its Constitution; but it was thought expedient to defer action in that direction, until there should be funds enough in the treasury to sustain such missionaries in the work. Home missionaries are needed, and they will be appointed just as soon as the benevolent shall furnish the means.

Adjourned to the call of the Secretary.

WILLIAM B. HERRON, Secretary.

FINANCIAL REPORT
Of Wilbraham Campmeeting, 1865.

EXPENDITURES.

Paid for lumber, straw, fuel, drawing water, storing crockery, etc.	$207.46
" For new crockery, stoves, tin ware, and various articles for the table and cooking department	225.79
" Insurance on campmeeting property, advertising, postage, printing, etc.	19.50
Loss by counterfeit bank bills and postal currency taken at the various stands	39.85
" For services rendered by various persons in the boarding department at the several stands, and for work in refitting campground, etc.	475.63
" For groceries, provisions, and the various articles used and sold at the boarding house and refreshment stands	2120.51
Total	$3088.74

RECEIPTS.

Balance in Treasurer's hands from last year's receipts	$32.18
Cash received on pledges made at campmeeting of 1864	25.00
Collections	190.09
Sale of straw	121.27
Rent of barber's shop	6.00
Amount received for board, and sales at the boarding house, oyster, cake and fruit stands, and from all other sources not included in the above receipts	2658.77
Total	$3033.31
Excess of expenditures over receipts	$55.43

From the above it will be seen that our receipts, although larger than in any one year before, are less than our expenses by more than fifty dollars. It was hoped that the ordinary collections taken would be sufficient to pay the expense of repairing and erecting the stands, re-seating the ground, putting it in order, and taking care of the same; while the profits on sales made at the various refreshment stands would meet the outlay incurred in making additions to the table and cooking departments, also the expense of the free boarders, and any deficit that might arise in the boarding department; but the unusually large additions, as above mentioned, the large number of free boarders, and the low price charged for board combined, were more than sufficient to absorb all profits on sales made. We trust that in the future, should the Lord permit us to meet again, that our receipts will not fall so far short of meeting our expenses as this year.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Association, held August 23d, a committee was appointed to nominate and recommend a campmeeting committee of five. At a meeting of the brethren and sisters held at the preacher's stand, Aug. 26th, the nominating committee reported the names of the former campmeeting committee, which report was accepted, and the same committee re-chosen. Afterward, at the suggestion of the campmeeting committee, that, in consequence of the great amount of work devolving upon them, two brethren be added to their number, making the committee to consist of seven, two names were added, and accepted by the campmeeting, so that the committee for 1866 stands as follows:—

S. G. MATHEWSON,
MILES GRANT,
GEO. T. ADAMS,
HIRAM MUNGER,
JAMES HEMENWAY,
R. E. LADD,
D. MATHEWSON.

QUALIFICATIONS OF TEACHERS.

We addressed a letter recently to a missionary in the South, asking for some information in regard to mission fields there, and also inviting such suggestions and advice as he might be able to give from his experience in regard to the mission work; and, from his reply, we make the following extract, showing what kind of teachers are needed for this great field of Christian labor:—

"BRO. HERRON:—I devote my first moments to you; for, I assure you, my interest in the great missionary work you are, with others, carrying forward, impels me to address you and reply to your letter of Sept. 25th as early as possible. How great my interest in your Society is, I can hardly express. * * *

About teachers and missionaries. Let me say, you want the very first and best class of teachers. You want men and women who have both bodies and minds. Weakly bodies and little minds don't do much here. Some have an idea that almost any thing will do to come down here and teach the negro. It is a great mistake. The very best talent and the best qualifications are required. Do not send, I beg of you, any who do not fully understand their mother tongue. An interested heart is essential, but a well stored head and a good constitution are just as necessary. I fear you will not get the teachers you ought to have. Teachers must be such as command respect, or much will be lost. A teacher here should be qualified for almost any position, for he will have to shape himself or herself into many places, in order to carry out the object of the mission.

You want only one man at each station, and he should be an energetic, whole man, qualified to teach, preach, and direct, in the best manner. He should be competent to choose his teachers, or, at least, to guide them. He must have some business talent, and know how to deal with men in general. The qualifications of female teachers are very essential. They should be women of good judgment, with characters established, and above reproach. They should be capable of leading in social worship, and directing the freed women in every thing in which they need instructing. Never did a person need all the talent which God gives more than in this work."

If there are any teachers of experience who can meet the above requirements, and who feel that God wants them to go, we shall be glad to hear from them soon. W. B. H.

For the World's Crisis.

DORCAS MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A few more words about the Dorcas Mission Sunday School are necessary at this time. We have an abundance of primers and spelling-books, having on hand one hundred of them. We are also well supplied with gift-cards, and little tracts, and singing-books.

The school now numbers one hundred and fifty boys and girls, whose ages range from three to fifteen years. Quite a large number are in want of clothing to cover them from the cold. The following articles of cast off clothing are much needed at this time: caps, coats, jackets, pants, shirts, underclothing, socks, boots, and shoes, for the boys; bonnets, shawl, cloaks, dresses, aprons, furs, hoods, stockings, under-clothing, boots, rubbers, mittens, gloves, and handkerchiefs for the girls. Boys and girls are shivering with the cold, several are sick with fever and chills. We want clothing, cast-off clothing, for these poor bare-footed and half-naked children. Shall we have it? I believe we shall.

Last winter the church at Twenty-fourth street sent us a large box and a barrel full, and the church in Portsmouth, N. H., sent us three barrels full, and we were enabled to clothe about one hundred and seventy-five men, women and children. It would have done any child of God good to have seen the little white teeth and dancing eyes of the boys and girls as we gave them clothing, that by them was as gladly received as new suits by boys and girls whose parents are in better circumstances. The heaviest barrel from Portsmouth weighed seventy-five pounds, and the entire express bill was but three dollars from there to my home in Philadelphia, which bill, with others, the Lord enabled me to pay through the liberality of the churches in Portsmouth, New York and Philadelphia.

Any church among us who may feel it to be a duty to send us a lot of cast-off garments, had better send us a barrel, or a half-barrel, full, as such weigh less than boxes. Direct them to MRS. M. HELDINSON, S. W., Cor. of Rye and Marion Sts., Philadelphia, Penn. Who will send us such barrels and half-barrels of substantial God bless yous? "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard."—Prov. 21: 13.

Yours in the highways and hedges,

A HYMN AND TUNE BOOK.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held Oct. 19th at their office, 167 Hanover St., Boston, the subject of the new Hymn Book, now for some time in preparation, was discussed, and all action with reference thereto, at Wilbraham Campmeeting in August last, was rescinded. In consideration of the general demand for a book containing tunes with the hymns, it was voted to proceed at once to publish a Hymn and Tune Book, not to exceed one thousand hymns, in the form of the "Christian Lyre," and to be called—"The Jubilee Harp." The hymns, as selected and arranged by Elder Brewer, were accepted, and will be used, as far as practicable, in the new book. The plates of the "Christian Lyre" were purchased of Elder Himes, and the best and most acceptable hymns and music therein will be embodied in the "Harp." The Western Association were invited to appoint two members of their Board to co-operate with us in its preparation; and the Business Agent, in conjunction with the Editorial Committee, was empowered to employ such additional help as may be needed to complete the work in a superior manner, and without delay. Choice hymns and tunes may still be sent in, addressed to the Advent Christian Publication Society, Boston, Mass. WM. B. HERRON, Sec'y.

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say to the friends East and West that I have transferred the Christian Lyre to the Christian Publication Society, with a desire for union in the publication and support of one book. The two Associations East and West are united in this movement. And now let all the people give it their support.

I have reason to believe that the best hymns and tunes of the Lyre, with other good hymns and tunes, will be put into the new book, by which it will be made acceptable to all.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.—No. 2.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—According to my expectation when I wrote my last, we left La Tour, Italy, the 5th inst. We held meetings several evenings in succession with the little church of St. Jean before leaving them. They flocked down the mountain the evening before we left, bringing their little tokens of affection and good will. We preached and administered the Lord's Supper. Our parting with them was very affecting. Many tears were shed, and some wept aloud as we exchanged the sad, temporary farewell. We went by way of Turin to Susa by cars. We were nine persons, including my brother and Bro. Jean Geymet, and could ill afford to pay the twenty francs per person, required to pass Mont Cenis by Diligence; so on arriving at seven o'clock, evening, we took each what baggage we could carry and walked three hours before stopping for the night. Early the next morning we continued our walk, passing over the mountain and descending to the village of Lansingburg, which we reached at six o'clock in the evening, very weary, for we were quite heavily laden, and were very glad that our day's labor was ended. But the earnest prayer ascended to God, from our heart, that we might ere long return, weighed down more heavily still with Advent publications for the further and more vigorous prosecution of the work of God, already commenced in Italy.

We hired a Diligence at Lansingburg the same evening for twenty-two francs, and reached St. Michel, at the foot of the mountain, at two o'clock the next morning. We took cars again at five o'clock, and at eight o'clock evening were at Yverdun, a pleasant little city at the southwestern extremity of Lake Neuchatel, passing on our way through Chambery, Geneva, and Lausanne. The next morning we found comfortable apartments for twelve francs per month, some two miles distant, on the Lake shore in this little village of Grandson, and felt that the Lord himself had provided for us. We are without furniture, having none to bring from Italy, never having been able to buy it, nor are we now, and we are very glad to repose our weary bodies at night on straw, remembering our Divine Master, who had "not where to lay his head."

Dear brethren and sisters, please to remember the great loss there has been on your donations by exchange, and also bear in mind that one quarter that we have received had to be expended for postage, as our European correspondence is necessarily quite extensive, and will be more so in future; and you will not, I trust, accuse me of extravagance.

I will now give you more fully than I have done the reasons for our removal from Italy to Switzerland, as it may be a matter of much surprise to my brethren and sisters in the United States. The sound of the "Italian Mission" has gone abroad through Italy, and of course the heart-searching doctrines we preach meet much opposition. Protestants as well as Catholics are very bigoted, and the christianity of the majority is merely nominal. In regard to national characteristics, the Italian people are not noted for kindness and hospitality to strangers; their friendship is not reliable as that of many nations.

Before establishing a Mission house and issuing publications, as we must do with God's help, we felt it our duty to look over the ground of location very carefully. We did so, and became fully satisfied that there would

THE WORK FOR TO-DAY.

"Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might."—Eccl. 9: 10.

This morning I saw Bro. Neal, of Connecticut. He told me Bro. H. L. Bradley was dead. I felt shocked. I felt like dying too. He and I traveled together in '42 and '43, endeavoring to wake up the church and world in reference to the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior. Our hearts blended together. I never felt it more so with any in all my labors. I think we visited every town on the west side of the Connecticut river, from Hartford to Old Saybrook, and from Saybrook to New Haven, and many other towns in the interior of Connecticut. When I was in Connecticut last spring we talked of going over the old ground again, and see if we could wake up an interest along the seashore of Connecticut; but it is too late now.

As I heard of his death this morning, the past seems to come before me, and our talk of what we would do in the future. The text named came forcibly to my mind.—"Whatsoever thine hand findeth to do, do it." There is much to be done. The church professing to be waiting for the Lord have become worldly, and in many instances sensual, and need some one to stir them up to a sense of what they once were and what they ought to be. If the Advent church are not raised up to a higher state of piety and philanthropy, God will take their crown from them and give it to some other people. He will have a people to bear this truth to the world,—Behold, the Lord cometh!

The popular churches are conformed to the world, but here and there is a spot where the christian character is visible. God has some among them whose hearts are in harmony with Christ; but not but few.

The world is fast going into infidelity; in fact, every thing is going on to ruin as fast as sin and Satan can drive it. Here we stand, like Lot in Sodom. Disease rushing upon us, sweeping off the people at an alarming rate. The judgment just upon us. War breeding the world over. The world and church all in a hurry to get rich. Pride, fashion, luxury, bring a host of cares upon the heads of families. Fretting and frowning among the children, if they cannot appear as well as others, especially as well as the minister's family.

What is done for the world, north and south, must be done soon. God will have his house filled, and he will have it done by men and means; and if we do not act our part, some others will do it, and receive the reward. God says, "Son, work in my vineyard, and whatsoever is right I will pay thee." He will be up to his word. What is done for ourselves must be done soon, or left undone forever. Then all is lost; this world, and that to come. We had better judge ourselves now.

If you see any thing you can do for God, the church, the world, or yourselves, do it. Do it now. To-morrow may be too late. If any thing is to be done for God and the souls of men, you need not ask first, what shall I gain or lose? God will see you paid to your full satisfaction.

Brethren, let us awake to duty and truth; seek others' good, and the glory of God; have our wills submissive to God's will, that we at last may have the happiness to hear the Judge say to us, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter the joy of your Lord." This is the prayer of MATTHEW BATCHELOR.

Rutland, Vt.

P. S. I meant to say a few words about Low Hampton. This is the place where Bro. Miller lived and died, where a church was raised by him and others. I saw in print some weeks ago, a statement in reference to that church, which I feel I ought to correct. The writer said he passed through L. H., found that by deaths, removals and heresy, the church was so reduced that they had no regular preaching. I would just say, I preached for them half of the time from April '63 to April '64. Since that time they have had preaching more than half the time, and during the last summer they had a very interesting Sunday school. I preached there the first Sunday in this month, to a full and attentive congregation. I expect to preach there half the time until next spring. Brethren, pray for us at L. H., that the light may be kept burning there until Jesus comes. For it I will always pray. M. B.

CONVERSION OF SLAVES.

The following extract from the "Mission Journal" of Bro. Childs, at Nashville, Tenn., affords some interesting facts in connection with the operation of the Holy Spirit upon the minds of the poor slaves at the South.

"This people are peculiar for a thorough conversion. No light work will answer, and usually they demand that the sealing work be repeated. Never did I realize the words of Joel 2: 28, 'Your old men shall dream dreams; your young men shall see visions,' until I labored with this people. None are converted without visions; not one is satisfied short of hearing a voice. They expect it and receive it, and at the relation of their experience there is a striking correspondence with the age of revelation. The voice first declares itself as the 'First and the Last,' and then either bids them seek on, or else they feel a hand that touches them. Sometimes it strikes them on the head, in some cases changes their hands, feet and body to pure gold or light, and then the voice sings to them, and they always remember the tune in which the song was sung. Usually it is a singing kind of expression, using various portions of Scripture. As the imagination is varied, so are the pictures that are drawn. At first I suspected that this was but fancy work, but by carefully watching and weighing their experience, I now conclude that as the mind of this people demands pictures, so, as in former days when letters were unknown and the Bible beyond the reach of the ordinary mind, the Holy Spirit reveals itself through these workings of the mind, and thus shows that God's grace is equal to every condition of man, and scorns no channel through which it can flow to the soul. Before I left home, I was strongly impressed with the independent existence of the Holy Ghost, and that in the absence of the Word, it could find and convert the sinner's heart, and that the Bible was the result of the Holy Spirit, and not the Spirit the result of the Word."

HABITS.—Habits are more easily formed than altered. It takes more time to abridge one book than it does to write half a dozen. The same remark will apply to letters. The only reason people write a three-paged epistle is because they have not time to condense it into one. It may seem like a paradox, still it's a fact, that almost every editor finds it easier to write a half column article than he does to get up one that only contains two or three paragraphs.

The World's Crisis and Second Advent Messenger.

Boston, Tuesday, Oct. 31, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3.00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

NAMES.

After all that has been said against the practice, we still receive communications for the Crisis without any names signed to them. Sometimes the articles are excellent; but the writers must not expect to see them published, if they withhold their names. Please remember this. No one should be ashamed to be introduced to their christian brothers and sisters who read their interesting epistles. They would feel insulted should we introduce them to a company of their friends as "Mrs. A. B.," or "Mr. C. D.;" besides those to whom they were presented would have reason to wonder why names were not given. It is considered a bad sign, when a man assumes a fictitious name in society; why should it be done when he writes for his friends to read? Do not be ashamed of your names.

"REIGN OF TERROR."

The daily periodicals talk about a "reign of terror" as about to commence, in consequence of the daring deeds of crime that are being committed daily in our large cities and villages. Good men may well stand appalled at the alarming state of things in the world. Instead of any abatement, the tide of iniquity is rapidly rising on every side. Virtue has no safety when walking alone in the streets after dark. Justice is thrown down by the mob, and but few dare stand up in its defense, lest they receive a pelting from the lawless crowd, who regard neither man nor God. None can now reasonably dispute that we have come to the perils of "the last days," as foretold by the apostle Paul in 2 Tim. 3: 1–5; but worse things are at hand. Let us keep on "the whole armor of God," that we "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil."

"THE DAY AND THE HOUR."

The above heading is the title of a new work, by Capt. W. A. Baker, Royal Bombay Engineers. It is published in London, by William Macintosh, 24 Paternoster Row.

When speaking on the saying of our Lord,—"Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels of heaven, but my Father only," the author very properly says, the present tense is used, and that we have no right to substitute "shall ever know" for "knoweth." Capt. Baker appears to be very much awake to the subject of the immediate second coming of Christ. Indeed, it is remarkable to see the interest that is being felt on this all important subject. Many of the most devoted and intelligent men and women in the various churches, on both continents, are now well satisfied that our Savior will very soon appear, and are proclaiming it to others. The Spirit of the Lord appears to be impressing the humble christians that the end of the present dispensation is at hand.

Capt. Baker has come to the conclusion that the 6,000 years from creation will close in the last part of the year 1874. He speaks with much confidence on the subject. The following is the table of contents of his work: "The study of prophecy a duty; On unbelief; The Destiny of Great Britain; Who is Michael? Who is the Prince of the Covenant? Who is Antichrist? The Day and the hour; The Signs of the Times; On Numbers—the past; the Future, to the appearance of Antichrist; the Future—to the appearance of Christ; the Future—the world to come; Conclusion."

This work of Capt. Baker's is producing some stir among those who have been indifferent on the subject of the Lord's coming. There appears to be quite a general expectation among all the students of prophecy, that the day of the Lord is really at hand; and many are speaking out boldly on the subject. Dr. Seiss, in Philadelphia, Editor of the Prophetic Times, an ably conducted monthly, devoted to the evidences of Christ's speedy coming, is preaching powerful sermons to large and intelligent audiences, on the subject of the speedy coming of Christ. Those who hear him say he seems to be almost inspired when he speaks on the subject of the second advent of the Messiah. This great truth is taking strong hold of the lovers of Christ. There seems to be a certainty about the matter, never felt before, and the evidence is continually increasing in clearness and strength.

While in Philadelphia, we called on an Episcopal minister, who thinks the Lord will come next year. He has presented a memorial to the great meeting of the Episcopalian bishops and clergy now in session (Oct. 25th) in Philadelphia, entreating them, in the most respectful manner, to consider the subject of the second coming of Christ, and express their opinion as to the evidence of its near approach; but they passed the subject in silence, and voted that he have leave to withdraw his memorial. It cannot be expected that popular ecclesiastical bodies will embrace the light on this subject, and proclaim it to the world. One is not prepared to receive the whole truth till he renounces the world with all its pomp and pride, and consents to become "of no reputation," like our blessed Savior. But few are willing to do this. The cross is so heavy, they are unwilling to bear it. They wish to enjoy the honors of the world, and drink of its pleasure cup with worldly friends; but they can never stand free in Christ so long as they do it; neither can they, in that state, see the evidences that are now coming upon the humble followers of the Lamb, that show them that the night of sorrow will soon close.

The hour in which we are living is one of great peril, and the dangers are daily increasing. Dear reader, are you ready for the coming of the Son of man? Is your heart pure? Is the old man crucified with the affections and lusts? Remember, without holiness, we have no promise of salvation.

NAPOLEONISM.

"Napoleonism" is but another name for Spiritualism. It is well known that Napoleon III. has been a Spiritualist for some years, and has been consulting Mr. Home, who is said to be the most noted medium in the world. So far as we can learn the principles of Napoleon, we find them harmonizing, in the main, with those of the Spiritualists every where. We look upon him as Satan's prime minister on our planet, practically co-operating with the designs of the great deceiver in leading all nations away from the Lord and his worship, to a system of "humanitarianism," or man-worship. We think the true character of Napoleon will soon be better known. Already it is beginning to be developed, but not seen, or noticed, except by the student of prophecy, who is closely watching the signs of the times. He may well be called "a man of wonder," for such he truly is. He has no equals, or rivals.

It is a point of interest to know his purposes and principles; the former he keeps concealed, but some of the latter are made known to the world; such as may tend to make him popular; while the deep infidel and atheistical ones are yet hid with his purposes, to be expressed when the favored opportunity arrives to throw off the mask.

The following are some that have been expressed. We introduce them in order to point out the similarity between them and those uttered by the Spiritualists. They are from an interesting work entitled, "The Speaking Image; or Napoleonism Prophetically Unveiled," published in London.

When speaking of "the policy of the Emperor . . . as regards Europe generally," the author says:—It "does not indicate any desire for actual conquest; he wishes, doubtless, to subjugate Europe, and to exercise a paramount influence over the people; but the ascendancy which he covets is moral." It is evident he wishes to unite both the temporal and spiritual supremacy in his own person. A pamphlet has lately appeared in France, written by M. Cayla, one of his Majesty's special friends. It is well known that when Napoleon wishes to adopt some new measure, that might receive opposition, instead of speaking out openly himself, he gets some friend of his to write the book, or publish one written by himself, in which is set forth the plan he wishes to execute; and after he has thus made the people somewhat familiar with the object proposed, and seen how it affects the public mind, he steps forward, and boldly executes the work. In the pamphlet by M. Cayla, it is indicated "that the Emperor should sever the connection between the Pope and the French Catholic church," and become himself the "head"; for as he has "been known as 'the Savior of society,' the Emperor might claim the title of 'the Savior of religion.'" The claim corresponds with the position of Spiritualists.

When Napoleon was making a journey in the south of France, he "was compared to Charlemagne, to St. Louis, and the Messiah." During the war in Italy, the Italians formed a parody on the Apostle's Creed, and addressed Napoleon I. as the "almighty maker of the first empire of the kingdom of Italy," and Napoleon III. as "our omnipotent Savior."

In the coinage made for the first empire, under Napoleon I., on one side might be seen "the emblems of liberty, and the inscription 'Republique Francaise,'—[French Republic], whilst on the reverse occurs the head of Napoleon Buonaparte, with the words, 'Napoleon 1 re. Empereur,'"—[Napoleon first Emperor." Here we have the strange idea of a republic and an empire united in one system of government. It should be remembered that this is just what the Spiritualists propose to do, as directed by the spirits. "Napoleonism," alias Spiritualism, or more properly Demonism, is spreading most rapidly in all parts of the world, and the time is at hand, beyond all doubt, for the demons to take the control of political and religious matters as they now exist in their very corrupt state. The hour has arrived when all true christians should come out and be separate, and prepare to meet their Bridegroom King, who is about to appear in all his glory.

"Napoleonism," like Spiritualism, is called a "NEW RELIGION." An English writer,—the author of "The Speaking Image," says:—"This new religion, as it may be called, is known in England under the title of Liberalism, and on the Continent as Napoleonism."

The creed of this new religion is expressed as follows:—"Liberty, Equality, and Fraternity." This is also the creed of the Spiritualists. It is stated that Napoleonism tolerates "all religions," "whether true or false, but none are allowed to influence, or to thwart, the aims of the liberal faith." The same is true of Spiritualism. Says the author of "The Speaking Image":—"The pretensions of the new religion are unbounded; the nations of the earth are to be regenerated by its influence, for 'it is the only civilizing agency in Europe.' It is to unite the people in a bond of common love and interest, and to bring about 'peace and plenty, indefinite progress, and a millennium.' The god of this new faith is termed by its apostles the crowned representative of the French Revolution, the Savior of society in France; and as our Omnipotent Savior and Temporary Providence in Italy. Indeed, the man who receives these idolatrous flatteries, and presses them to his soul, regards his own dynasty as the Messiah of the new principles."

The writer then very properly remarks:—"Is not Satan's last counterfeit, in all its solemn proportions, now before us? Where is christianity, the religion of the Bible, if not almost buried beneath the seductive illusions of the Liberal Faith? . . . Where, we ask, but lost amid the delusions of an earthly and mock millennium? . . . In a word, Louis Napoleon promises to Europe that which christianity and the righteous sceptre of Jesus alone can impart. Is he, then, the Antichrist?"

Spiritualism makes the same promises as Napoleonism; and it is evident that the principles have a common origin, and that Satan is the father of the whole.

A RISING CLOUD.

The present aspect of England and America looks rather stormy. It will be recollected that the English allowed the pirate ship Alabama to sail from her port for the purpose of destroying the shipping of the Union navy. The United States claim damages at the hands of the English government for what the Alabama was allowed to do. A correspondence has been going on between Earl Russell and Charles F. Adams, the American Minister at the court of London, in relation to the matter. The British government absolutely refuses to pay any damages for the destructive works of the Alabama. Mr. Adams thinks the United States will not agree to the terms of Earl Russell, and thus the matter stands. We wait for the issue.

Says the Philadelphia Inquirer:—

"The comments of the English papers on this matter, so far as they are made known to us, are somewhat apprehensive. The London Star proceeds to point out the probability of a rupture, if the British Government continues to maintain its position, refusing to submit to arbitration. Undoubtedly the situation is very delicate. If Earl Russell thinks that the American people will abandon their claims for compensation because he says that none will be made, he is very much mistaken. Every sentiment of justice to ourselves demands that we shall insist upon reparation."

SUNDAYS AT NIAGARA.

A traveler stopping at Niagara thus writes of the state of religion at that place as exhibited by the traveling public, which is supposed to be composed of our first class citizens:—

"It is a lamentable fact that christianity is not popular at Niagara Falls. The permanent population is large, and the number of visitors through the summer is very great, but notwithstanding it is a rare sight to see any of the three small churches here well filled on the Sabbath. On the contrary, the Sabbath is very little regarded here. The myriads of lager-beer and liquoring saloons which exist, so profitably to their proprietors, are kept open on Sunday the same as any other day, and so are curiosity shops, fancy goods establishments, and some of the provision markets and grocery stores. It is probably a "time-honored custom" at Niagara, as the people and authorities seem to pay little if any attention to such a wicked and unnecessary desecration of the Lord's day.

It is a fact which all who have visited the Falls have noticed, that a multitude of the hackmen here are the meanest and most unprincipled beings that ever disgraced a civilized community. You can hire them to perform extraordinary service for a mere trifle, but when you come to pay the bill, it is doubly multiplied. If you remonstrate or refuse to pay it, as you would seem to have a right to do, they knock you down and rob you. If the police interfere, the force is overpowered by the hackmen in superior numbers, and you thus lose your money and get half killed without any redress whatever. In one case of this kind, a few days since, quite a serious riot was threatened, and would probably have occurred, had not the colored waiters in the hotels come to the rescue of the police and assisted them in overpowering the army of hackmen."

Of course, where christianity dies out, abounding iniquity will come in. Jesus' disciples are called "the light of the world,"—"the salt of the earth;" but when that light is put under a bushel, and they cease to exert a saving influence upon community, corruption deep must be expected to follow, as is the case at the present time. How rapidly the tide of iniquity is rising, and with it comes a general spread of infidel principles, calculated to destroy all confidence in the Bible.

BOSTON MORALS.

Boston is said to be the most moral city of its size, in the world; and that in the millenniun it will be about as it is in Boston. The following, from a Boston paper, will give some idea of the morals of Boston, which are continually growing worse:—

"Liquor is sold by the glass in one hundred and thirty two places on North street, in this city. One block which is owned by a rich fashionable Boston lady, contains five liquor shops, five brothels and a large dance hall."

Such would be a strange millennium. But we do not find in the Bible any promise of a better state of things than we now see before the second personal coming of Christ. Wickedness has increased in Boston during the last ten years; but while time lasts, we may expect to see the morals continue to grow worse till Jesus comes to end earth's long, dreary night of sin and sorrow, by setting up his glorious kingdom.

THE PROPHETIC TIMES.

"The Prophetic Times," edited by Dr. Seiss, of Philadelphia, and other distinguished ministers in different denominations, is a valuable monthly, that should be read by all Bible students. Price only $1.00. Address "Prophetic Times," P. O. Box 2245, Philadelphia, Pa.

AMER. ADVENT MISSION SOCIETY.

A meeting of the Executive Board was held at their office, 167 Hanover St., Boston, Oct. 17th, at 3 P. M. Elder Himes in the chair.

Prayer was offered by Eld. Cunningham, and the minutes of previous meetings were read and approved. After which some unfinished business was taken up,—the election of Chairman and Secretary; whereupon Elder Joshua V. Himes was chosen permanent Chairman of the Board, and William B. Herron Recording and Corresponding Secretary.

The proceedings of organization with the Secretary's Address was announced to be ready for press, and five thousand copies were ordered to be printed, for sale and free distribution among the friends of the mission work.

Elder Himes expressed his intention to proceed South about the middle of November; and the Treasurer was authorized to pay into his hands the sum of $300 to defray the expenses of establishing a mission among the freedmen; and Eld. H. K. Flagg was appointed to accompany him as an assistant in the work.

Letters were read from brethren and sisters desiring to go as teachers to the freedmen; all of which were referred to the Committee on Schools and Missions.

Several manuscripts for freedmen's tracts were laid before the Board, and referred to the Committee on Publications.

The importance of having a uniformity of text books for the freedmen's schools was considered; and a series of Reading Books, published by the American Tract Society (Boston), expressly for the freedmen, were offered for examination, and referred to the Committee on Publications.

A letter was read from Sr. Anna E. Smith, desiring to be recognized as a teacher among the colored people in New York and vicinity, and a letter of recommendation was ordered to be given to her.

A letter was read from a missionary in the South, containing some information and suggestions as to the mission work, teachers, etc. (an extract from which will be found in another column).

A letter from M. B. Czechowski, now in Switzerland, was read, asking for help to meet his present necessities; and the sum of $100 was ordered to be sent to him for that purpose.

A letter was read from an evangelist in Massachusetts, suggesting the appointment of Home Missionaries to travel and labor in destitute regions in the North. This work was contemplated in the organization of the Society, and provided for in its Constitution; but it was thought expedient to defer action in that direction, until there should be funds enough in the treasury to sustain such missionaries in the work. Home missionaries are needed, and they will be appointed just as soon as the benevolent shall furnish the means.

Adjourned to the call of the Secretary.

WILLIAM B. HERRON, Secretary.

FINANCIAL REPORT Of Wilbraham Campmeeting, 1865.

EXPENDITURES.

Paid for lumber, straw, fuel, drawing water, storing crockery, etc.	$207.46
" For new crockery, stoves, tin ware, and various articles for the table and cooking department	225.79
" Insurance on campmeeting property, advertising, postage, printing, etc.	19.50
Loss by counterfeit bank bills and postal currency taken at the various stands	39.85
" For services rendered by various persons in the boarding department at the several stands, and for work in refitting campground, etc.	475.63
" For groceries, provisions, and the various articles used and sold at the boarding house and refreshment stands	2120.51
Total	$3088.74

RECEIPTS.

Balance in Treasurer's hands from last year's receipts	$32.18
Cash received on pledges made at campmeeting of 1864	25.00
Collections	190.09
Sale of straw	121.27
Rent of barber's shop	6.00
Amount received for board, and sales at the boarding house, oyster, cake and fruit stands, and from all other sources not included in the above receipts	2658.77
Total	$3033.31
Excess of expenditures over receipts	$55.43

From the above it will be seen that our receipts, although larger than in any one year before, are less than our expenses by more than fifty dollars. It was hoped that the ordinary collections taken would be sufficient to pay the expense of repairing and erecting the stands, re-seating the ground, putting it in order, and taking care of the same; while the profits on sales made at the various refreshment stands would meet the outlay incurred in making additions to the table and cooking departments, also the expense of the free boarders, and any deficit that might arise in the boarding department; but the unusually large additions, as above mentioned, the large number of free boarders, and the low price charged for board combined, were more than sufficient to absorb all profits on sales made. We trust that in the future, should the Lord permit us to meet again, that our receipts will not fall so far short of meeting our expenses as this year.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Association, held August 23d, a committee was appointed to nominate and recommend a campmeeting committee of five. At a meeting of the brethren and sisters held at the preacher's stand, Aug. 26th, the nominating committee reported the names of the former campmeeting committee, which report was accepted, and the same committee re-chosen. Afterward, at the suggestion of the campmeeting committee, that, in consequence of the great amount of work devolving upon them, two brethren be added to their number, making the committee to consist of seven, two names were added, and accepted by the campmeeting, so that the committee for 1866 stands as follows:—

S. G. MATHEWSON,
MILES GRANT,
GEO. T. ADAMS,
HIRAM MUNGER,
JAMES HEMENWAY,
R. E. LADD,
D. MATHEWSON.

GEO. T. ADAMS, Treasurer.

MISSION SOUTH.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say to the friends and patrons of the mission among the Freedmen, that I shall start for the South about the middle of November, with Bro. Flagg, who is to aid me in this work. The brethren will hear from us duly in the Crisis and the Voice. We ask the prayers of all, that we may have wisdom to direct and grace to sustain us in this great and good work.

This is an Advent Mission Sunday School among the poor colored people of Philadelphia. It numbers already more than one hundred boys and girls, and is rapidly increasing. They want a hundred copies of the Young Pilgrim, and are not able to pay the $35.00 a year for them. They call upon the benevolent for help. Who will give it?

QUALIFICATIONS OF TEACHERS.

We addressed a letter recently to a missionary in the South, asking for some information in regard to mission fields there, and also inviting such suggestions and advice as he might be able to give from his experience in regard to the mission work; and, from his reply, we make the following extract, showing what kind of teachers are needed for this great field of Christian labor:—

"BRO. HERRON:—I devote my first moments to you; for, I assure you, my interest in the great missionary work you are, with others, carrying forward, impels me to address you and reply to your letter of Sept. 25th as early as possible. How great my interest in your Society is, I can hardly express. * * *

About teachers and missionaries. Let me say, you want the very first and best class of teachers. You want men and women who have both bodies and minds. Weakly bodies and little minds don't do much here. Some have an idea that almost any thing will do to come down here and teach the negro. It is a great mistake. The very best talent and the best qualifications are required. Do not send, I beg of you, any who do not fully understand their mother tongue. An interested heart is essential, but a well stored head and a good constitution are just as necessary. I fear you will not get the teachers you ought to have. Teachers must be such as command respect, or much will be lost. A teacher here should be qualified for almost any position, for he will have to shape himself or herself into many places, in order to carry out the object of the mission.

You want only one man at each station, and he should be an energetic, whole man, qualified to teach, preach, and direct, in the best manner. He should be competent to choose his teachers, or, at least, to guide them. He must have some business talent, and know how to deal with men in general. The qualifications of female teachers are very essential. They should be women of good judgment, with characters established, and above reproach. They should be capable of leading in social worship, and directing the freed women in every thing in which they need instructing. Never did a person need all the talent which God gives more than in this work."

If there are any teachers of experience who can meet the above requirements, and who feel that God wants them to go, we shall be glad to hear from them soon. W. B. H.

DORCAS MISSION SUNDAY SCHOOL.

A few more words about the Dorcas Mission Sunday School are necessary at this time. We have an abundance of primers and spelling-books, having on hand one hundred of them. We are also well supplied with gift-cards, and little tracts, and singing-books.

The school now numbers one hundred and fifty boys and girls, whose ages range from three to fifteen years. Quite a large number are in want of clothing to cover them from the cold. The following articles of cast off clothing are much needed at this time: caps, coats, jackets, pants, shirts, underclothing, socks, boots, and shoes, for the boys; bonnets, shawl, cloaks, dresses, aprons, furs, hoods, stockings, under-clothing, boots, rubbers, mittens, gloves, and handkerchiefs for the girls. Boys and girls are shivering with the cold, several are sick with fever and chills. We want clothing, cast-off clothing, for these poor bare-footed and half-naked children. Shall we have it? I believe we shall.

Last winter the church at Twenty-fourth street sent us a large box and a barrel full, and the church in Portsmouth, N. H., sent us three barrels full, and we were enabled to clothe about one hundred and seventy-five men, women and children. It would have done any child of God good to have seen the little white teeth and dancing eyes of the boys and girls as we gave them clothing, that by them was as gladly received as new suits by boys and girls whose parents are in better circumstances. The heaviest barrel from Portsmouth weighed seventy-five pounds, and the entire express bill was but three dollars from there to my home in Philadelphia, which bill, with others, the Lord enabled me to pay through the liberality of the churches in Portsmouth, New York and Philadelphia.

Any church among us who may feel it to be a duty to send us a lot of cast-off garments, had better send us a barrel, or a half-barrel full, as such weigh less than boxes. Direct them to MRS. M. HELDINSON, S. W., Cor. of Rye and Marion Sts., Philadelphia, Penn. Who will send us such barrels and half-barrels of substantial God bless yous? "Whoso stoppeth his ears at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard."—Prov. 21: 13.

A HYMN AND TUNE BOOK.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, held Oct. 19th at their office, 167 Hanover St., Boston, the subject of the new Hymn Book, now for some time in preparation, was discussed, and all action with reference thereto, at Wilbraham Campmeeting in August last, was rescinded. In consideration of the general demand for a book containing tunes with the hymns, it was voted to proceed at once to publish a Hymn and Tune Book, not to exceed one thousand hymns, in the form of the "Christian Lyre," and to be called—"The Jubilee Harp." The hymns, as selected and arranged by Elder Brewer, were accepted, and will be used, as far as practicable, in the new book. The plates of the "Christian Lyre" were purchased of Elder Himes, and the best and most acceptable hymns and music therein will be embodied in the "Harp." The Western Association were invited to appoint two members of their Board to co-operate with us in its preparation; and the Business Agent, in conjunction with the Editorial Committee, was empowered to employ such additional help as may be needed to complete the work in a superior manner, and without delay. Choice hymns and tunes may still be sent in, addressed to the Advent Christian Publication Society, Boston, Mass. WM. B. HERRON, Sec'y.

THE NEW HYMN BOOK.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say to the friends East and West that I have transferred the Christian Lyre to the Christian Publication Society, with a desire for union in the publication and support of one book. The two Associations East and West are united in this movement. And now let all the people give it their support.

I have reason to believe that the best hymns and tunes of the Lyre, with other good hymns and tunes, will be put into the new book, by which it will be made acceptable to all.

MISSION LETTERS FROM SWITZERLAND.—No. 2.

DEAR BRO. GRANT:—According to my expectation when I wrote my last, we left La Tour, Italy, the 5th inst. We held meetings several evenings in succession with the little church of St. Jean before leaving them. They flocked down the mountain the evening before we left, bringing their little tokens of affection and good will. We preached and administered the Lord's Supper. Our parting with them was very affecting. Many tears were shed, and some wept aloud as we exchanged the sad, temporary farewell. We went by way of Turin to Susa by cars. We were nine persons, including my brother and Bro. Jean Geymet, and could ill afford to pay the twenty francs per person, required to pass Mont Cenis by Diligence; so on arriving at seven o'clock, evening, we took each what baggage we could carry and walked three hours before stopping for the night. Early the next morning we continued our walk, passing over the mountain and descending to the village of Lansingburg, which we reached at six o'clock in the evening, very weary, for we were quite heavily laden, and were very glad that our day's labor was ended. But the earnest prayer ascended to God, from our heart, that we might ere long return, weighed down more heavily still with Advent publications for the further and more vigorous prosecution of the work of God, already commenced in Italy.

We hired a Diligence at Lansingburg the same evening for twenty-two francs, and reached St. Michel, at the foot of the mountain, at two o'clock the next morning. We took cars again at five o'clock, and at eight o'clock evening were at Yverdun, a pleasant little city at the southwestern extremity of Lake Neuchatel, passing on our way through Chambery, Geneva, and Lausanne. The next morning we found comfortable apartments for twelve francs per month, some two miles distant, on the Lake shore in this little village of Grandson, and felt that the Lord himself had provided for us. We are without furniture, having none to bring from Italy, never having been able to buy it, nor are we now, and we are very glad to repose our weary bodies at night on straw, remembering our Divine Master, who had "not where to lay his head."

Dear brethren and sisters, please to remember the great loss there has been on your donations by exchange, and also bear in mind that one quarter that we have received had to be expended for postage, as our European correspondence is necessarily quite extensive, and will be more so in future; and you will not, I trust, accuse me of extravagance.

I will now give you more fully than I have done the reasons for our removal from Italy to Switzerland, as it may be a matter of much surprise to my brethren and sisters in the United States. The sound of the "Italian Mission" has gone abroad through Italy, and of course the heart-searching doctrines we preach meet much opposition. Protestants as well as Catholics are very bigoted, and the christianity of the majority is merely nominal. In regard to national characteristics, the Italian people are not noted for kindness and hospitality to strangers; their friendship is not reliable as that of many nations.

Before establishing a Mission house and issuing publications, as we must do with God's help, we felt it our duty to look over the ground of location very carefully. We did so, and became fully satisfied that there would be the same danger for our Mission house in any part of Italy as there was for that of the Freedmen near Nashville, Tenn., which I am pained to learn has been recently destroyed; and that it would be wrong to expose my family to the suffering they would have to endure there. Therefore prudence required us to change our location, and economy also. We cannot long look to America for help, but must raise up churches in Europe, that will have the spirit of missions, and will give of their substance to aid in this good work. It would be in vain to look for much help from Italy, as with all its natural advantages it is a poor country. Systematic oppression, in church and state, impoverished its people, and it is a poor place in which to make money. In this little Republic we shall be as safe as in New England, and we hope among its free churches to receive encouragement and assistance in our work. Another reason for our removal, and a very weighty one to my mind, is, that this position is a much more central one for our missionary labors than Italy.

As I wrote you soon after my return from my tour through Switzerland and Germany last summer, I found a rich and very extensive field of labor among people who seemed much more anxious for light and truth than those among whom I have labored in Italy.

We now expect with the help of God to establish the headquarters of this Mission among the quiet, industrious, law-abiding people of this Canton of Vaud, on the borders of the beautiful Lake Neuchatel. Here I commenced a course of lectures, soon after our arrival, and have preached every evening since, to very attentive hearers. I shall continue to preach the word, as the Lord opens the way. Think not that we have abandoned Italy. O no, no! Our dear Bro. Jones is laboring in Tuscany. Bro. Besson will do what he can in La Tour and vicinity. Bro. Geymet will assist me in this part of the field. As often as circumstances will permit, I shall visit Italy in person. And when with the assistance of God, and my dear brethren and sisters who have "charity" (1 Cor. 13 : 1–3), we are enabled to publish books and tracts, our evangelists and colporters will scatter them through Italy as well as other parts of Europe, "to many peoples and nations and tongues and kings." Rev. 10 : 11.

My heart is very grateful for the assistance already received from you, my dear christian brethren and sisters of the United States, in this great work; and it is very painful to my feelings to ask of you more. But it is impossible to prosecute this work, as I feel that God requires me to do, without further assistance. We see a broad field, already ripe for harvest; and shall we fold our hands, or work without assistance, and to great disadvantage, when other good workmen are anxious to give their assistance? All that is needed, in addition to God's promised help, to prosecute it efficiently is, that all of you to whom the Lord has entrusted the "unrighteous mammon" should give of it at once, according to your ability, for the enlightenment of the nations. Can we, who know what is soon coming on the earth, slumber and leave the world to perish, thoughtless of the great events just ready to burst upon them? Shall we not rather rouse ourselves, and labor earnestly and willingly, part with some of our earthly luxuries and comforts, to give them the light and truth necessary to awake them to a sense of their condition, that they be prepared to meet the Lord in peace? The kingdom of God is approaching, and the nations sleep in their sins.

Forgive my boldness, my plainness of speech, for my heart is too full for silence or smooth words. I am especially affected for my dear Slavonian people, who are without publications, almost without Bibles. Europe does but very little if anything for their spiritual enlightenment. We have appealed to christian England, but of late have received no assistance nor word of sympathy. May the Lord destroy in us all the spirit of selfishness and sectarianism, that we may labor in one spirit (John 22 : 21) for the everlasting good of our fellow men. Amen. Your Bro. in the vineyard of the Lord, M. B. Czechowski.

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT IS OUR DUTY?

Dear Sisters:—Will you bear with me while I address you? Having the cause of my Master and the prosperity of the children of God at heart, I know you will pardon my imperfect manner while I try to stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance. The subject which lies so heavy on my heart is the support of our spiritual teachers. It grieves me to see them traveling through frosts and snow, rain and mud, sometimes with a poor horse and indifferent clothing, which have been worn out in preaching the Gospel. These things touch my heart. Sisters, let us think of the comforts we enjoy. We have our dear companions with us to provide for our wants, and to cherish and soothe us in the hours of affliction. But let us not forget the wives of our spiritual guides. They are often destitute of these comforts. Let us not withhold our little mite to help those dear ministers and their families. Some of our ministers have left behind them tender wives and helpless little children, or are torn away from the fond embrace of aged and loving parents, for our good. They have forsaken all to preach Christ to a dying world.

Ought we not to deprive ourselves of some little superfluity, or even some things that we may call the necessaries of life, but in the sight of God are not really so? Shall we not divide our temporal substance with those men of God who are laboring day and night for our good? Our blessed Savior, in days of old, was willing to accept the offerings of our sex, and I have no doubt he will do it again. By giving our mite, the Lord will bless our basket and store, and bless our souls also. What we do let us do quickly. The Lord loveth a cheerful giver.

Let us all examine ourselves, and see if the Lord has not some work for us to do, although we are the weaker vessel. Let us act well our part, and be mothers and sisters to those servants of God, some of whom we are likely to lose for the want of a support for their suffering families. They must have something to eat and drink, and clothes to keep them warm. They do not wish to follow the fashions of this world. They are looking for a better world, and for our Savior Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile bodies, and fashion them like Christ's glorious body.

Do not think I am surrounded with wealth. O no, far from it. I am just recovering from a sickness which was caused by over work. But we have a rich Father, and I pray that he will not let us perish in these last days of peril. Let us awake and do our duty in the fear of the Lord. Your sister in Christ,

Jane Brown.

Correspondence.

From Bro. A. N. Seymour.

Dear Brother:—Through the goodness of my heavenly Father I still live, move, and have a conscious being on this, God's footstool, for which I would be abundantly thankful. I find by traveling about that there are some tenderly affected towards the truth and a pure christianity, and who can be reached by proper influences exerted in their behalf by warm-hearted christians.

But as a general remark, I find the element of spiritual intercourse with God is fast receding from the minds or hearts of the masses of professors and other influences very deleterious to good morals are occupying the field. This, to my mind, constitutes one of the prominent signs that faithfully admonish us that the final judgment is truly impending. Wherever I go a powerless faith and hope and christianity are spread out before me, and inactivity in the would be religious world is the general order of these inauspicious times.

But this is only fulfilling the words of Christ found in close proximity to the gospel being preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations,—'Because iniquity shall abound the love of many shall wax cold.' Oh! how true and faithful are these words of this great Prophet. Notwithstanding this, and many more of like import, stupid indifference still prevails, and they would have all things continue as they are. How surprised they will be when the Savior shall rend the heavens, and come down in his mighty power with the angels, to collect the few scattered remnants of nations that are to be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus. Too late, too late then, to be saved. Hence they will cry to the mountains and hills to shelter them from the storms of vengeance that shall fall on the guilty in this day of trouble and anguish.

Sinner, cold-hearted, worldly-minded, pleasure-seeking professor, fly, fly, fly with rapid strides to the Savior. Tarry not for a moment. Sacrifice all for God and glory. Make no attempts to enjoy a little more sleep and folding of hands, a little more gratification of the lusts of the flesh, but now, this moment, put forth a desperate effort to break the chains of a spell-bound world.

Christian-warrior, fellow-servant, gird thyself anew for fresh victories and dangers that threaten your safety in the school of Christ, and steadily watch for the dazzling light that heralds forth one endless day. Yours in christian bonds, A. N. Seymour.

Reading, Mich.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

Bro. Grant:—I would like to communicate a few thoughts, through the columns of the Crisis, to strengthen the little church scattered so widely around, and that they may see God's willingness to save and his power to heal. Oh that the church may contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, and feel that the last chapter of Mark and the epistle of James are for us in these days, if we live up to the gospel rule. Although I feel it a great thing to live so that at all times we can claim the promises of God, yet I know it is our privilege. God is a hearer and answerer of prayer, and does and will answer the prayer of faith, and that prayer shall save the sick. I believe it. I feel it. I know it, having been an eye witness of it.

In my neighborhood a young man in the prime of life, opposed to the people called Adventists, was taken sick, and lingered along with consumption for over one year and a half. He tried various remedies. Had four different physicians, and tried many different sorts of medicine. Consulted the clairvoyant, and found all of these to fail, and got no better, but rather grew worse, till satisfied that no medium could ever reach his case, and the grave, with all its gloom and terror, must be his resting place.

At last he felt that prayer might avail, and the people he had always hated must be sent for. Accordingly, Bro. and Sr. Beers, and the writer, arrived at the house not far from midnight. Had we been called to attend his funeral we could not have felt more solemn. Never will that midnight hour be forgotten. From that time he began to amend. It was according to his faith. Although his faith was very weak, his confidence and trust was in God, and he walked out on his promises, and can say to-day, the prayer of faith has saved the sick.

Oh, how good the Lord is. I love him. I am trying to serve him. I want to live so as to share an abundant entrance into his kingdom,

"Where no death nor dismay, neither trouble nor sorrow, Shall be felt for to-day, nor be feared for to-morrow."

Yours in the faith of the gospel,

Roxbury, Ct. Susan E. Teeple.

From Sr. E. Hill.

Bro. Grant:—Permit me through the Crisis to say a few words concerning our beloved brother in Christ, Henry L. Bradley, of Bristol, Ct., who fell asleep Oct. 14th, 1865. I have known Bro. B. from the early part of his life, from fourteen to sixteen years of age. He was converted to God, and united with the Baptist church in his native town, and while in fellowship with that church was a devoted follower of our blessed Lord. Many has been the time he has left his mountain home to walk to the village, a distance of one mile and a half, through storm and darkness, to attend their weekly conference meeting. He felt it not only a duty but a privilege to meet with his brethren to pray, and sing praises to God. But, alas! he has fallen.

Soon after Father Miller commenced preaching the soon coming of the Lord, Bro. B. embraced the doctrine, and was strong in the faith till the last. Many times he felt that the Lord would have him preach, but he did not feel that he could say, I will obey, until sometime within the past year. He went forth to preach, and he felt he was greatly blest in obeying him. Many will remember the kind spirit he always manifested.

We can say of a truth, a good man has fallen. And as I gazed upon his lifeless remains, as they lay in his coffin, ready for the tomb, I could say without a doubt, they will come up in the morning of the resurrection, to immortality and eternal life, and my prayer was, Lord, keep me in the narrow way, that I may meet him in glory. Praise the Lord! the word is full of precious promises to the faithful. To the bereaved and heart-stricken widow I would say, I deeply sympathize with you. But let us be faithful a little longer, and we shall meet loved ones where parting will be no more. And to the children, remember the agonizing prayers of your father in your behalf, and be prepared to meet your God in peace and your father in glory.

To the brethren and sisters scattered abroad upon the earth, the Lord is soon coming; it must be so, for the generation which was to see all the signs that were to precede his coming, are nearly all passed away; and remember, Christ says, this generation shall not all pass away till all is fulfilled. May we all take heed that we be not overcharged with the cares of this life, so that day come upon us unawares. Let us all who love his appearing be faithful, that at last we may hear the welcome words, "Well done, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

Your sister in Christ, E. Hill.

Obituaries.

Wentworth. Died in Dover, Mass., Oct. 2, 1865, of typhoid fever, Joel Wentworth, aged sixty-four years.

Young. Also, in Dover, Mass., at the residence of her lately deceased father, Joel Wentworth, Oct. 16, 1865, of typhoid fever, Lucy A., wife of Benj. Young, aged thirty-eight years, six months and fourteen days.

Our sister left her home in Brooklyn, N. Y., to visit her parents in Dover, about three weeks before the Alton Bay Campmeeting. She left her father's home in company with her companion, to attend that "feast of tabernacles," and was greatly strengthened and blessed of the Lord while there. After that meeting closed, she returned to her father's house for the children, and on arriving there found him sick with the typhoid fever. His request, and her own affection for him, led her to remain and administer to his wants. Night and day she watched over her father's sick bed, until at last she became a victim to the disease. In a few days the father closed his eyes in death, but not until he assured those around him that he was prepared for the kingdom of heaven.

For a while, strong hopes were entertained that our sister would recover; but at last such hopes were blasted, for on Sunday, Oct. 16th, she sank rapidly, and at one o'clock she fell sweetly asleep in Jesus. Her funeral took place in Wakefield, N. H., and a discourse from Acts 26 : 22, 23, was delivered by Eld. Jos. Spinney.

A beloved companion, two children, a mother and brother, and a large company of the "household of faith," are called to mourn the loss of one whom none knew but to love. Little did the saints at Alton Bay think when our sister at the close of the meeting went from tent to tent to shake hands with them, that they were shaking hands with one who was to be snatched away from us by that cruel enemy death, so soon and so suddenly.

Our sister was a christian. Scores of saints were entertained at her home in East Boston. All such will "rise up and call her blessed." Often has she denied herself for the cause of her Master, for it was her meat and her drink to do his will. To her husband and children she was devotedly attached. She was the light of the household, and carried sunshine wherever she went. Her heart was large. All who loved Jesus in sincerity she gladly called brother and sister. To see dissensions among the body caused her many hours of grief. She loved all, and felt that it was a pleasure to love what Jesus loved.

The home is desolate now, but her companion, though in such bitter affliction, sorrows not without hope, for he is assured by the promises of God's word that she will be raised up at the last day. May God bless him and his dear children, and sanctify to them this sad event. May the mother, who is bowed down by this double affliction, the death of her companion and her only daughter, be sustained by the abundant grace of God, who has promised to be the widow's God. May the surviving brother be led to the Rock that is able to keep him in this hour of deep grief, and may the Lord sanctify this event to the churches in Boston, Portsmouth and other cities, where our sister was well known and much loved.

The day is near when she and all those who sleep in Jesus will awake to die no more. How blessed the meeting. We shall look for Jesus first, then our dear friend. Signs tell us that Jesus is coming soon. He who is "the resurrection and the life" will bid the sleepers arise. Joyful day! "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly." "So when this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law; but thanks be unto God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

F. H. Burbank.

Lloyd. Died of consumption, at Mont Clair, New Jersey, Oct. 17th, Nellie E. Lloyd, daughter of Marshall Lloyd, of Westfield, Mass., aged twenty years.

She will "hunger no more, neither thirst any more."

There will be no more strong clinging to life, for throughout eternal ages she will be immortal. Trusting herself in the Everlasting Arms, the smiles which occasionally flitted over her suffering face told how sweet were the visions of home and rest purchased by her Redeemer. J. E. L.

Fletcher. Died in Rome, Me., Sept. 25th, Carrie G., daughter of John and Cynthia Fletcher, aged nineteen years and seven months.

Thus death has made another draft upon our congregation, and has taken a jewel. We all mourn. Carrie was a good girl, and sleeps in Jesus. I trust the Lord will comfort the sorrow-stricken family, who for the first time are called to mourn, with the hope of meeting where scorching fevers will never come. L. L. Howard.

Thayer. Died in Windsor, Mass., Oct. 13th, 1865, of typhoid fever, Gregory Thayer, aged thirty-one years.

He fell with the armor on. Half an hour before he died he revived and sang,—

"How long, oh Lord, our Savior,
Wilt thou remain away?"

But his voice was soon lost in death. But ere long he will sing again

In triumph o'er the tomb,
When Christ, his Lord and Savior,
To deliver him hath come.

Discourse by the writer, from 1 Tim. 7: 8.

Elizabeth Warren.

Smith. Died in Addison, Vt., Oct. 30th, 1865, of bowel complaint, Henry Carter, son of William and Harriet Smith, aged eighteen months.

"Of such is the kingdom of heaven." H. F. C.

Long Sermons.—It is said of that excellent man, Rev. Orlo Bartholomew, for twenty-eight years pastor in Augusta, in the sermon preached at his funeral, that "the secret of his marked acceptableness as a preacher lay in the following things: the transparent simplicity of his motive, the earnestness and vivacity of his manner, the evangelical substance and judicious brevity of his discourse. Almost invariably he brought his discourse within the half-hour." A man who preaches twice and lectures once a week to the same congregation will commonly find the half-hour quite enough for them, if it is not for him. And, since his chief object is to do them good, why should he cause his good sermons "to be evil spoken of"? Why, after having preached them into a good frame, insist on preaching them out of it?—Evangelist.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

From Liverpool the 13th.

The official journal of Rome, the Di Roma, announces its authority to declare that the Pope, in his allocution, spoke upon secret societies, as at all times, from all the promptings of his own conscience and with full independence. It denies that the French government prohibited the publication of the Pope's remarks relative to the funeral of Marshal Magnan.

The French troops have already withdrawn from Frosinove and Veletri in the Papal States.

The Minister of Police in Warsaw has intimated that the state of siege of Poland will be raised at the opening of the new year.

The Journal De St. Petersburg draws a parallel between Ireland and Poland. The London Times emphatically denies the truth of the parallel, and points out the essential difference between the two countries.

Shanghae, Sept. 4. A successful revolt is reported in Western Tartary. The province of Ili has been wrested from the Celestial Empire; Nigenfei had seized three cities.

From Queenstown the 14th.

Fenian arrests and commitments for trial continue in Ireland.

Madrid, Oct. 13. There was a great increase in the cholera here yesterday. There were 540 cases and 165 deaths during the day. A general panic prevails.

A dispatch from Rome denies that any movement of French troops has yet taken place. The Papal Minister of War has, however, received a notification from the French Government that the army of occupation will be concentrated at Rome, Civita, Vecchia and Viterbo in January.

DOMESTIC.

Philadelphia, Oct. 24. The Fenian Congress continued in session yesterday. A complete reorganization has been effected, modeled after our national government, with a President, Cabinet, Senate and House of Representatives. Both Houses of the newly established Congress held sessions yesterday. Col. John O. Mahony was unanimously and amidst great cheering declared President, after which he took the oath of office and delivered an address. A committee was appointed to draft an address embodying a recognition of an Irish Republic, which is to have a building in (blank) for governmental purpose. There is said to be much rivalry for the possession of the bonds authorized by the Congress to be issued, which are now nearly, if not quite, ready for distribution. It is thought that all the business will be finished to-day.

New York, Oct. 26. The Herald's Toronto dispatch says the Fenian excitement is increasing and great activity is manifested in military circles. Drills, inspections, enrolling volunteers, etc., are going on.

Many of the Irish soldiers in the regular regiments are deserting to the United States, and a large portion of the volunteers are believed to be Fenians. Many Scotchmen are joining the order.

The Herald's Washington dispatch says that the trial of Jeff. Davis has been decided upon and that the arrangements are nearly completed. He will be tried for treason either in Washington or Richmond in the United States Supreme Court.

It is said that the Secretary of the Navy has directed all available steam war vessels to be got ready for sea.

The Secretary of War has issued an order that no more arrests will be made of persons as deserters for having failed to report under draft, and all those now held are to be discharged immediately.

New York, Oct. 30. It is reported that the Fenian Senate to-day arranged to send agents to Ireland immediately to organize a revolution there, which is expected to take place shortly.

Private letters from Paris, state that a large number of French troops have been recently and secretly sent from Algiers to reinforce Maximilian's army in Mexico.

Morehead City, N. C., Oct, 28. The purser of the steamship Eagle makes the following report: An insurrection has broken out among the negroes of Jamaica. The English Consul General at Havana has applied to the Captain General of Cuba for aid to put the negroes down. Four Spanish war vessels have been dispatched for that purpose.

Successor of Juarez.—The term of President Juarez expires on the 30th of November, when he is succeeded according to the provisions of the Mexican constitution, by Gen. Ortega, Chief Justice of the Republic. It is said that Gen. Ortega is about to leave New York for Mexico, and that he will be accompanied by a number of officers. They are supposed to be in possession of some funds to carry on the war against Maximillan.

☞ There are four freedmen's colonies in Louisiana, viz: at Baton Rouge, St. Charles, Lafourche, and Jefferson, embracing altogether nine thousand six hundred and fifty acres of land. There were settled on these one thousand nine hundred and two blacks, who raised crops this year to the value of $185,000.

Discussion at Portland, Me.

We, the undersigned, have agreed to hold a public discussion in the city of Portland, Me., at the Second Advent Hall on Congress street, commencing Monday evening, Nov. 7th, at 8 oclock, and continuing through eight consecutive afternoon and evening sessions of two hours each, unless concluded earlier by mutual consent of the parties. Afternoon sessions at 2 o'clock, and evening at 7.

Question:—Is the seventh day Sabbath, observed by God's people prior to the crucifixion of Christ, still binding upon mankind?

Affirmative, M. E. Cornell.
Negative, T. M. Preble.

Help, Brethren!

The church in Biddeford, Me., believing in the speedy advent of our Savior, and having struggled hard to sustain a meeting, so that the people shall hear the doctrine of Jesus' second advent, have decided to build them a house for that purpose, as they cannot sustain their meetings and pay the amount of rent which they will have to pay the coming year, all of them being poor, and would thankfully receive any assistance which any one would feel a privilege to render. Now, dear brethren, you who can, help this church, for they are worthy of your assistance.

W. H. Mitchell,
A. W. Sibley,
Miles Grant.

Western New York.

I am authorized to give notice that the Christian Conference of Western New York will hold its second quarterly session for the year with the Advent Christian Church of Dansville, Liv. Co., N. Y., to commence on Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over the following Sunday. A general invitation is extended by the church. Brethren, pray that the meeting may result in the glory of God. F. Burr.

Book Notice.

I would say to the friends who have subscribed for my Life sketches, paid or not, please send in your orders to E. P. Woodward, Crisis office, Boston, Mass., and he will send them to your address. Please excuse the long delay.

Abigail Mussey.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Deerfield, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 15th, to hold over the following Sunday. Provision will be made to take care of all who come. Meeting near Bro. John M. Quimby's.

S. W. Bishop.
D. S. Holt.

Notice.

By arrangement with Bro. Hanscomb, I withdraw my appointment at Britton's Mills, Nov. 5th, and at South Livermore evening of Nov. 4th, in favor of Bro. Goodrich, who will preach at those places in my stead. I. C. Wellcome.

Notice.

Preaching brethren desiring to preach to the church in Lee, N. H., will correspond with Josiah Durgin, that there may be no conflicting appointments. We want none to come but those whom the Lord sends, and whom the Lord sends we invite to come. Josiah Durgin.

Notice.

Providence permitting, there will be a meeting of the Advent brethren at Norwalk, Ohio, to commence on Saturday Nov. 4th, at 2 o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. Brethren of like precious faith are invited to attend. Bro. Jonas Wendell will be present. S. F. Rogers.

Notice.

Brethren and sisters in Providence and vicinity are cordially invited to the house of Bro. John C. Burch, Eagle street, South Providence, where a meeting of the believers of Christ's soon coming and the resurrection of the dead is established.

Preachers coming this way and desiring to stop, will receive a hearty welcome.

Geo. A. Cole. In behalf of the Brethren.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that preaching brethren visiting North Adams, will find a pilgrim's home at Bro. Charles Patterson's on Brooklyn street, in the house belonging to Oliver Parker.

A. J. McCulloch. In behalf of the Church.

Notice.

The Carlinville meeting will commence Friday, Nov. 10th. Probably Brn. Scott and Bywater, and Sr. Prescott, will be with us. W. Sheldon.

Notice.

Persons desiring hymns inserted in the new book, will please forward them to Geo. T. Adams, 167 Hanover Street, Boston, Mass., as I have delivered the prepared manuscripts to the committee for publication. S. T. Brewer.

Maine Second Advent Tract Society.

S. K. Partridge, R. R. York, I. C. Wellcome
Board of Managers.
I. C. Wellcome, Secretary and Business Agent.
Isaac Wight, Treasurer.

It was voted that all orders for tracts and books for distribution by this Society be addressed to the Agent, I. C. Wellcome, Yarmouth, Me., who will supply them as fast as the means are furnished.

All our ministers will receive subscriptions for the Tract Fund, and they purpose to raise $200, or more, for free distribution in Maine this year.

I. C. Wellcome, Agent.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon; otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

WHEN JESUS COMES.

"Truth mighty is and must prevail,
Though men and devils do assail;
And truth and peace on earth shall reign,
With all the glories of their train."

'Tis true, but not till Jesus comes,
To gather all his ransomed home.
The wicked slain, his name erased
From earth, forgotten in his native place;
For O! his rod shall never rest
On the possession of the blest;
Lest quick in some unguarded hour
He yield unto the tempter's power.
No! in that ever blessed home
Temptation's blandishments never come.
No envy there, nor jealous rage,
Shall e'er the ransomed's heart engage;
But love and peace, and joy complete,
Attend around the mercy-seat.
No sickness there, nor numbing pain,
Shall e'er assail the immortal frame;
Life's healing tree shall strength renew,
As, crowned with fruit forever new,
It stands unguarded by the sword,
Which once debarred creation's lord.

O, home of peace! O, blest abode!
When shall I leave this heavy load
Of sins and cares, of pains and fears?
When end these bitter, burning tears?
When shall my weary footsteps press
The new earth, robed in gloriousness?
When will that fairest morning dawn,
Which brings my Father's children home?
When shall they meet around his board,
And share the supper of their Lord?
When they the King in glory see,
Then, O my Lord, remember me.

THE SIGN OF THE SON OF MAN.

As there is a difference of opinion in regard to the sign of the Son of man, perhaps it would not be time lost to look over the subject for a few moments, or notice some of the views that are claimed. Some suppose that the darkening of the sun and moon, falling of the stars, and on earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, all together make up the sign. Again, it is claimed that it is a sceptre. Then, that it will be the trumpet, with the resurrection of the dead. Others think it will be a bright cloud that will appear just before Christ's coming. Some may claim that it will be the shaking of the heavens. I have heard that one saw the hand-writing in the heavens, Christ's kingdom, or some such language. I think that was claimed to be the sign.

Now we think it cannot be all of them. As the subject should interest all of us who are looking for the return of the Master, I think it may do us all good to look the subject over, and try to get at the truth. If there is yet to be a sign, we want to know it. Why? Because that will be in connection with His coming; and, on the other hand, if the signs are all in the past, we want to know that.

If there is yet to be a sign, who knows anything about it? The darkening of the sun and moon, and falling of the stars, those things we can understand. We can understand the distress of nations. That those have all appeared you will agree. Yes. Now let us see what the disciples wanted to understand. What is the question asked (Matt. 24: 3)? "As he sat upon the Mount of Olives, the disciples came unto him privately, saying, Tell us, when shall these things be, and what shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world?" Mark you, they asked what should be the "sign of thy coming?" If they had in their minds the sign that some think is yet to appear, he did not explain any such sign, and therefore did not answer their question; for I find no description of the sign from our Savior or any of the apostles. Some of them who claim to know or guess what the sign of the Son of man is, may be right; but Jesus has told us nothing about what it will be, if this is yet to be a sign.

To the question, "What shall be the sign of thy coming?" look at the long history of events he gives. See how particular he is to mention all these things, so we need not be mistaken as to the way he will come, or whether he is here or there; "for as the lightning cometh out of the east and shineth unto the west, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." Tracing this history down, we can see that he was very particular to give us all the events that would transpire, but did not explain the sign of the Son of man. That it is not explained is positive. Now we might ask, Who knows what it will be? Some say this, some that. We might all say what we think it will be. I think I should have a right to call it what I thought, and so would you, and so on throughout the world; and what would it amount to?

We will notice verse 30th, where we find the expression, "sign of the Son of man:" "And then shall the sign of the Son of man"; "and then"—an adverb of time. What event shall we connect it with, if this is a sign? If we connect it with verse 29th, what portion? The last part of the verse reads, "And the powers of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall appear (not see, but appear) the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn. And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds." Is it not the Son that will make the tribes of the earth mourn? Something will cause the tribes to mourn. We think it will be the Son of man. Taking the view that some do, this sign will cause all the tribes to mourn; or, in other words, all the tribes will see this sign. That being the case, what shall we do with the scriptures, or how shall we harmonize the words of Jesus where he says, "As in the days of Noah and of Lot"? It says they "knew not until the flood came and took them all away; so also shall the coming of the Son of man be." If they see the sign of the Son of man, and it makes all the tribes of the earth mourn, will they not know something about it? I think the tribes will mourn, but it will be the Son of man that will cause them to mourn. It says "all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him,"—not of the sign.

I think the sign, as claimed by some, we know but little about. Says one, What will you do with it? Suppose we take this view, that they all make one sign. You will notice He told all that would happen before he came. Now after he had mentioned all that would take place, he answers the question that was asked, "What will be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world?" by saying, "Then (when? after these things happen) shall appear"; or, in other words, when all shall have taken place, the last one, which is "the powers of the heavens shall be shaken," the next is the Son of man. They have all appeared, are in the past. It looks as though the disciples were satisfied with the answer and asked no further questions. I think the disciples were quite inquisitive about some things. If they understood there was to be a sign, would they not have been likely to have asked the Master what it would look like? Then when they asked, "What shall be the sign?" if their question had not been a proper one, he would have corrected them, I think.

Let us pray God to give us the truth. If we are faithful, we shall know by and by. If there is yet to be a sign, let us watch. Let us watch and pray, and so live that we can hail Him with joy, and hear him say, Well done! I hope and pray all that may read this will have it said to them, "Come, ye blessed of my Father!"

Concord, N. H. John T. Kimball.

SEEK THAT YE MAY EXCEL.

"Forasmuch as ye are zealous of spiritual gifts, seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church."

This injunction brings before us the building of the temple at Jerusalem. We see young and old working with busy hands and earnest hearts,—all Israel interested.

Before the death of their beloved king David, the people had gladdened his heart, "because with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord" of their treasures of gold, silver, and precious stones. Having consecrated themselves to the service, they went on with the erection of the temple, and rejoiced as it rose in beauty and unrivalled splendor before them.

Other nations had built pyramids, temples, and wondrous works of art, but had not the motive that inspired the myriads of workers in Judea. Israel built for God, the Lord of heaven and earth, who had promised, "I will dwell among you."

When reading the scriptural account of the temple-building and the dedication, one is prompted for a moment to wish he might have been a fellow-laborer in the work, that he had been within the temple praising God when the "glory of the Lord filled the house."

Let us not forget that for us is reserved a greater honor. We may "excel to the edifying of the church," the spiritual temple of our God. Apostles, martyrs, prophets, have finished their course, and gone to rest.—Our day of labor is come. What have we to do? Most of us are so weak and poor spiritually, and withal so ignorant, what can we do?

Let us consecrate ourselves to God with an honest heart and willing mind. Let us believe that he receives us in Jesus, whose blood can purge the conscience from dead works to serve the living God. Let us trust Jesus to raise up, by his life-giving word, the buried talents of our soul. Then, losing no time in regrets for the past, or bewailing our want of power, "let us do good to all."

Look about us; there is plenty of work for willing hands. Enter our Sunday schools; there are goodly stones there,—infant and youthful minds to be taught the way of holiness. Many of them are already deeply imbued with the follies and sins of the world, and Zion mourns as she sees her jewels in the hand of the wicked one. Can we not do something in God's strength to wrest them from the enemy? Go to our social means of grace, specially where all may work as the Spirit impels them. The object of these gatherings is to "call upon his name, and make known his doings among the people." Have we done our part in this work, or have we only enjoyed, and perhaps in some instances only criticised?

Let us not excuse ourselves by pleading, "We have no talent for speaking or praying publicly." God commands, "Seek that ye may excel." He promises, "To him that hath shall be given." He threatens, "To him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath."

If we give ourselves to the work, God will supply the power, and we shall find many other ways besides those alluded to, in which we may help to build Zion. As the reward and result of our labors, it may be ours to see the glory of the Lord fill many human hearts with peace and purity. Even though we may not behold the end for which we have labored, we may hope to hear, "Well done, it was in thy heart to build."

Many who consecrated with joy to the Lord, at David's request, were gathered with him to their fathers before the temple was reared and dedicated, "yet their labor was not in vain in the Lord."

A beautiful illustration was given lately of the truth of God's word: "Prove me, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing that there shall not be room enough to receive it."

The pastor of one of our city churches called his people to a renewed consecration of themselves to God and the church. He desired those to rise who would pledge themselves to help in the work in any way he saw expedient. Several did so, but one sister hesitated. Her pastor might request her to pray vocally in the weekly prayer-meeting. She said to herself, "I cannot speak there, much less pray." Then she remembered the prayers she had been offering for a clean heart. She longed to be wholly sanctified, and knew that to be so she must be willing to take up every cross. She counted the cost, and decided to obey the call God had made for her service in his sanctuary. She made known her resolve to her pastor as he desired by rising.

She went to the next prayer-meeting with a trembling heart, but determined to be obedient to God. Her resolution was tested. She was requested to pray. She made the effort. A few stammering words, and utterance failed. She began again. "Lord, help me," was her cry. "I desire to please thee; I want to be wholly thine, to serve thee with my whole heart." For the time, regardless of the presence of others, she poured out her soul before God, pleading for a clean heart. God answered her. Prayer was turned to praise. Then she continued to pray for others, and, to use her own words, "It seemed as though God gave me all I asked him for."

Returning home, she told her companion what God had done for her. It was so easy for her unsealed lips to express the abundant joy of her heart. Previously, it had appeared almost impossible for her to speak to him of personal experience. Now she knew not when to stop. The poet's language suited her,—

"Salvation shall inspire our hearts,
And dwell upon our tongues."

Let us, in view of God's faithfulness, seek that we may excel, to the edifying of the church, remembering the promise, "If any purge himself from these [sins], he shall be a vessel of honor, sanctified, and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work."—Guide to Holiness.

THE ORNAMENT OF A MEEK AND QUIET SPIRIT.

I will tell you what I saw the other night in a parlor of one of our hotels. Two middle-aged Quaker ladies came gliding in, with calm, cheerful faces, and lustrous dove-colored silks. By their conversation, I found they belonged to that class of women among the Friends who devote themselves to traveling on missions of benevolence. They had just completed a tour of all the hospitals for wounded soldiers in the country, where they had been carrying comforts, arranging, advising, and soothing by their cheerful, gentle presence. They were now on another mission to the lost and erring of their own sex. Night after night, guarded by a policeman, they have ventured at midnight into the dance houses where girls are led to ruin; and with gentle words of tender, motherly counsel, sought to win them from their evil ways, telling them where they might go, the next day, to find friends, who would open to them an asylum, and aid them to seek a better life.

As I looked upon these women, dressed with such modest purity, I began seriously to think that the apostle was not wrong when he spoke about women adorning themselves with the ornament of a meek and quiet spirit; for the habitual gentleness of their expression; calmness and purity of the lines of their faces; the delicacy and simplicity of their apparel, seemed themselves a rare and peculiar beauty. I could not help thinking that fashionable bonnets, flowing lace sleeves, and dresses elaborately trimmed, could not have improved even their outward appearance. Doubtless their simple wardrobe needed but a small trunk in traveling from place to place, and hindered but little their prayers and ministrations. Now, it is true, all women are not called to such a life as this; but might not all women take a leaf from their book? I submit the inquiry.

It seems to me that there are many who go monthly to the sacrament, and receive it with sincere devotion, and who give thanks each time sincerely that they are thus made "members incorporate in the mystical body of Christ," who have never thought of this membership as meaning that they should share Christ's sacrifices for lost souls, or abridge themselves of one ornament, or encounter one inconvenience for the sake of those wandering sheep for whom He died. Certainly there is a higher economy which we need to learn,—that which makes all things subservient to the spiritual and immortal, and that not merely to the good of our own souls and those of our own family, but of all who are knit with us in the great bonds of human brotherhood.

The Friends, and other noble-hearted women of kindred spirit, have shown to womanhood, on the battle-field and in the hospital, a more excellent way, a beauty and nobility, before which all the common graces and ornaments of the sex fade; appear like dim candles by the pure celestial stars.—Friend of Virtue.

For the World's Crisis.

A FEW DISAGREEABLE THINGS.

1. To undertake to tell a person anything, and have him break in and do all the talking.

2. To be busy waiting upon a customer, and have another rush in and begin to ask questions and inquire the price of every thing they can think of.

3. To enter a store in a hurry, and see three or four clerks sitting round, and none of them start to wait upon you.

4. To attempt to get through a crowded street in a hurry, and overtake half a dozen females dressed in modern costume.

5. To be tried and perplexed all day with business, and go home at night and have your wife commence a detailed account of all the bad things the children have done through the day, and then get tried with you because you don't get tried with them, when they are so "glad to see father."

6. To have Sabbath schools one day in the week to instruct your children in the principles of the gospel of peace, and have day schools six days in the week where a large share of their time is taken up in practising the art of war.

7. To see ministers pass boldly by a poor brother, and bow and scrape to a rum-seller.

8. To see people profess to be great temperance men, and let their buildings to sell rum in.

9. To see christians pass by a temperance store, and buy their groceries in a rum shop.

10. To hear people tell how much they love the Lord, and never want to see him.

11. To meet with a brother or sister, and begin to talk about the blessed hope, and they begin to edge off to get out of your company.

12. To see brethren and sisters, who profess to love the Lord with all the heart, and act as though they loved the devil best.

13. To engage in prayer with a brother or sister, and hear them tell the Lord they believe his coming is near, even at the door; and the next thing hear them telling the children what they must do when they grow up to be men and women.

14. To be connected with a church or society that profess to believe the Lord is soon coming, and when you bring forward a strong argument to prove their position, they turn a cold shoulder, and tell you they do not believe you know any thing about it.

"SHOW THYSELF A MAN."

A man! That is just what religion would make you, just what the Bible would make you. Perhaps you do not think so. You may have imbibed that foolish and wicked notion that it is not manly to be a christian—a Bible christian. Many do. But look at some of the Bible christians. Look at Abraham, and Joseph, and Moses, and David, and Daniel. Look at Peter and John, and Paul, all men, noble, manly specimens of humanity. You could see this if you would but study their characters.

Well, the Bible will make you a man if you will obey its requirements and imitate its perfect Pattern. It is eminently calculated, as well as expressly designed, to make us men, intellectually and morally, men. Be a man in your aims. Aim at something worthy of a rational, accountable man. If you do, you will aim at something higher than money, or worldly fame, or sensual pleasure. You will aim at holiness and heaven.

Be a man in your principles. Cherish a love for justice, truth, self-control, benevolence. Be governed by them in all things. Swerve not from the right for any present advantage. In all circumstances, show thyself a man, by unflinching rectitude.

Be a man in understanding. The Bible expressly enjoins it. You have a mind capable of vast expansion and improvement. Cultivate it. Whatever your social position in our happy country, you can hardly be placed in circumstances in which you cannot command the means of self-improvement. Be a man in the daily business and intercourse of life. Never do a small thing,—a mean act. Be noble, generous, open-hearted and open-handed in all your dealings with men. Don't be narrow-minded, prejudiced, and selfish. Respect the rights and feelings, and even the prejudices of others. You will do this if you are a christian. A mean, tight-fisted, uncharitable, bigoted, mulish christian is a contradiction of terms.

Be a man in your judgment of other men. Do not let the quality of the coat, the color of the skin, or the weight of the purse determine your estimation of and conduct towards them. Be a man—a true man here, and you shall be a king and a priest unto God by and by. H. S. Pinkham.

DEATH.

The poet says in one of our hymns:—

"Why do we mourn departed friends,
Or shake at death's alarms?
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,
To call them to his arms!"

'Tis false! Jesus does not send any such "voice" "to call them to his arms." When he wants our friends, and us also, he will come and get us himself, with his holy angels, and not send such a cruel, heartless monster as Death on any such errand. How in the world any christian who reads the Bible as it reads can believe such dogmas, is strange, and especially so for Adventists to believe it, or sing it. It ought to be blotted out of every christian hymn book in the world, and all kindred sentiments in like manner.

Other poets sing different songs of death. Dr. Johnson in his poem of "Irene," says:—

"Oh! name not death! distraction and amazement,
Horror and agony are in that sound!
Let me but live! heap woes on woes upon me,
Hide me with murderers in the dungeon's gloom,
Send me to wander on some pathless shore,
Let shame and hooting infamy pursue me,
Let slavery harass, and let hunger gripe."

People may talk calmly of death, as if they were almost impatient to meet it; but when they think he is coming after them, they send for the doctor as soon as possible. They feel as Milton represents Adam to have felt, and expressing his horror thus:—

"But have I now seen death? Is this the way
I must return to native dust? O sight
Of terror, foul and ugly to behold,
Horrid to think, how horrible to feel!"

Truth! it is "horrid to think." Talk about death being a friend: 'tis a lie. No friend does such acts as death. A friend don't come and slay the companion of your life, with whom you walk its pathway, leaning on in sunshine and sorrow. A friend don't kill the sweet little one on your bosom, who never knew or thought of scarcely a summer's flower. A friend never follows you with a sword hanging above you, suspended as it were by a hair; nor awaits your coming, unconscious of danger, then stabs you to the heart. You would think one crazy or foolish to tell you that he who did all this, and more, was a kind friend. Common sense would say it was a lie.

And yet there are preachers of the gospel who talk as if death was a friend! Why they do not believe the Bible, which declares death an enemy, is queer. Two and two make four. It is a fact; no one disputes it. "The last enemy, death, shall be destroyed." It is a fact. And yet some dispute it. It is strange. Most, if not all, love life, and dread death. Tupper, in his "Proverbial Philosophy," speaks thus of this fact:—

——"Even to the best, the wise and pure and pious,
Death, repulsive king, thine iron rule is terrible:
Yea, even at the best, in company with buried kindred,
With hallowing rites, and friendly tears, and the dear old country church,
Death, cold and lonely, thy frigid face is hateful:
The bravest look on thee with dread, the humblest curse thy coming."

"The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not any thing," is the testimony of the Bible throughout.

Spiritualists call dying "passing on," and so make dead folks know more than live ones about the future life. And to see professed christians, who teach the same fancy, accusing Spiritualists of false teaching, is queer. They are both blind as bats in sunshine. Some are afraid to look for light, lest their darling old mouldy rotten theory of natural immortality of the soul should get smashed in the contest with truth eternal, viz., that man is mortal, and "the soul that sinneth, it shall DIE." J. N. Berry.

PERSONAL.

There may be some among the readers of the Crisis who would be interested by reading a little sketch of my history and experience.

I was left an orphan in early infancy, and have no recollection of ever seeing either my father or mother. I was the youngest of a family of eight children, four of each sex. The man who had the care of me through the period of my childhood and youth, changed his place of abode quite often; consequently I had some acquaintance with various localities, and was exposed to a variety of influences. I lived at a distance from all my relatives, so that I was a stranger to my own brothers and sisters. And that is the case to a great extent up to the present time.

But "the Father of the fatherless" was with me in my youth, and though it might seem that I was almost friendless, yet there was One who cared for me. I believe that I was the subject of prayer, and under the influence of the Holy Spirit from a very early age.

I have been told that my mother spent almost her last breath praying for her children, and I have sometimes felt that her blessing and the influence of her prayers had followed me through life.

In February, 1843, during a revival in the Congregational church in Northbridge, I found Christ precious, and rejoiced in hope of immortality. Soon after my conversion, I heard several lectures on the coming of the Lord. I was willing to embrace the view of his speedy coming, as there was no object so dear to me as my Savior. His coming was of all things most desirable, so long as he was my best friend, and I felt that I was ready to meet him with joy.

My oldest brother and his companion embraced the doctrine of the Second Advent at the same time, and have, so far as I know, been steadfast from that day to this. But, alas, I cannot say the same of myself. I offer no excuses, though I may say I was very young, and not established and settled in the faith, and was for many years without hearing or reading anything favorable to that doctrine, and but little in favor of religion at all. I was in many different places, but not often in company with living, earnest christians.

In September, 1845, I shipped for a whaling voyage, and sailed from New Bedford, for a cruise in the Indian Ocean. On the 24th of Nov., 1846, I came very near being killed by a whale. I lay forty days and nights in the dismal, noisome forecastle of the bark Mars, in such agony as few are ever called to pass through. My right hip was badly fractured, and the right arm crushed and broken. I have never since been able to step my full weight upon my right limb, and my hand and arm are also crippled, awkward and weak.

It is now nearly nineteen years since this accident occurred, and I do not expect to be made whole till Jesus comes. This event is my only hope. I am striving to be ready, and wish to do all I can to lead others to be also ready.

I have reason to think that some of the readers of this paper are very warm friends, and I trust none of them are my enemies. If I felt sure that as many as one in a hundred of those who read this would breathe one earnest, fervent prayer for me, it would encourage me greatly. Myself and my little family are in extreme poverty, and know not which way to turn for relief; but we will trust in the Lord. My first and last and constant desire is to be filled with "righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost." Pray for us, that we may be "perfect and entire, wanting nothing." Your unworthy Bro.,

TRAVELS AND LABORS.

Left Anapolis, Nova Scotia, in the steamer for St. John, Aug. 17th. Stopped over Sunday. Spoke to the Baptist people at Carlton half the day, being invited by their minister. Left St. John 21st for the W. Campmeeting. Met with many old veterans of the cross, and some younger soldiers that have started for the heavenly country, expecting to see their Master soon, and get their discharge.

29th, Alton Bay Campmeeting. Had a refreshing time with the pilgrims and strangers.

Sept. 5th to 11th, West Alton. Held nine meetings. Good time speaking to them. I think they need more good religion. 12th, Dover. An evening meeting. Quite a free time speaking. Signs of better times. 13th, Rye. Good evening meeting at Rufus Garland's. 15th, Lynn. Not so much interest as I could wish.

16th to 18th, West Abington, Mass. Had quite an interesting time. Some few there have just started on the pilgrim's journey. 20th, Worcester. Quite a free time. A number took part in the meeting. 23d to 25th, Abington, Ct. Think they have gained some new strength to go on the heavenly journey. Quite a number of converts there, who enlisted a few months ago.

26th. Morning prayer meeting at Bro. King's, Brooklyn. Good meeting. Some few there have lately professed religion. 27th, at Bro. Pond's, Brooklyn. Sixteen exhortations after sermon. 29th to Oct. 1st, Danielsonville. Had rather a discouraging time. Think they need more zeal in the cause of the Lord. Times have changed there. Some have died, and others have moved away. Hope they will awake to new obedience in the cause of their Master.

3d, Willimantic, to see my old friend, Nathan Delap, formerly of Nova Scotia. Had an evening meeting. He told me he thought they never had an Advent meeting there before. The best of attention. Hope that some good was done. 3d, Brooklyn. Prayer meeting. Oct. 4th, evening meeting at Bro. Pond's, Brooklyn. Quite a number took a part, among them the Baptist minister. Three arose for prayers, one a returned soldier, Bro. Pond's son.

5th to 7th, N. Foster, R. I., to the Conference. Had an excellent meeting. Harmony throughout. Quite an interest to hear an Adventist. Formed some new and happy acquaintances. Hope to meet them and all the Father's family soon in the better land. 8th, Danielsonville. Nothing special.

Sunday, 15th, River Point, R. I. Some stormy. Had a good meeting among the few that are left in the place. Some ten or twelve exhortations after preaching. Paul said,—"Suffer the word of exhortation." I think, brethren, if we would talk a little shorter, and let the church have something to do, things would move better. The Lord give us all wisdom in all things. In the evening at Natick. Rainy. Quite a good meeting.

Two months have swiftly passed away since I left my home to go to my native land, and travel over hills and through valleys to sound the alarm of the speedy coming of the Lord. Hope some little good has been done in the name of Jesus. If so, I wish to give all the glory to him. In a few weeks, the Lord willing, I shall leave for the N. S. shore. Pray for me, that I may go in all the fulness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ, and that some more may be sealed heirs of salvation, and shine as stars in God's everlasting kingdom.

A LOOKING GLASS.

Who is a deceiver and an antichrist?

He "who confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh." 2 John 1: 7.

Who is he that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh?

He that denieth that his second advent will be in the flesh; for if Jesus Christ is come in the flesh, and God has declared that he will not suffer his flesh to see corruption (Ps. 16: 10; Acts 27: 31), then he is in the flesh today, and will be in the flesh in all coming ages. Whosoever therefore hath seen Christ in the past, or shall see him at the second advent, ("and every eye shall see him." Rev. 1: 7), have seen and will see him in the flesh, and then the saints "shall be like him, for they shall see him as he is." 1 John 3: 2.

O, blessed hope, leading us to purify ourselves even as he is pure. O glorious prospect for the saints! In view of this Job could exclaim, "I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth," and that in his flesh he should see him. Job 19: 25, 26. And John says, Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward. . . . If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine (of Christ; see 2 John 9: 10), receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds" (false teaching). C. Goud.

THE DAY OF THE LORD AT HAND.

The day of the Lord is at hand, and then all men shall appear and be manifested as they really are; there shall be no borrowed colors in that day; men borrow the luster of christianity, but how many counterfeit masks will be burned in the day of God!

How many do I see who are sowing only the flesh; alas! what a crop will that be!

I find this world, now that I have looked upon it at both sides, is but the fool's idol. O Lord, let it not be the nest that my soul buildeth in. This world, in its gain and glory, is but the great and notable deceiver by which the sons of men have been beguiled these five thousand years.

Build your nest upon no tree here in the enemy's country, for God hath sold the forest to Death; and every tree upon which we would rest, is ready to be cut down, to the end we may flee and mount up and build our hopes on high, where death and judgment cannot come!

This body of sin and corruption embitters and poisons our enjoyments. Oh! that I were where I shall sin no more! Who of the children of God have not cause to say that they are weary of this vain life, and that they long to go home and enjoy rest?

I know no obligation the saints have to this world, seeing we fare upon the smoke of it. Oh! then let us pull up the stakes of our tent, and be moving toward our home, for here we have no continuing city! Only let us not grow weary; the miles to that land are every day growing fewer and shorter.

Why are not our thoughts more frequently than they are upon our country? Heaven casteth a sweet perfume afar off, to those who have spiritual senses.

Whatever creature you find to have no savor of Christ, let it have no more relish for you than the white of an egg.

Take heed, my friend; sinning against light will put out your candle, and stupefy your conscience, and bring upon it less feeling and sense of guiltiness; and when that is done, the devil is like a mad horse that hath broken the bridle, and runneth away with his rider whither he listeth.—Rutherford's Letters, A. D. 1628–61.

IMPORTANT TO LETTER WRITERS.

The public may be surprised to learn that the number of letters which are received at the dead-letter office at Washington, sent there under the new law which makes prepayment of postage compulsory, amounts to more than fifteen thousand per week. These figures denote great carelessness or ignorance of the law on the part of the senders of these letters. The public should remember that the old law allowing letters not pre-paid to be sent forward according to the address, and double postage collected of the receiver, has been repealed; that now every letter not entitled to be carried through the mail free, must have a stamp upon it, or it is sent to the dead-letter office. Especial care should be taken by every person to observe at the time of depositing a letter in the post office that the postage stamp is firmly fixed upon it. Such attentive scrutiny would soon reduce the number of letters "held for postage," and consequently prevent the embarassments and vexations now arising from the failure of such letters to reach their destination.—Ex.

"COALS OF FIRE."

"I'm sure I can not understand that verse," said Josey Carleton to his cousin. "I don't know what is meant by heaping coals of fire on one's head, and I think it is queer talk to be in the Bible."

His cousin Mary was called away before she could reply, and Josey went out with his sled. In a basement near his home lived a black woman, who made and sold cakes and pies. Josey loved to annoy this woman. He threw chips, bits of coal, and snowballs, down her doorway; he tried to slide against her as she toiled along bearing a heavy basket; and he spattered her windows with dirty water. Josey made himself the torment of Dinah's life. He was naturally mischievous, and moreover, was idle; and you know Satan is always finding work for idle hands. Josey coasted past the black woman's window, and then returned to torment her. Dinah was suprised by a snowball. She went to the door; but Josey had hidden. When she returned to her baking, Josey made a hard ball, and threw it into a basket of eggs that stood on the floor. Dinah had left the door open, as her kitchen was full of smoke. When she saw her eggs broken, she hurried out, crying, "Indeed, little master, I have borne this as long as I can. I'll go and complain of you to your folks, I will."

"Pooh! they won't let you in at the door; and if they did, ma wouldn't believe what you said," retorted Josey, running off with his sled. Near his own door he turned to make grimaces at Dinah; and, slipping on the ice, he fell heavily against the stone step. He lay insensible; and Dinah, forgetting her vexation, ran to his relief. She raised him tenderly in her arms, and carried him into the house; while his mother, who had come out in great alarm, sent for a surgeon. The first thing Josey saw when he opened his eyes, was Dinah chafing his temples, and looking compassionately upon him. His cheeks reddened with shame as he turned away. For several days Josey was quite ill, and every morning Dinah came to inquire after him. When she found him able to sit up and see company, she brought him a plate of delicate cakes. When she came into his room, Josey covered his face with his hands, saying,—

"O Dinah! how can you be so good to me?"

"Why, master," replied Dinah, "the Savior says to do so; to love everybody; and suppose you did tease me, don't I know you are sorry for it? and so I must be kind to you."

"Oh, dear!" said Josey, humbly, "I never could be so good to anybody who had acted so mean to me."

"You could if you loved Jesus Christ," said Dinah.

"I wish I did. O Dinah! I was very near dying."

Just then, Cousin Mary came in.

"Now, cousin," cried Josey, "I know what it means about coals of fire heaped on an enemy's head. Dinah has taught me. No punishment could have made me so sorry and ashamed as her goodness."—S. S. Visitor.

ANECDOTE OF A GREAT MAN.

Sir William Napier was one day taking a long country walk near Freshford, when he met a little girl, about five years old, sobbing over a broken bowl; she had dropped and broken it in bringing it back from the field, to which she had taken her father's dinner in it, and she said she would be beaten on her return home for having broken it; then, with a sudden gleam of hope, she innocently looked up into his face and said, "But ye can mend it, can't ye?" My father explained that he could not mend the bowl, but the trouble he could, by the gift of a sixpence to buy another. However, on opening his purse, it was empty of silver, and he had to make amends by promising to meet his little friend in the same spot at the same hour the next day, and to bring the sixpence with him, bidding her, meanwhile, tell her mother she had seen a gentleman who would bring her the money for the bowl next day. The child, entirely trusting him, went on her way comforted.

On his return home he found an invitation awaiting him to dine in Bath the following evening, to meet some one whom he specially wished to see. He hesitated for some little time, trying to calculate the possibility of giving the meeting to his little friend of the broken bowl, and of still being in time for the dinner party in Bath; but finding this could not be, he wrote to decline the invitation on the plea of a "pre-engagement," saying to us, "I cannot disappoint her, she trusted me so implicitly."—Bruce's Life of Sir William Napier.

A GOOD PROMISE.

A little boy in a city, who had no nice play-yard, was sometimes allowed to play in the street. His mother always told him to have nothing to do with boys who used bad words; and Johnny felt a great responsibility for good behavior when trusted alone. One day, another boy, to whom he had lent his drum, got vexed, and broke out in rude, disagreeable language. Johnny marched right up to the boy, and asked for the drum, saying, "I must go to my mother."

"Why? what for?" the children all inquired.

"Mamma never lets me play with boys who use bad words," said Johnny.

"Well, I won't use any more bad words if I may play with you," said the boy, sorry to lose the music of the drum.

"I'll ask my mother," said Johnny; "and, if she says I may, then I will; but I shouldn't like to learn such words."

"Tell your mother, Johnny," answered the boy, "I'm done now; she needn't ever be afraid any more of my using bad words; for I just won't, that's all, if she thinks so."

Johnny's mother watched the children at their play for a time afterward, and she never learned that the boy broke his promise not to use bad language any more.

That is the way to break any wrong habit,—say, I will not, and keep the promise like a man. And if every little boy who is taught at home to be good, and who wishes to make of himself a good man, would turn away from all wicked and mean-talking street-boys, they would be always reproved for bad words, and many, like the one who promised Johnny, would never let good people hear any thing bad from their lips again.

What little boys will do as Johnny did?—Freedman's Journal.

THE GIANT.

"And so you would like to be great:
A conqueror, too, did you say?
Well, if you will listen a while,
I think I can show you the way.

There's a giant about in the world,
That a great deal of mischief can do;
But, strong as he is, I have hopes
That he will surrender to you.

If you live but to love and to serve,
You will conquer this giant, I know;
You may vanquish him even to-day,
For Self is the name of your foe."

HE'LL NEVER DROP YOU.

A poor child lost her father and mother; and the woman who took care of the children, I am afraid, was not very kind. Clara did not like to be at home; and you often found her out-doors, sitting on the grass under the trees, with nobody but the birds and crickets to keep her company, looking quite neglected and forlorn. Poor Clara! One day, Mary, a dear little Sabbath-school scholar, went up to her, and said, "How do you do, Clara, to-day?"

"As well as I can be, with no father and mother," answered Clara.

"You have God for your Father, Clara," said Mary. "The Bible says he is the Father of the fatherless."

"Well," said Clara, "I've no mother."

Mary could not remember that it said God was mother to the motherless; but she said, "Clara, you've got Jesus; and the Bible says, 'When my father and mother forsake me, the Lord will take me up.'"

"And," said poor Clara, sadly, "I suppose I should lose him too."

"No," cried little Mary; "the Bible says Jesus Christ is the same, yesterday, to-day, and forever. If he once takes you up, Clara, he'll never drop you."—Freedman.

CHILDREN'S PRAYERS HEARD IN HEAVEN.

"When a child prays," says one, "he may rest assured that Jesus Christ heareth him. Jesus hears in heaven more beautiful songs of praise than you have sung just now; but when a little child invokes him, he listens to that child. You know what the great Luther once said. He was very much discouraged in his work, when he was told that some children had been praying for him. 'Ah!' said he, 'our cause is safe,—the children are praying!'"—S. S. Herald.

THE FIRST LESSON.

"Not a soul in the whole world will ever know it," said Robert Jones to himself, one day, when he was strongly tempted to do some wrong act.

"But God will know it," promptly whispered conscience; and Robert was afraid to do it.

"The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," says the Bible.

Robert had learned this first lesson.

SOW YE BESIDE ALL WATERS.

BRO. GRANT:—I send you some lines which were clipped from an exchange. They contain the true sentiment. Let them encourage some who almost feel discouraged and ready to faint, to work on, and continue to scatter the precious seed over hill and dale, and cease not "until the dial points to the noon below."

GEO. A. STREETER.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, this or that; or whether they both shall be alike good."—ECCL. 11: 6.

Sow ye beside all waters
Where the dew of heaven may fall;
Ye shall reap if ye be not weary,
For the Spirit breathes o'er all.
Sow, though the thorns may wound thee;
One wore the thorns for thee;
And though the cold world scorn thee,
Patient and hopeful be.
Sow ye beside all waters,
With a blessing and a prayer;
Name Him whose hand upholds us,
And sow thou everywhere.

Sow, though the rock repel thee,
In its cold and sterile pride;
Some cleft there may be riven
Where the little seed may hide.
Fear not, for some will flourish;
And though the tares abound,
Like the willows by the waters
Will the ripened grain be found.
Work while the daylight lasteth,
Ere the shades of night come on,
Ere the Lord of the vineyard cometh,
And the laborer's work is done.

Work in the wild waste places,
Though none thy love may own;
God guides the down of the thistle
The wandering wind hath sown.
Will Jesus chide thy weakness,
Or call thy labor vain?
The word that for him thou bearest,
Shall return to him again.
Oh! with thy heart in heaven,
Thy strength in the Master's might,
Till the wide waste places blossom
In the warmth of a Savior's light.

Watch not the clouds above thee,
Let the whirlwind round thee sweep;
God may the seed time give thee,—
But another's hand may reap.
Have faith, though ne'er beholding
The seed burst from its tomb;
Thou knowest not what may perish,
Or what be spared to bloom.
Room on the narrowest ridges
The ripened grain will find,
That the Lord of the harvest, coming,
In the harvest sheaves may bind.

H. C.

"THE TIME OF THE END."

Notes of preparation for these stirring times are already sounding. Even the cursory reader of the journalism of the day will be convinced of this. Already out of every sixteen of the able-bodied men in France, even 400,000 men are under arms, not as raw recruits, but as best disciplined troops; in addition to these, as a body of reserve, is a force of 100,000 more, a force equal to the whole equipment of the British army. A recent number of the Times, an indisputable authority, has called attention to this fact, as an item of current news rather than as a preparation for coming woes. Of French naval preparations little is known, save that dockyards and arsenals are alive with formidable preparedness; and thro' the espionage of the inscrutable man of mysteries, the Press tells not, and most probably is ignorant of their progress. We do know, however, that in the ports of Spain a gigantic steam fleet is in progress, paid for by French money, directed by French skill, mortgaged to the Man of Destiny, the man of the coming future. Morocco is being most mysteriously fortified. Egypt is occupied by troops from France, engaged in the chimerical project of the Suez Canal; its viceroy is inextricably the creature of France, through being hopelessly involved in this speculation. M. Billault, until his death the mouthpiece of His Imperial Master, told the world that if French troops be withdrawn from Syria, the ships bearing the tricolor shall hover o'er that coast, and on the least emergency Imperial troops shall land yet once again, and, unfettered by any treaty, will occupy the fastnesses of Syria, and thus this coveted land shall become the vassal of the growing empire. Who shall say what this Vindicator of oppressed nationalities is about to do for Venetia, for Hungary, for Poland?

The Italian kingdom, now that Cavour is no more, is but the dependent of a yet more extended empire, and its monarch but the puppet of the Third Napoleon. The troops of France for years have garrisoned the future metropolis of this re-constituted empire, even on the seven hills of Rome. The Algerine shore of Africa has long been a French province; so that very shortly we may expect the grand idea of the First Napoleon to become the accomplished enterprise of his successor: the Mediterranean Sea a huge French lake; the European nationalities a French empire, or rather the Roman empire; and the wondrous parvenu, who wields its sceptre, the representative of the seventh head—the eighth, yet of the seven.

These ten horns, or kings, must not be identified as yet; for we are expressly told (Rev. 17: 12) that they have received no (power as) kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. Is the time "as yet," to be referred to the time of St. John? and are these ten kingdoms to be dynasties of comparatively modern date, which occupy the area of the ancient Roman world? Probably so; this is far more probable than that they are to be entirely new kingdoms created in a great European revolution of the last times. Although they cleave not together, even as iron is not mixed with clay (Dan. 2: 43), yet in one particular they shall have one mind in giving their power and strength to the beast; they receive power as kings one hour with the beast. It is possible that as the First Napoleon created his relatives kings of Westphalia, Holland, Spain, and Naples; so the Third Napoleon may create a decem-regal kingdom out of the universal anarchy of the coming revolution. At the holy alliance of 1815, it was decreed that no Buonaparte should ever sit upon the throne of France; in thirty-three years Napoleon is at the helm of the French state in troublous times. He leagues himself with England, Turkey, Italy, against the Czar; he does exploits at Magenta and Solferino. He holds the Pope, and gives away his kingdom piecemeal. He gives away the imperial tiara of Mexico. He annexes Italian provinces, Savoy and Nice, to his growing empire. Nay, even already, as the presiding genius of commercial treaties, he is giving foretokens of the time when no man shall buy or sell save he that hath the mark of the wild beast, his name, or the number of his name. As the currency of a nation bears the image of its sovereign and his name, so it may be foreshadowed here that the whole re-constituted world shall have one common coinage re-cast with the impress of his supremacy, bearing his image, name, and number of his name.

What then is the number of his name, or the name of his number? Herein is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast, for it is the number (the numerical name) of a man, and his number is six hundred threescore and six. It must be borne in mind that the language in which St. John wrote was Greek. By the Greeks the letters of their alphabet were used for numbers, instead of the Arabic figures amongst ourselves, thus:

$\alpha = 1$	$\eta = 8$	$\xi = 60$	$\tau = 300$
$\beta = 2$	$\theta = 9$	$o = 70$	$\upsilon = 400$
$\gamma = 3$	$\iota = 10$	$\pi = 80$	$\varphi = 500$
$\delta = 4$	$\kappa = 20$	$\varrho = 90$	$\chi = 600$
$\epsilon = 5$	$\lambda = 30$	$\sigma = 100$	$\psi = 700$
$\varsigma = 6$	$\mu = 40$	$\varsigma = 200$	$\omega = 800$
$\zeta = 7$	$\nu = 50$

Thus in the word Napoleonti, the dative case of the Greek word, Ναπολεοντι, we have $50 + 1 + 80 + 70 + 30 + 5 + 70 + 50 + 300 + 10 = 666$. But why should the dative case be used? Because it was the form of any dedicatory inscription on a temple, or idol image. Thus St. Paul saw an altar at Athens with this inscription, to agnosto Theo to the unknown God (Acts 16), and at Rome he would have read Jovi Capitoloni, or Statori. So under this image of the wild beast the seer of Patmos read Napoleonti, in the dative case. It is a very significant coincidence that the two names Louis Napoleon in Greek characters also form the same mystic number, thus: $\Lambda = 30$, $o = 70$, $\iota = 10$, $\varsigma = 200$, $N = 50$, $\alpha = 1$, $\pi = 80$, $o = 70$, $\lambda = 30$, $\epsilon = 5$, $o = 70$, $\nu = 50$.

The meaning of the Greek word Napoleon would mean the lion of the thicket, and most singularly we read (Jer. 4: 7) in reference to the desolation of Palestine by the last great potentate, "The lion from the thicket is come up, the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way: he is gone forth from his place to make desolate the land." The name of this potentate is Charles Louis Napoleon Bonaparte. By an overruling Providence he has chosen to be designated by the very name which fulfills the requirements of prophecy. Had he been called Charles Bonaparte, who could have found a clue to the name of the number?

I find that no fewer than seven different writers, several years before the coup d'etat, anticipated the revival of the Napoleon dynasty, when few ever dreamed that it could ever be resuscitated. They also determined from prophetic foreshadowings that this resurrection should take place earlier than the year 1864–8. As early as 1815 itself, as early as Napoleon's fall at Waterloo, James Hatley Frere gave out to the world, despite the Congress of the Holy Alliance, that a facsimile of the First Napoleon should arise, short only of actual identity. Three years later his findings are confirmed and reiterated by no less an authority than the learned prebendary, Stanley Faber, late Master of Sherburn Hospital. Two years later, 1820, Rev. H. Gauntlett, an able expositor, repeats the assurance: and in the year 1825 the eloquent voice of the gifted Edward Irving might have been heard arresting the attention of admiring crowds by the announcement of the beast that was, but is not, but very soon should be. This day is this scripture being fulfilled in your ears, and ere our youthful sons have reached an early manhood, this revived wild beast shall be caught, taken alive, and cast into the burning flame (Dan. 7: 11), even into a lake of fire burning with brimstone. (Rev. 19: 20.)

But an image of this Napoleon is to be set up—yea, in the holy of holies of Jerusalem's restored temple. You will say, Can this be possible in these days of enlightenment, of independence, and of manly progress? Let me remind you that such has been the case in the dynasties that have been before. In the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon, surging multitudes out of all peoples and of every language fell down and worshipped the golden image which Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up, and he that proved disloyal was cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace! To Medo-Persian monarchies such obeisance was continuously paid. The Grecian Alexander proclaimed himself the son of Jupiter Ammon. The flatterers of Cesar (gifted) honored him with worship on his "apotheosis." But in these, our days, can such be possible? Even now, in his embryo estate, Napoleon III. is not averse to almost idolatrous adulation. Listen to the addresses with which he is hailed on his progress through the provinces. He is styled by the elite of each department as well as by the humbler bourgeois, the Savior, the Regenerator, the elect of God, the Messiah of God. 'Twas thus with the First Napoleon. He asked his courtiers what men thought of him? One replied, "Some think you an angel, sire, some a devil; but all think you are more than man."

A prefect one said in a public address, in the ears of listening thousands, "God made Buonaparte and rested from his labors." Nay, even Jewish Rabbins, convoked at Paris, styled him, "The Lord's anointed Cyrus, the image of the Divinity"; and this was no metaphorical language, nor oriental exuberance of speech, for they blended his name and that of Josephine with the ineffable name of Jehovah, and inscribed it upon the ark of the covenant, which was further surmounted by the eagle of Imperial France. Nay, more, he accepted the title, Your Providence, which is a specimen of the names of blasphemy upon the brows of the seven-headed monster, with his healed wound. To Napoleon III. has been addressed the parody of the divine prayer, "Our Sire, which art in power, Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done abroad as it is done at home." Such are the indications of what may be expected when this wild beast shall arise in the fulness of his strength, shall scatter, tear and slay.

This power of France is culminating even now. The policy of England has been neutrality and non-intervention, and the strengthening of the entente cordiale with our imperial ally. Most probably, according to the best informed journals, the next Parliament will cause retrenchments in naval and military expenditure, the reduction of arms, the paying off of ships—or perhaps ships and regiments may be scattered far away to remote dependencies—but all this should be to weaken ourselves, to strengthen our neighbors. Soon the real state of affairs shall be made known, and the man of the coming destiny shall come up, even the lion from his thicket, and shall get for himself the pre-eminence among the nations.—The Rainbow.

For the World's Crisis.

THE JUBILEE.

(Concluded.)

On page 65 of "The Book of Daniel Opened," we have noticed that the first jubilee occurred B. C. 1563, which was the fiftieth year from the time the Lord God of Israel first proclaimed liberty to the people, or instituted the jubilee; saying, "I am come down to deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians, and to bring them . . unto a land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3: 8.) In proof of this, "Aaron was fourscore and three years old" at that time (Ex. 7: 7), and "an hundred and twenty and three years old when he died," "in the first day of the fifth month," "in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt" (Num. 33: 38, 39.) Forty years placed against the first day of the fifth month of the fortieth year, would give the first of the fifth month in the year before the leaving of Egypt; and if Aaron was at that time eighty-three years, two months, and ten days old, we will have the tenth day of the seventh month, the day of atonement, for the time at which the Lord "came down" "out of the most holy" to bless his people, in bringing them into the goodly land (Ex. 3: 8); and forty-nine years from this day brings us to the proclamation of the first jubilee, in the beginning of the fiftieth year from this epoch. Therefore, thus saith the Lord: "A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you." Lev. 25: 11.

But since some place the first jubilee in the fiftieth year from the time that the children of Israel entered Canaan, it becomes necessary to give that, at least, a passing notice. Our first objection to this view of the matter is, that instead of the first jubilee occupying the space of forty-nine years, as all of the others, it would not be proclaimed until the end of eighty-nine years from the beginning of the dispensation of jubilees; that is, of the Mosaic dispensation, under which they were observed. The reason they offer for placing the first jubilee in the fiftieth year from the time Israel entered Canaan is, the supposition on their part, that with the entering of the land the sabbatical year commenced; but since we have clearly proven that the Sabbath commenced forty years before, or with the beginning of the Mosaic dispensation, their opinion as to the time of the first jubilee is clearly incorrect. It is true that the law required, saying, "When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the Lord"; but this does not teach that that was to be the first sabbatical year. If the land could "enjoy her sabbath while she lieth desolate, without them" (Lev. 26: 43), it does not even teach that that was the first sabbath of the land. Indeed, it cannot date even the beginning of the sabbath of the land, for when the law of the sabbath of the land was first given, there was not a word said about their waiting until they came into the land, but reads thus: "Six years thou shalt sow thy land" (Ex. 23: 10.) According to this law, the sabbath of the land could not have commenced at a later date than the year before they entered Canaan, for those that received their inheritance on the east of Jordan had their land given in the year in which Aaron died (Num. 32: 1–42.) Now, according to the express language of the law; the "six years thou shalt sow thy land" could not date from a later epoch than the year before they crossed the Jordan. This is a clear proof that, by the expression, "then shall the land keep a sabbath," Moses did not mean that that was to date the beginning of the cycle of seven years; but was rather a prophecy of the time at which they should enter the land; that is, in a sabbatical year, occurring at that time, the land should "keep a sabbath unto the Lord." If the sabbatical year had been only a sabbath of rest for the land, the first sabbath would have occurred in the seventh year from the time they came in possession of the land, on the east of Jordan; but from the eleventh chapter of Joshua, it would appear that they were at that time involved in war; hence could not have been a sabbatical year. But if Moses meant that the land should then "keep a sabbath," because the sabbatical year would at that time occur; then the first sabbath of rest to the land was the second year after they crossed the Jordan; and we have already proven that that was a sabbatical year; for in that year Joshua "read all the words of the law . . . before all the congregation of Israel, with the women and the little ones and the strangers" (Josh. 8: 35), which was only required during the seventh or sabbatical year.

From the expression, "The Lord thy God hath blessed thee in all the work of thy hand" (Deut. 2: 7), we conclude that they had not been idle during the forty years in the wilderness. They may have all the time been cultivating the land and letting it rest the seventh year. But whether they had or not, one thing is clear, the sabbatical year of release was enjoined "in the day that the Lord brought them forth out of the land of Egypt" (Jer. 34: 13.) And according to the law, we are required to number not seven sabbaths of rest to the land, but "seven sabbaths of years." Five of these sabbaths of years were in the past when Israel entered the land, hence but two was wanting to make out the seven.

That the year of release was the sabbatical year, observe that it was "at the end of every seven years" (Deut. 15: 1); and yet the time spent in labor was but six. "Six years he shall serve thee" (Ex. 21: 2), to which add the sabbath of rest for the servant, and we have seven, the time of the next release. This makes it clear, that the sabbatical year commenced, not with the entering of the land, but with the beginning of the dispensation of sabbaths, that is of the Mosaic dispensation; hence, the seven, not sabbaths of rest to the land, but "sabbaths of years," cannot extend beyond the beginning of the fiftieth year from the time they left Egypt.

It would appear that those who place the first jubilee eighty-nine years after Moses left Egypt, contradict the word of God, for saith the Lord, "in the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possessions"; but Israel being at that time in bondage, did not return to their possessions."

In proof of this, they were in the wilderness forty years, after which Joshua lived twenty-five years. The Anarchy eighteen years, after which "the Lord sold them into the hand of the heathen "eight years (Judges 3: 8), 40, 25, 18, 8, are 91 years, from which take 89, and we have two years for the remaining time of their bondage, hence could not at that time have returned to their possessions.

The Lord gave "the land of Canaan to the children of Israel for a possession," and the particular time at which they were to receive this their possession was in the year of the first jubilee. "In the year of this jubilee, ye shall return every man unto his possessions." (Lev. 25: 13.)

Now all that remains to prove the year of the first jubilee, is to learn the time at which Israel did thus return unto their possessions. And since they did "return every man unto his possessions" in the ninth year after crossing the Jordan, which was the forty-ninth after leaving Egypt, that year is settled and fixed as the time of the first jubilee.

"The jubilee of the children of Israel" having then come, said Joshua unto them, "Now return ye, and get ye unto your tents, and unto the land of your possession." (Josh. 22: 4.) To show that the express language of the law of the jubilee was at this time carried out, we will here give it on opposite columns, fulfilled in the forty-ninth year.

LAW OF THE JUBILEE.

"In the year of this jubilee, ye shall return every man unto his possession." LEV. 25: 13.	"And then shall ye return every man unto his possession which I have given you."—DEUT. 3: 20.
"And ye shall return every man unto his family."—LEV. 25: 10.	"We will not return unto our houses, . . . our little ones and our wives," "until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance."—NUM. 32: 18–26; that is, not until the jubilee; that the law may not be broken, which saith not before, nor after, but "in the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession."

Those who received their inheritance on the east of Jordan, left their families, their "wives," and their "little ones" "there in the cities of Gilead" (Num. 32: 26), saying, "we will not return unto our houses until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance" (Num. 32: 18); that is, not until the jubilee, for "when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received" (Num. 36: 4); for "in the year of this jubilee, ye shall return every man unto his possession" (Lev. 25: 13); and this jubilee occurred in the ninth year after crossing the Jordan; that is, the forty-ninth from the leaving of Egypt; for in allusion to what was accomplished at that time, Moses said, "And then shall ye return every man unto his possession, which I have given you" (Deut. 3: 20). Moses "was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad unto his daughters." "And when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received" (Num. 36: 2, 4). And the time at which "the Lord gave them an inheritance among the brethren of their fathers" (Josh. 17: 4) was the forty-ninth year after leaving Egypt.

The jubilee formed a part of the Mosaic dispensation, and the space occupied by each jubilee is forty-nine years; hence the first jubilee could not have occurred at a later epoch than the fiftieth year from that which was to them "the beginning of months" (Ex. 12: 2); for it is expressly declared, "a jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you" (Lev. 25: 11). As the passover was an annual festival observed in commemoration of the Lord's passing over the first born of Israel; so the jubilee was at the end of every forty-nine years observed in commemoration of their being delivered from Egyptian bondage (Lev. 25: 54, 55). Hence, as the passover was observed at the proper time, in the second year after leaving Egypt; so the jubilee must have been observed at its proper time, in the forty-ninth year after. It was proclaimed on "the day of atonement" (Lev. 25: 9); the day on which the high priest "came out of the most holy to bless the people"; for on that day the Lord "came down" "out of the most holy to bless" his people, by breaking the bonds of Egyptian bondage, and bringing them "into a land flowing with milk and honey" (Ex. 3: 8). Forty-nine years from this the institution of the jubilee, that is from the tenth day of the seventh month, B. C. 1612, brings us to the tenth day of the seventh month, B. C. 1563, that is, to the beginning of the fiftieth year; hence "a jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you" (Lev. 25: 11).

Having now settled the time of the first jubilee, the cycle of forty-nine years becomes one of the clearest proofs of the correctness of our chronology; for the eighteenth year of Josiah is admitted by both Jews and Gentiles to be a year of jubilee.

Those who are willing to admit that the eighteenth of Josiah is proven to be a jubilee, must admit the strict correctness of our chronology, seeing that there cannot be a mistake except by complete cycles of forty-nine years.

WILLIAM C. THURMAN.

EXPECTING THE SAVIOR.

AN ESSENTIAL FEATURE IN TRUE CHRISTIAN CHARACTER.

(From the "Blessed Hope," by Dr. McCaul.*)

We now proceed to consider, particularly, what this "waiting" is, as expressed in the text by the words "looking for that blessed hope;" and to show, from the nature of the duty, that the practice of waiting for the second advent is an essential feature in the character of a true christian. The glorious coming of the Lord is represented in Scripture as the promised return of a kind Master to his faithful servants. To wait for that which is promised is an exercise of faith. It is likened to the sudden coming of a thief, against which we have been warned: to take heed to the warnings of God is an effect of holy fear. It is compared to the return of the beloved Bridegroom: that the bride should wait with earnest desires for his return is an evidence of love. It is set forth as the return of the Lord to his disciples, for which he commandeth them to watch. To wait for it, then, is an act of obedience; but in whichever of these four points of view we consider the practice of waiting for the second advent, whether as an exercise of faith, an effect of holy fear, an evidence of love, or an act of obedience, it is equally an essential feature in the character of a true christian. Faith is an essential feature of a true christian, for "without faith it is impossible to please God." The promises of God are the object of faith: the promise of the Lord's return is one of those most frequently repeated. Where then is faith in this promise, if the practice of waiting for it is wanting? Remember, brethren, that faith is an operative principle, and, whatever be its object, it produces certain effects. When faith fixes upon the promise of forgiveness of sins it drives to prayer and confession. When it lays hold upon the promise of the Holy Spirit for sanctification, it produces earnest supplicatian that will not be silenced until the promise is fulfilled. When it looks to the often repeated promise of the Lord's return, it generates a habit of waiting for it with patience. The servants, who believe that their Lord will return according to his promise, gird their loins, put on the best apparel, and hold all things in readiness; and though the shades of evening should set in, they despair not; and though the darkness of midnight should begin to pass, they slumber not; but keep their lights burning, and hearken in watchful silence to every distant sound that may perhaps give notice of their Lord's approach. And, if they speak, if the silence of expectation be broken, it is to rouse the slumbering, or to ask, "Watchman, what of the night?" or to discourse about the happy meeting: for their Lord has promised to return, and they believe his promise. Faith in the promise necessarily produces these effects. When, then, the effects follow not, where is the faith? And, where there is no practice of waiting, what evidence is there of faith in the Lord's promise?

Some may perhaps say that it is not yet time to expect the Lord's advent; it would therefore be folly to wait for it; when it is near, it will be time enough to look for it. If there be in this congregation any in this faithless state of mind, let me remind them that this is exactly the excuse of the unprofitable servant whose portion is appointed with the unbelievers: mark these words, "with the unbelievers." He says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." It is not so near—no need of watching yet! You will perhaps answer, We are watching for death, for death will certainly arrest us before the Lord come again. I ask in reply, Where has the Lord commanded you to watch for death, instead of watching for his second coming? Tell me the chapter and the verse. I ask you, in the second place, what reason you have for thinking that death will surprise you sooner than the second advent? who revealed to you the day and the hour of which no man knoweth? You will reply, No man hath revealed it to me: my belief that death will precede the second advent is founded on no declaration of Scripture; my own reason tells me of it. So many generations have already passed away without the Lord's coming that it is now most probable that the present will pass away in like manner. If this be your mode of arguing, then, beyond all doubt you believe more firmly in the probable conclusions of your own reason than in the words of your Lord and Master. Where then is your faith? And where your likeness to those disciples of whom our Lord says, "Blessed are those servants whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching?" But, whatever you may think of your state, you cannot possibly deny that steadfastly to trust in Christ's promise, confidently to expect its fulfillment, and humbly to obey his commands, is an indispensable evidence of the reality of that faith without which no man has a right to esteem himself as one of Christ's true disciples.

This practice of waiting is also compared to the state of a householder, who expects his house to be attacked, but knows not the hour when the thief may come. He therefore remains in a state of suspense and fear, and, consequently, of active vigilance. He knows that his property, and perhaps his life, are at stake; he, therefore, takes heed that his heart be not overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, or with the cares of this life, and so the thief comes unawares. This represents the habit of holy fear in which the true christian lives: contemplating the awful transactions of the great day of Christ's appearing, and remembering that it will come as a snare upon all them that dwell upon the earth; such a state of mind as the Apostle describes when he says, "We must all appear before the judgment-seat of Christ: that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad: knowing therefore the terror of the Lord we persuade men." (2 Cor. v. 10, 11.) Need I stop, my brethren, to prove that this is an essential feature in the character of a true christian? No; your consciences assure you that no man is a true christian without it.

The coming of the Lord is likened also to the return of the Bridegroom long delayed but surely promised. And the Bridegroom is chief among ten thousand. To him the bride owes life and liberty. He delivered her from death, and ransomed her from captivity. For he left his Father's house, forsook his Father's throne, and took upon himself the form of a servant, endued countless hardships, and suffered countless wrongs. And the bride is not insensible to his love, nor indifferent to the promise of his coming. The days of his absence are days of mourning. "She seeketh him whom her soul loveth: she seeketh, and findeth him not." (Song iii. 1.) She counteth the days "until the winter be past, and the rain over and gone; until the fig-tree putteth forth her green figs" (Song ii. 11–13); for that is the promised sign of his approach. She crieth, "Make haste, my beloved." "The Spirit and the bride say, Come." And were it otherwise, were the bride happy and content without the bridegroom, careless and indifferent to his coming, where were her love? And when persons calling themselves christians are perfectly satisfied with the present state of things, and utterly indifferent to the Lord's return, where is their love? Does that man really love the Lord Jesus Christ who almost never meditates upon his union with him; who never prays for his coming; who never looks at the signs of the times to see whether it be near? I speak not now of those who have never fled for refuge to the Savior, and who have therefore no experience of his forgiving love (for them to pray for the Savior's return would be presumption): but of those who profess to have found forgiveness of sins, and justification by faith. Have you no desire to behold him who purchased for you these blessings with his precious blood? To see him as he is, and be like him; to fall down before his throne, with a heart overflowing with gratitude; and to join in the glorious song of the redeemed, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain." But, whatever be your state, acknowledge that to wait in humble and earnest expectation for the Lord's return, as the bride waits for the bridegroom, is an evidence of love; and that love is an essential feature in the character of a true christian.

Lastly, to wait for the Lord's coming is an act of obedience: and without obedience to talk of faith, hope, love, or any other christian grace is nothing short of madness.

"Ye are my friends," saith our Lord, "if ye do whatsoever I command you." If, therefore, the Lord had but once given a command to watch for his second advent, it would have been sufficient to bind us to obedience: but I know of no command more frequently repeated in the New Testament than this. I have already, in this discourse, remarked how often it is insisted on, and how variously it is applied; I will now only notice how often it occurs as a command. It occurs as an express and positive command at least eight times in the Gospels, (Matt. 24: 42, 45; 15: 13; Mark 13: 33, 35, 37; Luke 12: 35–40; 21: 36,) five times in the Epistles, (1 Thess. v. 1–6; Titus 2: 12, 13; James v. 7, 8; 1 Pet. 4: 7; 2 Pet. 3: 14,) and twice in the Revelation of St. John, (Rev. 3: 3; 16: 15;) altogether fifteen times. It is a command given in the most solemn manner, with a blessing attached to those who obey it, ("Blessed are those servants whom the Lord, when he cometh, shall find watching,") and a curse pronounced upon them who disobey it, ("They shall be cut asunder, and have their portion appointed with the unbelievers.") It is a command accompanied by a declaration that is applicable to all, so that no one can hold himself excepted. "What I say unto you I say unto all, Watch." It is a command so clearly expressed, and so exactly limited by the context, that it cannot be interpreted figuratively, nor wrested to apply to anything but the coming of the Lord in glory. For in the Gospels it is preceded by an account of the judgment; and in the Epistles, connected with the resurrection of the dead, or the conflagration of the world. What then is the state of a man who deliberately disobeys such a command as this? If obedience be at all times necessary, is it not in such a case indispensable? Will any man dare, under any pretext whatsoever, to dispense himself or others from such a command as this? Or can any man so grossly deceive himself as to imagine that he is a true christian, when he is living in wilful disobedience to his Lord's plainly revealed will? There is but one infallible mark of a true christian,—obedience to his Lord's commands; and he that waiteth not for the Lord's coming hath it not. He may possess great knowledge of the mysteries of the Gospel, but he is "a child of disobedience." You see, then, brethren, that whether we look at the express testimonies of Scripture, or consider the nature of waiting for the second advent as it is set forth in Scripture, as an exercise of faith, a state of holy fear, an effect of love, or an act of obedience, my assertion is true; the practice of waiting for the second advent of the Lord is an essential feature in the character of a true christian.—Prophetic Times.

ELIJAH YET TO COME.

Some think that the words, "I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of that great and dreadful day of the Lord," (Mal. 4: 5,) was fulfilled in the advent of John the Baptist; and that all we are to understand by the promise of Elijah preceding the second advent is merely the spirit of preparation being infused every where previous to that event. But this does not seem to me to exhaust the words of scripture. For instance, our Lord says: "Truly Elijah must first come, and restore all things." Mat. 17: 11. But then he adds, "Elijah is come already." The two things seem inconsistent; but it does appear to me from various reasons that Elijah will personally precede Christ who comes to reign, just as John preceded Christ who came to suffer. Recollect that Elijah needs no resurrection from the dead; he never saw death; he was translated; and why translated, unless for some sublime mission similar to that which is here indicated? Let us mark well our Lord's words. He says: "Truly Elijah shall first come and restore all things." But if John the Baptist was Elijah, can it be said of John that he restored all things? He did not restore anything at all; he preached repentance. Then if you say, How do you explain the other passage—viz.: "Elijah is come already?" I explain it by referring to the corresponding passage in Luke 1: 16, 17, where it was said of John the Baptist, "he shall go before him in the spirit and power of Elijah." But he was not Elijah. Our Lord says of John the Baptist that "He came and they knew him not, but have done unto him whatsoever they listed; likewise also shall the Son of Man suffer of them." What does he here say? He says John the Baptist came, and they killed him, but that cannot be said of Elijah; he never was killed; he was translated; he is in glory; and if he had come to the earth in the person of John the Baptist, he could not have been killed. But certain parties appealed to John himself. They came to him and said, "Art thou Mesiah? He said no. Art thou Elijah? And he said I am not Elijah."

Well, John the Baptist surely knew who he was, and yet he denied that he was Elijah who was to come and restore all things. The passage, "This is Elijah that ought to come," the French translators have given us the true meaning of: "C'est l' Elie qui devait venir." This is THAT Elijah who ought to come now, at this moment; is John the Baptist; he is come in the spirit and power of Elijah; but Elijah personally is yet to come and precede my glorious advent to triumph and reign. It does seem highly probable that before our Lord comes, Elijah, who is living in the body, who never died, and is not therefore to be raised from the dead, will herald the return of the Prince of Peace; just as a suffering Baptist came to precede a suffering Christ, so a glorified Elijah will come to precede a glorified and triumphant Christ. At least I can not explain these passages in any other way. —Dr. Cummings.

For the World's Crisis.

DON'T BE TOO POSITIVE.

Always allow other people their opinions, and do not be too sure you are right. Remember if you are right in one particular, you may be wrong in others. Do not be deficient, or boldly contradict; but calmly express your reasons, and patiently bear with those whose understanding is less clear, or whose reason is disturbed by passion. Rather than "it is," and "it isn't," "you did," and "you didn't," say, "it seems to me," or, I think it is," or, "if I mistake not." This should not be. Then let us avoid all rude and ill-natured expressions; as calling one foolish, obstinate, or provokingly stupid. Our aim should be to advance the truth, not ourselves.

It often happens that much time is wasted in matters of no great consequence. One says the lesson is hard, another says it is not; and there is a fuss. All this shows a wrong spirit, and causes much bitterness, both in words and feelings. While in all cases concerning duty and happiness we are faithful to the right, let us remember to hold up the truth in meekness, and love God more and serve him better.

For the World's Crisis.

IS THE PASSAGE IN MARK 16: 9-20 GENUINE?

I am requested to say, through the Crisis, "how much of the sixteenth chapter of Mark is found in the original manuscripts?"

The manuscripts are "original" only with respect to the printed editions. They range from the fourth century to the invention of printing. The autographs of the sacred writers are of course lost.

The last twelve verses of Mark's Gospel are known to be disputed. And this is the only considerable passage in the New Testament alleged to be spurious, or interpolated, except that in John's Gospel, from 7: 53 to 8: 11. The "various readings" are mostly in single words or brief clauses, very few of which at all affect the sense. The dispute in respect to the present passage is of considerable interest, partly for the extent of the passage, partly for the "signs" here predicted to "follow those that believe," and partly because one clause is so often quoted in respect to baptism as a condition of salvation.

The passage is retained as genuine by Lachmann and Tregelles. It is rejected by Tischendorf, and by Griesbach it is marked as most probably to be rejected. The Sinaitic Manuscript also omits it. In the "Critical Concordance" which is now growing toward completion the passage will be left with the authorities as just stated, unless a special note is added respecting other opinions and especially the manuscripts.

I will here add the opinions of two or three writers, and then quote the substance of the manuscript authority as given by Tischendorf.

Mr. F. A. Scrivener, in his "Introduction to the Criticism of the New Testament," holds the passage to be genuine. Speaking of this with that in John's Gospel, he says, on p. 7, "We shall hereafter defend these passages, the first without the slightest misgiving, the second to a high degree of probability, as entitled to be regarded as authentic portions of the Gospels in which they stand." Coming to his argument, pp. 429–432, he says: "The authority of the Sinaitic Codex has since been thrown into the opposite scale, yet we see no cause for altering our judgment, though it may be proper to speak with less confidence." The argument is of such a nature that it could not be intelligibly transferred without being much enlarged. But one important point may be named, that is, that where the Vatican Manuscript omits the passage, a column is left blank, and this is the only blank of the kind.

On the other hand, T. S. Green, in his "Developed Criticism," concludes his argument, pp. 49–53, by saying: "Thus does the hypothesis of very early interpolation satisfy the body of facts in evidence." He lays stress on the statement of Eusebius that in his time the accurate copies close the Gospel with the words "for they were afraid" (v. 8); and of Jerome, who affirms that the passage is wanting in nearly all the Greek MSS.

Dean Alford, in his edition of the Greek Testament with English notes, says, "The passage . . . appears to have been added by another hand in very early times." He gives the arguments pro and con, thinks the internal evidence also is against the authorship of Mark, and conjectures that the last leaf of the original Gospel was torn away. The argument for this conjecture is the difficulty of supposing that the Gospel ended with verse 8, and the fact that various manuscripts give another closing passage instead, and some manuscripts give both passages.

I may add that De Wette, in his commentary, seems to doubt the genuineness of the passage, and he gives some history of the controversy. Among our own biblical scholars it is omitted by Andrews Norton, who thinks it was "added by some other writer to supply a short conclusion to the work, which some cause had prevented the writer from completing."

Thus the doctors are found to disagree. And they dissent with such arguments as render it difficult to decide the question by the present body of manuscripts. The manuscript facts are given most briefly and fully by Tischendorf, of which the principal are as follows:

1. The passage is omitted in the Vatican MS., (B). This was the oldest known until the discovery of the Sinaitic, which also omits, as above stated. (The oldest MS. is not of course the best; only, other things being equal, the older the better.) The passage is omitted also in the manuscript k of the Latin version, of the fifth or perhaps the fourth century, and which gives another passage instead. Also in an Armenian manuscript, and in an Arabic of about the ninth century. Certain MSS. also note the passage as doubtful, with an asterisk.

2. The manuscript L, of the ninth century, attests that earlier ones had other endings. And this argument is supported by two other MSS. named.

3. This is also apparent from the notes (scholia) of numerous manuscripts, to which add four names besides the authority of Eusebius and Jerome.

4. The passage finds no place in the "sections" of Ammonius or the "canons" of Eusebius. Of this several proofs are adduced.

On the other side is the great majority of the manuscripts now known, and of copies of the versions. Also citations by early Fathers as far back as Irenæus.

In conclusion I will say that while Scrivener and Alford, both conservative and careful, differ so widely, we cannot look for any agreement among critics very soon. And while such differences long continue in high quarters, the unlearned but judicious preacher may quote disputed passages in argument, but as disputed passages, which can demonstrate nothing so long as the doubt of genuineness remains respectable. "A FREE PAPER."

We have often heard conversation about "a free paper," but have never yet seen one, neither do we ever expect to; but should such a strange thing appear, we think it would be a very unpopular affair,—very much like a swill pail, full of nauseous things, fit only for the place where slops are thrown. But what is a free paper? By a "free paper" is not meant one that costs its readers nothing, but one in which all parties can have a chance to speak their sentiments freely. Is there such a paper in the world? If so, where is it published? We have heard frequently that such papers were to be published, but have always noticed that after their issue they were just as far from being free as the ones they condemned. They were open and free for the publication of the views of those who sustained them, and we see no reason to find fault with such a course. The only reason for complaint lies in the claim made, that the paper is free, when it is no more so than the one it condemns; thus using a false claim to get patronage, and to throw censure on their neighbors.

We say we have never seen "a free paper"; neither do we care to be one of its readers. It would be like going to a prayer meeting, where christians prayed, infidels talked, and atheists sung. It might be called a free meeting, because all said what they pleased,—some confessed the dear Savior, while others scoffed at religion. No christian would enjoy such a meeting, and surely no infidel could. We learn that "where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty"; but no one, who knows its workings, would expect to enjoy its liberty in such a meeting. The same is true of a paper. Those who support an anti-slavery paper would not wish to have it partly filled with communications advocating slavery. An infidel does not wish the columns of his paper filled with articles about revivals, prayer meetings, and christian experience, which to him is all nonsense. One who takes a paper on moral reform does not desire to find it containing obscene anecdotes from the libertine, and vulgar songs from rowdies. But all these various classes have what they call "free papers"; but they are only free for what their patrons desire to read and support. Yet it is not to be supposed that all the readers of any paper will endorse every thing that is published in its columns; neither do we know of an editor who inserts articles that he does not indorse himself. We do not believe it would be best for any editor to refuse to publish every thing that did not agree with his own views. None of us are infallible. We are all liable to be mistaken; and while an editor should not allow a paper to be like a swill pail, he should not be pope on the other hand, and run every thing through his seive, by reviews and criticisms, before he gives it to his readers. With all his wisdom and experience, he will often be in great doubt as to what will be the most proper course to pursue. The best he can do is to do the best he can. But even then, it will be impossible to suit all. If an opinion should be advanced by a writer which some of the readers did not believe, the latter might claim the paper was not "free" unless he could have the privilege of reviewing it; but the more of controversy there is in a paper, the more the spirit of controversy is aroused; until it becomes a "free fight" and no one is benefitted; and the influence of the paper is no more profitable to its readers than would be a church quarrel to a revival of religion. Satan would then have accomplished his object, and scattered desolation in all directions.

We think every truly christian paper should aim to produce the same effect upon its readers as would a good prayer and conference meeting; so that when they have perused its columns, they will feel refreshed in spirit, comforted, edified, and instructed; but a controversial paper never produces such results, any more than would disputes in a prayer meeting tend to awaken devotional feelings, and kindle up brotherly love.

The following remarks on this subject, from a writer in the Herald of Life, are to the point:—

"We will state what we take to be the true policy. The great desideratum is a paper that, while it gives sufficient pre-eminence to the point of agreement, allows a healthy expression on all proper questions. We say 'proper questions,' because there must be a limit somewhere between christianity and infidelity. "But who shall decide the limit?" The Editor. "But suppose he does not decide as I think?" Then bear the vexation with patience. Do you know that you can manifest a wrong spirit on this point as well as on any other? Hence if you make a needless objection to the paper or its Editor on this question, you give place to the devil and are helping the cause of darkness. You are bound as a christian to do all that you can to advance the truth. Hence when a paper is started which in its main position agrees with your view, how can you be so cruel as to find fault and withhold your countenance because the Editor allows questions that you do not approve, or excludes those that you would admit? In what other way can you have a free paper? . . We want all honest christians to perceive the necessity of supporting a paper that upholds free investigation, and allows the contributors to write and let write, the readers to think and let think, and the Editor to do the best he can without hampering him with bonds of Lilliputian invention.

"But suppose a view that I cannot bear appears to have the advantage in the paper? In that case, we advise you first to reconsider your position, and if you are reassured of its virtue, ask God to give you patience that you may not impede, nor fail to support the truth that is taught in the paper, for it is that which will sooner or later overthrow the error."

DEATH OF LORD PALMERSTON.

The [illegible] steamer brings the tidings that "Lord Palmerston is dead." The death of Palmerston is an event in the British nation like the death of Daniel Webster to the American people. Lord Palmerston was England's great statesman. He was 81 years of age on the 20th of last October. It will be difficult to fill his place in the Parliament. England has had but few men equal to Lord Palmerston. He exerted great influence in the British government, and was very instrumental in preserving peace. We may reasonably expect some radical changes soon in the condition of the English government. The position of England, with the Fenians and Napoleon against her, and indeed the whole world, is far from being very promising. There are strong reasons to believe that the mene, mene, tekel, upharsin, is written upon her walls, and that another year may witness the opening of her closing drama.

PREPARATIONS FOR WAR.

Again preparations are being made for war. The spirits of demons seem to be arousing all the baser passions of the human breast, especially that of war. Just before the second coming of Christ, "the spirits of devils, working miracles" are to "go forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—Rev. 16: 14. The next statement is, "Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth." This is the hour to watch, lest we enter into temptation. Let us not sleep now.

The following shows what the government thinks of the dangers of war again:—

"New York, Nov. 2. The Herald's dispatch says the Secretary of the Navy has issued orders to the commanders of navy yards to put all the iron-clad vessels within their jurisdiction in order, to be ready for sea service at the earliest practicable moment."

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF SPIRITUALISTS.

The Spiritualists held their second National convention, in Concert Hall, Philadelphia, commencing Tuesday Oct. 17th, and ending Saturday, Oct. 22nd. This convention was composed of delegates from the Spiritualists in thirteen states. They are in earnest about their work, and in this respect would put to shame the careless indifference of the mass of church members. While Satan, through the spiritual manifestations is completely undermining the churches, they look as unmoved as an idiot, when the greatest peril surrounds them. O that something might be done to open the eyes of the people to the perils of the hour in which we are living. They speak so boldly against the Bible, the christianity and God of the Bible, that a person who knew but little of either, might think it a disgrace to believe in such things. They seem very anxious to get rid of the Bible and its influence, which they appear to think the greatest hindrance to their progress. No infidel ever was bolder than are the Spiritualists in their warfare against the sacred Scriptures; and yet they claim that Spiritualism is "ancient christianity."

The President of their convention, was a venerable looking and intelligent man, eighty-one years of age, well known in New England, and elsewhere, by the prominent positions he has occupied as a preacher and writer,—JOHN PIERPONT, who is now employed by our government in some of the departments at Washington. He is a strong Spiritualist.

There were many able men and women in the convention, whose earnest zeal is well calculated to give them power over the mass of people that do not stop to investigate before they act. Many of these leaders have held high positions in the various churches as preachers, or as officials; while others have held, or do now hold, high stations in the offices of our nation. They are men and women who are calculated to accomplish something when they take hold of a work; such as are not discouraged at the sight of a few obstacles;—such men and women as would make martyrs, were they in the service of Christ instead of Satan. The deceiver has picked his leaders in the great movement of Spiritualism; and they are glorying in their calling.

It may be asked what did they do at their convention? They have formed a National organization, in order to carry out their purposes. What are their purposes? We will answer the inquiry by quoting some of their sayings during their convention, as we noted them down at the time. Said a very prominent speaker in the convention [Warren Chase]:—

"We have a power in this nation, and we are to exercise it." "We are to concentrate our power. "Spiritualism will roll on like the stone cut out of the mountain without hands and fill the whole earth, and old theology shall be among the things that were.

Said another able speaker, [Benj. Todd,] formerly a Methodist minister: The Spiritualists have an immense power and intellect. We wish to concentrate this power to make it tell upon the world. The education of the land is in the hands of the clergy, and we wish to take it out of their hands." [Cheers.]

Said Mr. Chase:—"As our fathers met in this city [Philadelphia] to break in pieces despotic power, in 1776, so we are here to break in pieces the power of the priesthood."

We learn that Mr. Chase has been some years a member of the legislative body, and a Governor of one of the western states. Another eloquent speaker, [J. S. Loveland,] formerly a Methodist preacher, when speaking of Spiritualism in its religious bearing, said:

"It is a new dispensation, a new religion, a new hope, a new experience, a higher, grander, diviner religion! It is a new inspiration, a new revelation, new light, a complete change;—the great, important thing, superior to all else,—the supreme. The inspiration of the past is more than repeated. The wonder of the past is more than repeated by the apostles of to-day. It is the world's regeneration. We have passed the period of storm. We shall soon be the power that will be felt. We are about to [illegible] measures that will accomplish [illegible]. I have [illegible] when I was a Methodist. We are to revolutionize the world. We shall accomplish it easily."

Said Mrs. Wilsie, "We have come together to act, to erect a structure, the corner stone of which is peace. We need a centre, and we come together to lay the platform. We make the soul free."

We were reminded of the saying in the prophecy of Paul,—"When they shall say, Peace and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them." The signs most clearly indicate that the day of destruction for the enemies of the Lord is at hand. Their boastings will soon end; but that end will be terrible.

Said Judge Carter, from Cincinnati, O., "Spiritualism is the second advent of the Redeemer." It should be remembered that this is what the Spiritualists teach; hence they say, that when we embrace the teachings of the spirits then Christ comes to us;—that he is never coming again personally in the flesh. John says that those who teach such a doctrine, or deny that "Christ is come [literally is coming] in the flesh, . . . is a deceiver and an antichrist." 2 John 5: 7.

The Judge further stated, "Spiritualism destroys Diabolism. We say 'bully' for the devil. We will send a monster petition to the President for his pardon." [Loud amens.] "It is Diabolism to say that Spiritualism is Diabolism. Those who say so have diabolical natures. Diabolical theologians will be consumed and destroyed soon. Let Spiritualists take courage. If Diabolism attack us, let us defend ourselves. Let us carry on offensive movements."

A lady speaker called Spiritualism "The blessed religion of this century." She said, "We wish to establish a platform that shall attract the world."

Said Warren Chase, "We wish to extricate our schools, of all kinds, from sectarian control which they are now under."

Said Mr. Bush, of New York, "Our new philosophy strikes at the foundation of false christianity. Pagans, Mohammedans, Jews, and Christians, have a free platform here. We are sure to prevail." By "false christianity," they mean the christian religion; and by the true,—Spiritualism. Mr. Bush remarked further,—"We are in opposition to every form of religion that is opposed to universal brotherhood." Hindoos, Mohammedans, Jews, Catholics, Protestants, and Pagans, are all alike christians, according to the Spiritualist standard; and one is just as much a member of the church of Christ as the other. Truly this is the "Broad Church," as it is called.

It was remarked by the President, "I am a Christian Spiritualist"; whereupon Mr. Chase replied, "I am not a Christian Spiritualist,—I hope I never shall be."

Said Mr. J. S. Loveland:—"Spiritualism will be organized, and become a power, changing entirely the whole system of the present institutions, religious, social, and commercial."

Mr. Rhen, of Philadelphia, said that man should have "freedom from all authority, and should be the sole judge of what he should do."

Said Mr. Storer:—"Our love is purer and better than that of the old church. Spiritualism comes to liberate us from all authority. It destroys the platform on which theology is based, and destroys the Bible account of the creation of man. Man progresses till he becomes a God. Spiritualism teaches us that men are immortal."

Satan taught the same doctrine, about 6000 years ago, to our first parents, in Eden, and is now endeavoring to confirm that lie by the spiritual manifestation of demons in these last days, and many believe him, rather than the word of the Lord.

Mr. Bush said, "The religion of this nation must be changed. All religions must be merged into Spiritualism. We must have a nationality. Spiritualism is at the base of all reforms.

An intelligent lady, chosen as one of the speakers at the convention, concerning whom we heard a noted Spiritualist remark,—"She is a free-lover," during her speech said:—"I and my Father are one. The Roman Catholic church is the Mother of our religion. We, as Spiritualists, are the result of the whole—of all churches. I am propelled by the power behind the throne. I never realized the love of the Nazarene as I do to-day. I have been in the garden. We are doing to-day what the Nazarene did eighteen hundred years ago. 'Every thing that is, is right.' Our lives run parallel with the apostles. We throw away the material God, and the material Bible; then we have a spiritual one."

Andrew Jackson Davis remarked:—"We are the opponents of old theology. We purpose to inaugurate a new and perfectly revolutionary system. It must go into all institutions. We are trying to bring the kingdom of heaven on earth."

The members of the National Convention prepared an address to the world, which we may lay before our readers at some future time, when we obtain a true copy of the same. In that address it is said,—"The most important principle in this belief is the immortality of the soul."

Should this great error be taken from their platform, the whole system would fall to the ground at once; and with it would go the hero-worship of the pagans, the Roman Catholic religion, with its purgatory and prayers to saints; Shakerism, Swedenborgianism, and every other false system of religion, and the Bible would stand triumphant over all.

"THE HERALD OF HEALTH."

If any of our readers wish for a good paper on the laws of health, they will secure it if they send $1.50 and take the "Herald of Health," published monthly by Miller, Wood & Co., 15 Laight Street, New York. It is a paper that should be in every family, because it contains things that every one should know and practice if they wish to enjoy good health.

"THE REIGN OF MESSIAH, the King of the Jews, on the throne of his father David: its nature and the time of its commencement."

The foregoing is the title of a good tract, by Wm. Sheldon, containing 40 pp., and just the thing to put into the hands of those who do not understand about the coming kingdom of Christ. This tract should have a wide circulation. Price, single copies 10c, six copies 50c, twelve copies 85c, fifty copies $2.75, one hundred $5—postage paid in each case.

THE FENIANS.

The movement of the "Fenian Brotherhood" is assuming large proportions, and begins to wear a formidable aspect; especially towards England. The avowed object of the Fenians is to liberate Ireland from the English yoke. We are satisfied that Napoleon III. is aiding this movement; as it will help to weaken England, and give him a better chance to avenge the battle of Waterloo, when Napoleon I. was defeated by the English sword. England begins to tremble before the rising of the Irish. It is evident the latter have started in earnest this time, having counted the cost, and are determined to accomplish their object. The position of England is becoming very critical. As was lately stated by a member of Parliament, she has not a friend in the world. Napoleon has been faithfully and successfully at work to bring her into just such a state.

The Fenians have been holding a Congress in Philadelphia, in Oct., and on the 18th inst. were addressed by Geo. Francis Train. During his speech he said, as reported in the Philadelphia Inquirer, Oct. 19th,

"England received an attack of apoplexy in the Crimean war. The second attack was that of neutrality. The third will be her death through the Fenians.

England is simply an attache of France; she drives the coach, and Napoleon rides inside. He uses her as a cat's paw to draw the chesnuts out of the fire. She has obeyed all his plans and designs. She fought the Russians and the Austrians with France, as he wished. And now the head of the Fenians is in the Tuileries, planning for the future. It is with you, Irishmen, to follow out these promptings."

Great enthusiasm is manifested in the Fenian movement. They talk like men in earnest, who are confident of success. We learn from a most reliable source, that it is stated by the chief leader of the Fenians in this country that they are sustained by Napoleon, and other noted men in their efforts to free Ireland from the control of the English.

During the Fenian Congress, held last week in Philadelphia, most of their meetings were "conducted with profound secrecy," but on one evening, a public meeting was held, and addressed by Mr. S. J. Meany, formerly editor of the Irish Tribune, now of the Toledo Commercial. The following is a portion of his address, as published in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Mr. S. J. Meany wished that he had been introduced simply as an Irish citizen. (Applause. "Good.") He was glad to meet them here with the animating feeling of the new hope for Ireland. He stood here as one who had once failed, but he promised them that now he would not fail. (Applause.) He was glad that they had done with the arts and artifices of England. They had determined to succeed this time, and not to bring new miseries upon their unprotected countrymen. They were determined and united to secure the independence of Ireland. He begged to introduce his Irish friend, Captain Walsh, to this audience. (Applause)

Capt. P. D. Walsh stated that he was well known to Philadelphia audiences, and to-night, knowing the hearts of the Irish people, he was glad to tell them of the time when Ireland would rise again to her feet and deal a giant blow against her oppressors, wrenching asunder her chains, and taking her place as an independent nation. (Loud applause.) Her career was commencing with the honest, lowly spirits; was spreading throughout every hamlet of our land; was spreading throughout every village in Canada, and was now throbbing abroad the seas in the hearts of those who lived for Ireland's freedom. (Applause.)

The ballot box, the petition, the remonstrance, have all been resorted to without effect, and to-day the Irish people are determined to give up all these and grasp the sword that will cut asunder their bonds. (Applause.) The scaffold, the dungeon, the guillotine, all have failed, and, to-day, throughout all Europe, men are arousing to the glory of common humanity. (Good.) The young spirit of Ireland is again becoming eloquent, and is blessed with the spirit of resurrection.

The Irish people have been well schooled in the lesson of experience. They have tried everything in the way of peaceable attempts, only to fail; and they are now to appeal to the God of arms and the Lord of hosts. And he believed there never was a nation striving for independence that had as good a prospect of success as Ireland to-day. (Applause.) Ireland has but the one enemy in this world—England. We, years ago, cast our bread upon the waters; we aided France, and upon the fields of Fontenoy the Frenchman reads it yet to-day. That bread will return to us upon the waters. Let all breathe the prayer that soon the white sails may be seen upon the seas. (Applause.) We sent them to Spain, to Austria.

In that glorious war that gave to America its independence, upon its waters we also cast our bread. We gave it a Montgomery, a Barry, a Sullivan, a Wayne, and that bread will again return. (Applause.) We have only now to make the demand. The pure, the brave, the heroic people of this country only wait for our call to aid us. Only love of England, or fear of England, can hinder that aid.

America has no reason to love her, and no cause to fear her.

England strove to crush the infant republic in 1812, but having failed she concocted the poisonous draught of treason and rebellion to destroy the country's life.

The Americans do not love her; they certainly do not fear her. To-day this nation holds in her hands a power that can crush England's power and life forever. In the Revolutionary war Ireland sent from her little store a supply to Washington's army; and now when, in 1865, we are about to take the step they took in 1775, they will help us, knowing "one good turn deserves another." (Applause.)

It is needless to enter at any length upon our object and purposes. Some of you may have fears of the recent actions in Ireland; some of you may think the movement has prematurely exploded, because a few have been arrested. But we knew that some must fall; we knew this, and were satisfied that one hundred thousand men should fall, to pay the price of Ireland's liberty. (Applause.) We will not be driven from our purposes. England has no knowledge that these men belonged to us. (Cheers.) It will put her to trouble to convict them, and if anybody ought to know about it, we ought. (Laughter.)

Should she seize them by hundreds there will still be enough to strike England to the heart. (Applause.) There are enough to avenge Ireland's wrongs, and they have sworn to do it. Let nothing change you from looking forward to the day when, through the zeal of this organization, the young spirit of Ireland shall stand upon the battle-field fully equipped to fight for their country. The Fenian Brotherhood designs to put well-drilled, well-armed, well-officered men, as an army of the Irish Republic. Hot blood and enthusiasm are not to be their animus. They know it is not steel or spirit that makes the veterans give way, but patience and enduring courage and bravery.

Ireland is to put in the field a hundred thousand well-disciplined soldiers, and then we will [illegible] the [illegible] flag, raise the old battle-cry, [illegible] shout, "forward to [illegible]," that your country may be free."

Do that, resolve to do all that you can to make her a nation. Give her all you can; every dollar strengthens her hands, and is worth twenty given after she is free. (Applause.) I hope you will presevere in your sympathy until we can rejoice together and sing the pæans of victory throughout our land.

A. M. Morrison stated that throughout our whole land they had been hurrying together on the wings of steam, to send more than words of greeting to those who before many months have passed will unfurl the free flag of Ireland. (Applause.)

Time was when Ireland fell with the death of her leaders; but, brothers, liberty is immortal! Liberty never dies! (Applause.) It matters not how many hundred years have past since the unholy foot of the invaders were planted on our soil; but do you not hate them as if it were done but yesterday? (Loud shouts of "yes.") It matters not who fall in her defense.

Brothers, it is time to speak out. (So it is.) Our characters are at stake among the American people. As men they were to stand up before God and declare they must be free; and they must be free in everything. I tell you, boys, that neither the priests and bishops of America or Ireland shall decide whether we shall be slaves or freemen. I am a Catholic, but I cannot agree to that. They say it is immoral to strive for Ireland, and I say it is not.

The day has gone past when men can be trampled down in America. Any man too pious to strike England is out of place here. (Laughter.)

He was sinning in good company, and would go on sinning, and would die unrepenting. (Applause.)

A sin to strike England! All should blush to say those accursed words. How many here to-night have seen the highways of Ireland crowded with those who were rotting and dying under England's exterminating rule. Remember the wagons loaded with grain escorted past those starving lips by English soldiers. Dare you tell me it is a sin to strike this enemy? (Loud applause.) We know it will cause rivers of blood to flow; but which will you prefer, to die on the battle-field or die like vermin in the ditches of your own land?

A man in the audience—"I want to ask one question of that speaker. (Cries of "Put him out," and great confusion.)

The man who interrupted was brought to the platform, and after he had secured silence by saying he never knew that an Englishman could not be answered by an Irishman, he called for a statement of the change that existed in Ireland since the famine. The scene was very amusing. The speaker uttering the most "Cockneyish" English.) He finally retired, giving his name as Robert Jackson.

Mr. Morrison resumed—O'Connell used to boast Ireland had nine millions of people. Who brought the famine on her? ("John Bull.") It came through England's abominable laws, and crushing system of land owners. England affects to cry out at the despots of Europe, but in the same year there was a famine in Poland, Austria and Ireland. Those despots forbade the exportation of grain, while England took the opposite course, to exterminate their people. And those who were starved were taken to their graves and cheated of their coffins. England thought that we were as dead men in this country, but we shall now teach her we are all alive. (Applause.)

TRACTS WANTED FOR MINNESOTA.

WHO WILL SEND THEM?

BRO. GRANT:—I am laboring continually, earnestly, with prayers and with tears by day and by night, in the desk and out of it, in public and in private, through much pain and weariness, amid all classes, grades and phases of society, to advance the glorious cause of the Redeemer in this young western state. Some weeks give a discourse every evening, and twice on Lord's day. Sometimes only on Lord's day, but steadily at work as the way opens and my health permits. I keep looking forward to a short time in the future when I will give myself a little rest, but when that promised time arrives I have as many appointments ahead as usual, and as little prospect of rest, there is such an urgent and continued call for labor in the vineyard of the Lord. Well, God helping me,

> I'll still the cross sustain,
> And gladly wander up and down,
> And smile at toil and pain."

But what I want to say to you, or those interested in the distribution of tracts, is this. Minnesota stands greatly in need of them. If I had wealth at my command I would send and purchase, and keep one continued stream of them flowing over the country. But I have not the means. My chances of distribution are great, and if our eastern friends would send them to me I could scatter them continually in my different fields of labor and along the routes I travel on the steamboat, cars, or stage, and who can tell how many precious souls they might be the means of winning to Christ? They are silent but faithful messengers, which speak right to the heart, without the interposition of a possible offensive personality. Some, who would not receive the truth from others in consequence of prejudices against the person who presented it, might be induced from a silent, inoffensive, yet eloquent, tract, to fall in love with the truth, and in grasping the truth, lose their hold on error, and banish their former prejudices.

Our eastern friends will reflect that Minnesota is not like New Hampshire and Massachusetts, those old states where our oldest and ablest ministers have labored and preached every year; where they have their great gatherings of Alton Bay and Wilbraham; where books and tracts have been scattered, I had almost said, like autumn leaves throughout the country, and the truth presented in almost every shape and form. But Minnesota is a young state, fast filling up with an intelligent, enterprising population, many of whom never heard our ideas advanced, and would perhaps receive them if they were presented in an understanding, friendly manner.

God has blessed us, and still is blessing us, thanks to his holy name. The banner of the cross is unfurled in our young and growing state. True-hearted men and women are rallying around the standard, chosen ones of God who count not their own life dear unto them, and God is constantly adding to their number such as shall be saved. The doors are opening, the field is widening, the Macedonian cry is continually saluting our ears, "Come over and help us," and, when we have come, the next question is, "Can't you stay longer?" Now, if we only had tracts to send or scatter among these people, where we cannot go, or, if we do go, make but a short stay, and give few discourses and leave them; if, when leaving them, after making an opening, we could leave behind us for their instruction some tracts which they might read and investigate at their leisure, where their arguments might be met and their objections answered, what a vast amount of good might be done.

I am now about to preach in two different places where, I presume to say, an Advent sermon was never preached. In one place there are a few isolated brethren. In the other I know of none, but they have invited me to come among them to labor, knowing me to be a strong Adventist, and there are peculiar reasons leading me to think it may ultimately bring many to the fold. I go a single-handed, weak woman; but if I could scatter among them some of these able defenders of the truth, these silent messengers, how much they might accomplish in doing away prejudice and leading to a proper understanding of the Bible. To send the Crisis to the Poor.

"I wish to take a share in the Lord's Bank, and here enclose $1.00 to help send the Crisis to the worthy poor who do not indulge in expensive and useless habits, such as using snuff, tobacco, tea and coffee." M.

Jackson, Pa.

Who else will help in this good work? "He that hath pity upon the poor, lendeth unto the Lord; and that which he hath given will he pay him again."—Prov. 19: 17. Are there not many more who are willing to lend some to the Lord? He will keep his promise, and pay again. Trust him and see the results. "Remember the words of the Lord Jesus, how he said, it is more blessed to give than to receive."—Acts 20: 35.

Our time of work is nearly done. Let us live so that when Jesus comes, he will say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. The harvest is all ripe for the laborers. Let each do his part of the work, and soon the reward will be given.

THE CALIFORNIA "WORLD'S CRISIS" is published in San Francisco, Cal., 1311 Powell St., edited and published by J. L. Hopkins. It has just appeared in a new dress, pamphlet form, containing 16 octavo pages. Bro. Hopkins has been struggling for some few years to get the news of the speedy coming of our Savior before the people in California. We trust his labor has not been in vain. The whole world is being warned of its approaching end, and the coming of its rightful King to reign in glory upon Mt. Zion. The day is at hand. Those who are ready may expect to be called soon to the marriage of the Lamb. The wickedness of the wicked is great, but their triumph is short. Now is their time to repent and prepare to welcome the "coming One," if they wish to be saved and have a home in "the kingdom of heaven." They have not a moment to lose. The last sands of time are dropping. We would urge them to fly in haste to the Savior, that they may be hid in the pavilion of the Lord, when the terrible storm bursts upon a wicked world.

THE BIBLE STUDENT'S LIBRARY.—A prominent preacher in the west, not associated denominationally with brethren in the east, after ordering 183 volumes of H. L. Hastings' Bible Student's Library, and also some other books besides, writes to the author thus:—"Your works on the Signs of the Times, Life and Death question, etc., I regard as far ahead of any of our works on the same subjects, and therefore shall circulate them. May God bless you in every good work, is the prayer of your Bro." Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

BRO. GRANT:—Since writing before, I have visited West Ossipee. Found a few there who love the appearing of Jesus, although division, strife and contention have somewhat disturbed them. O that there might be a more liberal disposition among our brethren who love the Lord and the truths of his word.

I next met with the brethren at Freedom, where are a few families who love the truth; yet they are in a very low state, do not put forth much effort. They need more energy and engagedness. O that there were more life, zeal and energy among those who expect soon to see Jesus. Went to Parsonsfield, where are a few families who love the advent of Jesus, and meet together frequently to stir up each other's minds. I was with them two evenings. Should have staid longer, but so much sickness in the neighborhood prevented.

I have been gone ten weeks from home, and experienced much of God's goodness, and much of the kindness and hospitality of friends. This region where I have been is rather a neglected field. Little labor has been expended; yet there is room and encouragement for labor even here. O that our brethren who are strong and well able to labor, and love it, would visit this neglected field. They would find Advent friends in every town, who would bid them welcome to their houses, and hold up their hands while they labored. They could not, of course, expect much money, but they would get that which is better, and they would find ears to hear, and much more good would be effected than in those popular congregations where they have been cloyed with so much good preaching.

Come, brethren, walk back into this wild, romantic, mountain country, where sublime scenery will surround you, where people will hear, where good will be done, and God will bless you. I have traveled several times over twenty miles in a day, and visited several families, while my health and strength have improved, and I have taken just about enough to pay my traveling expenses. I now retire to my home for a few weeks. Yours,

Chelmsford, Mass. B. SPAULDING.

From Sr. J. A. Jenness.

BRO. GRANT:—Please permit me to make known through the Crisis to the saints scattered abroad the dealings of a kind and merciful heavenly Father to me, while I saw as it seemed to me death just before me. After having a lung fever, one of my lungs was left in a very serious condition, as was stated by the doctors to whom I applied for help, and it was supposed that I was nearly if not quite in the condition of any one in consumption. I had a very hard, wearing cough, so much so that rest did not seem to be within my reach day or night.

After becoming satisfied that no human prescription could reach my case for good, I humbled myself beneath the mighty arm of God, gave up all human skill, laid myself, with friends and all that was dear to me on earth, upon the altar, and said, "Here I am, Lord; do with me as seemeth good to thee. I will be thy child, come life or death." It then appeared to me to be right to take a Bible rule and call for the elders of the church to pray for me; but circumstances were such with those brethren that they could not come; but the Lord as ever remained the same, and I was satisfied that all things work for the good of those that love him.

I was at this time stopping with some of the Lord's children, and we thought it proper, as Jesus had given us his word, to believe it and ask for help from on high, which we did, and the Lord was just as good as his word. I was made whole in answer to prayer, thank his dear name. I am, after less than one week's time, a monument of his mercy. Glory to his name. The hard, wearing cough is silenced. I feel well, and what can I do but praise him? I must praise him now, and expect to forevermore.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, believe in Jesus, and no tongue can tell what blessings he will bestow upon you. How blessed, how glorious, to believe the words of God. To the careless sinner I would say, come to Christ, the Great Physician. Do not delay. The jewels of God will soon be gathered, his house filled, and where will you, where can you flee for safety? No time to escape, then. Escape for thy life, and do it now.

Alton, N. H. JOSEPHINE A. JENNESS.

From Bro. D. M. Kinter.

BRO. GRANT:—Having entered a new field of labor, and wishing to inform the readers of the Crisis of our whereabouts, I ask a corner in our excellent paper for that purpose. I arrived here (near Indiana, Pa.) about three weeks ago, and have preached some and talked a great deal on the subject of the christian religion and on the coming of our Lord and Savior. Our congregations are large and attentive, but prejudice and sectarianism are against me, and Satan's agents are not idle in circulating all manner of evil reports, and I have just learned that they say that we use a different Bible from the common version, and are trying to deceive the people; however, the excitement is getting up, and some will not be deceived by them, but are beginning to "search the Scriptures to see if these things be so." There have never been any of our preachers through here, and consequently they call us a setter forth of new doctrines, and as the time has come when men "will not endure sound doctrine," and "the devil hath great wrath because he knoweth that his time is short," we may expect opposition. We have, however, good encouragement to labor, and by the grace of God we shall continue to do so for a while. There is a large field here without any laborers, and with the proper effort many precious souls may be born to Jesus. Pray for me, dear brethren, that I may be sustained in this good work, and reap a rich harvest of souls for our reward. Tracts are needed here, as many are anxious to obtain the "precious little messengers of truth," and we have distributed the few we brought with us.

Brethren, be faithful. We have a great work to do, and but little more time to work in. Have you time? Use it for the warning of a wicked world. Have you influence? Let it extend far and wide for the good cause. Have you talent? Preach and write for all. Have you money? The Lord wants it to publish tracts, to support the watchmen on the watch-tower, and to preach the gospel to the poor. Let no man deceive you; or, as our beloved Paul says, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 7, 8. We are all sowing time, influence, talents, and money; let us sow them to the Spirit, for we shall soon reap, if we faint not.

Hoping to meet you soon in the everlasting kingdom of our dear Redeemer, I am, dear brother, yours in the hope of eternal life at the coming of Christ, D. M. KINTER.

Gilpin, Pa., Oct., 1865.

From Sr. M. E. Streeter.

DEAR BRN. AND SRS.:—My heart is made to rejoice from week to week, as I read your good letters in our blessed paper, the Crisis. I love to hear from the dear ones in Christ. And I do earnestly long for the coming of my dear Jesus; for then I know that all the good and faithful will be gathered home. Praise the Lord. I can truly say that I am sick of this vain world with its cares and anxieties. I am spoiled for it, and if I lose the kingdom, I lose all. But, blessed be the name of the Lord, I have no fears, for

"I'm bound for the kingdom;
Will you go to glory with me?"

My peace in Christ has been perfect for the last few months. And I am glad that it is our privilege to live where we can feel our acceptance with God daily, and then the scoffs and frowns of an ungodly world will not trouble us in the least. And if we do not suffer any persecution, we may know that there is something wrong; for the Master says if we live godly we "shall suffer persecution." Thank the Lord, then, for persecution, for it will only make us stronger in the Lord. What if cold-hearted professors do judge you, and say you have no religion, unless you say and do just as they do; remember the Lord is Judge, and he will do right, and all will be rewarded according to their works.

The enemy has done his utmost for a few weeks past to throw me off the track; but, thanks be to God, I have a sure foundation to stand upon. I do know in whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep me from falling. No earthly power can keep me from the love of God.

The Lord is soon coming, and by grace divine I mean to be ready to hail him with joy. I long for the time to come when the saints will all be gathered from east and west, north and south, and sit down in the kingdom of God, no more to be separated forever. Lord, hasten the time. MARY E. STREETER.

No. Dana, Mass.

BRO. S. MARSH writes from Shabbona:—"The Amboy campmeeting and the Dekalb tent meeting were of the best kind. The Brn. were lovely, brotherly, and liberal toward each other. Indeed, there appeared to be a general burst of joy, in hope of the Lord's soon coming; and I believe the time question is the principal cause of it. I have been very much interested in the time question. I believe the Lord will come in 1868, and I rejoice in it. I wish it might be sooner. By the help of God, I mean to wait patiently, and live by every word of God."

Obituaries.

NOBLE. At Westfield, West Parish, Mass., Sept. 9th, 1865, George Noble, after a few days sickness of a fever, when he fell sweetly asleep, looking unto Jesus, aged sixty-two years.

For more than forty years, Bro. Noble had confessed and endeavored to follow Christ; he having been converted when he was nineteen years of age, among the Methodists, in a revival, which occurred in connection with labors of Sister Barnes, who was afterwards a missionary to the Indians. This was before the old-time Methodism had been so largely diluted with worldliness as it has been in later days. Among those men of God who then fought the fight of faith, Bro. Noble stood firm and steadfast, and in his quiet way sought to work the work of God. For twenty-four successive years, in his attendance at meetings, it is said he averaged four meetings a week, besides Sundays. His house was a pilgrim's home, where God's servants could come and rest and pray, and feel that their peace abode there, and that the Son of Peace was there. He was an old friend and associate of my honored father, through long years of labor and conflict in the good warfare.

Some ten or twelve years since, after mature consideration and protracted investigation, concerning the nature and destiny of man, the pretensions of Spiritualism, and the teachings of the Bible, he was led to look to Christ as the only giver of immortal life, and to his glorious appearing as the blessed hope of the waiting church.

Henceforth, his position was taken, and whenever duty called, he was ready to bear witness to the truth. "His peculiar views," as some were pleased to call the words of God, which he so freely quoted, were not entirely relished by all of his former brethren; and at one time an effort was made to expel him from the Methodist Episcopal church, on account of the Scriptural heresies which he had embraced, concerning the nature and hope of man, and the wages of sin. The effort proved a failure; Rev. Daniel E. Chapin, and other prominent Methodists, stood up like men for the old-fashioned Methodist principles of toleration and freedom of private judgment.

He continued in the Methodist church to the close of his life. With other congenial spirits, who sympathized with him in his waiting for the consolation of Israel, he met from week to week in the class meeting of Bro. E. A. Eggleston, where they rejoiced together in the hope of the glory of God; and a distance of some four miles, and the darkness of night, and the infirmities of advancing age, did not prevent his constant attendance upon public and social worship.

He was also zealous in conversation, in the distribution of books and tracts, and in trying to spread the message of salvation in the regions beyond. Mild in manners, slow of speech, industrious, prudent, exact and honorable in business, he commanded the respect of community, and had a good report of them that were without.

At last the good man came to die. In perfect resignation and in peace, he passed his closing hours. He had no fears, and no will or choice concerning the issue of his sickness. His chamber of pain was a Bethel indeed—the house of God and the gate of heaven. Those who thought his faith gloomy, and his hope vain, should have heard the shouts of joy, and the hallelujahs of triumph of that quiet and retiring man, as, at last, with every doubt and fear forever gone, he praised the Lord upon his dying bed. They would have learned that this "blessed hope" "maketh not ashamed," because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost.

Summoned by telegraph, the writer barely found time to stop upon his westward tour to look upon the pallid face of his own and his father's friend, and to pronounce above his lifeless form words of consolation and hope to the throngs of friends and mourners who gathered there, from the words of the Psalmist, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."—Psa. 37: 37.

So devout men carried him to his burial, and lamented over him, and his widowed wife and fatherless children shed their tears in sorrow, but yet in hope. His brethren and neighbors lament him, and the testimony of one of the members of the church was, "Bless God, that they didn't get him out of the church." The pastor of the Methodist church in Westfield assisted the writer in conducting the services of the funeral, and commended the afflicted ones to the fatherly care of God, who is their comforter. May they know the God of their father, and follow his faith, and so greet him again when the warfare is accomplished, and the salvation of the church completed. H. L. HASTINGS.

TUCK. Died in Bangor, Me., Oct. 21st, of heart disease, Joseph S. Tuck, aged sixty-five years, three months and fifteen days.

Father was a firm believer in the soon coming of Christ to raise the dead, change the living saints from mortal to immortal, and establish his everlasting kingdom. He was an old and tried Adventist, having been with that people from the very first of their existence as a people, witnessing and participating in the many trials and disappointments through which they have passed. He was a man of keen perception, mighty in the Scriptures, apt to teach, and possessed a heart always open to receive the truth, however unpopular it might be. He was the first one in this region who advocated the doctrine of no future life out of Christ.

Father is dead. The cruel hand of death has torn him from our midst. A large family are left to mourn his loss. May the Lord enable us so to live that we may all meet again in the kingdom of God.

A sermon was preached by Bro. Henry Perkins.

CHARLES C. TUCK.

WAIT. Died at her residence in Warwick, Oct. 24th, 1865, Ellen M., wife of Dea. James B. Wait, in the thirty-first year of her age.

We think of her as a noble woman, a lovely wife, and a christian mother. Having had from her youth up a fixed principle of right, her life was a constant example of the religion of Christ. A higher degree of purity characterized her course than is often found in mortal life. Early in life, and by her own exertions, she stored her mind with useful knowledge, fitting herself for any position in life. May the great Redeemer, who ever hears the prayers of his children, take her little ones in his care, and soon, very soon call that mother from her grave, and restore her to her sorrowing husband and bereft children.

We've waited long, our God, for thee,
Let not the hour delay;
Oh, call our loved ones from the tomb,
And chase our tears away.

S. L. REED.

FISK. Died in Starkville, Herkimer county, N. Y., Elmira N. Fisk, daughter of Sister Lydia B. Fisk, aged about twenty-one years.

Her illness was short and very severe, and much of the time she was deprived of reason; but in her lucid moments she rejoiced and sang praises to God. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and her funeral was attended by a minister of that church. She fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday, Oct. 8th. Her mother, who is well known in many places as a faithful and devoted servant of Christ, and a believer in his near coming, is thus bereft of her only earthly stay and staff in her declining years; but she mourns in sure and certain hope of a speedy return of her child from the "land of the enemy;" thus drying her tears, she meekly exclaims, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done;" and "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." RANDOLPH E. LADD.

ALDEN. Died in Livermore, Me., Oct. 3d, 1865, Chesman T., son of Columbus and Ardela Alden, aged six years and ten months.

He was one of a family of twelve very interesting and highly intellectual children. May God's grace richly sustain the bereaved family, and help them to look forward to that time, when that sown in weakness shall be raised in power; that sown in corruption shall be raised in incorruption.

"Then, parents, dry your tears away,
And rest in Jesus day by day,
For soon your dear one, now asleep,
Will wake and live, no more to weep."

E. M. HAGGETT.

YOUNG. Died in Livermore, Me., Aug. 12th, 1865, Lucius L., son of Lucius A. and Harriet B. Young, aged six years and seven months.

Thus our dear brother, in a few short months, has been called to part with his companion and his two only children. But he sorrows not as those who have no hope, for he believes "that Jesus died and rose again; even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

"O father, weep not o'er his grave,
For Jesus died such ones to save;
And he has triumphed o'er the tomb,
And Lucius soon will wake to bloom."

E. M. HAGGETT.

BUXTON. Died in Worcester, Mass., Oct. 20th, 1865, Lydia M., wife of Dr. H. W. Buxton, aged thirty-nine years.

At her funeral, words of comfort were spoken by Bro. S. G. Mathewson, to a large circle of mourners and friends.

A companion, three children, a mother, sister, and brothers, are called to mourn the loss of one whose meek and quiet spirit none knew but to love. The home is desolate now; but her companion, though in such bitter affliction, sorrows not without hope; for he is assured by the promises of God's word that she will rise again at the last day.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Oct. 18th, Queenstown 19th.

Lord Palmerston is dead. He had been seriously ill for some days from the effects of a cold. The symptoms had been very alarming, but he steadily improved. On the night of the 17th, however, a bulletin was issued to the effect that he had become worse since morning and that it could not be disguised he was very seriously ill. Telegrams were constantly being sent to the Queen at Balmoral. Palmerston would have completed his 81st year on the 20th of October.

The sensation news, published by the London Times, that Secretary Seward recently sent a peremptory dispatch to France, continued to attract attention, but it was generally regarded as wholly unfounded, and this view was confirmed by the Moravian's news. The Times contends that, let this remonstrance be what it may, coolness has certainly arisen between France and America.

The Paris Temps says the deaths from cholera in that city were averaging 200 per day.

TWO DAYS LATER.

The Globe announces that Earl Russell has undertaken the duty of reforming the Cabinet. A council is called for the 26th, when the matter will be decided.

The Daily News says it is everywhere assumed that an administration will duly be constructed to the extent rendered necessary by the appointment of a new Premier.

The Times says the augury is very difficult; the new Parliament and complications that may lead to war and the termination of the interregnum, as the administration has been called, constitute a new and inscrutable state of things.

The Daily News says no liberal Ministry is possible without Mr. Gladstone. Any Peer can lead the Lords, but there is no question as to who shall lead the Commons.

Lord Palmerston would be buried quite privately at Romsey on the 25th. The journals continue to lament his loss.

Most of the European governments have given their assent to an international conference at Constantinople for preventing the spread of the Asiatic cholera.

The cholera had almost disappeared at Madrid.

It is stated that M. Mirode, the Papal Minister of War, has not resigned, but has obtained leave of absence. It is reported that the Papal army is much disorganized.

Liverpool Oct. 26th, Queenstown 27th.

Austria and Prussia have addressed a severe remonstrance to the Senate of Frankfort against agitation and the coarse attacks on the two principal German powers, and threaten the Mayor and Senate with intervention should further meetings of delegates be permitted.

The Prussian Commissioners have announced that a powerful military force will be used to prevent the inhabitants of Schleswig from recognizing the Duke of Augustenburg, or other person, as having authority in the Duchy. The ovation to the Duke at Eckenford caused this demonstration.

The cholera had entirely disappeared from Barcelona, Valencia and the Baliaro Islands. At Madrid fifty cases occurred on the 23d, of which thirty-two were fatal.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 31. The Express says Havana advices confirm the accounts of a mutiny at Jamaica. Many revolting murders have been committed. A white magistrate has been killed, his fingers and toes were cut off and his bowels ripped open by negro women. The greatest alarm prevailed among the whites, and the mutiny was spreading.

New York, Nov. 6. Havana files per steamer Columbia give particulars regarding the negro insurrection in Jamaica. Kingston is in great excitement, business is entirely suspended, the population placing themselves in a state of defense. An immense meeting had been held, volunteers enlisting under the order of the Governor. The rebellion raged with fury in St. Thomas. In the East unprecedented outrages were committed upon lives and property. The volunteers sent to the insurrectionary districts were only partially successful in repulsing the insurgents. One band of negroes, 800 strong, and thoroughly organized, was sweeping everything before it. Kingston and other volunteers were being pressed forward.

A dispatch from Hon. W. P. George was read in the Commercial Exchange, stating that he had been wounded, and that Hon. Baron Von Keetchhool, one of the officials in St. Thomas, Dr. Gerard, Charles Anthony Price, Stephen Cooke and Rev. Mr. Hershell had been killed. A later dispatch confirms the above, and adds that the insurgents killed an official named Henry Alberga and cut his head off. Inspector of Police Finances, Bowen, and John Walton were also shot by the rebels. The Secretary Justice of the Peace is reported murdered.

A council of war was held in Kingston on the 10th ult. Subsequently martial law was declared for the District of Surrey in the name of the Queen. Major Gen. O'Connor has taken command of the troops, and is concentrating them. Active measures will be taken for a vigorous campaign against the rebellion. Paul Bogle, leader of the rebellion, has not yet been arrested.

The latest dispatch received from the seat of war to the Governor says the insurrection is increasing. Troops are wanted and there is no time to be lost. Among the clergy killed is Rev. Mr. Foote.

The Fenian Panic in Canada.

NEW YORK, Nov. 4. The Herald's Toronto dispatch says the Fenian excitement still continues. Quite a number of private soldiers are under arrest for sympathizing with the Fenians. The city and its approaches are picketed. Many Americans are preparing to leave for the States. Numbers of Orangemen are arriving for the defense of this district. I have positive information that the Canadian Brotherhood has a fast steamer ready for armament. It is reported that a number of officials of the government are engaged in the conspiracy. Great military preparations are going forward.

NEW YORK, Nov. 5. The Herald has a dispatch from Toronto, Canada West, dated yesterday, that says Ex-Grand Master of the Orangemen, Gowan, has published a manifesto declaring that the Fenians are coming, and calling Orangemen to arms. The Orange organ—the Watchman—declares that it has positive information of a contemplated invasion of the provinces; that six hundred armed men were in Toronto; that members of the government are fraternizing with the Fenians; that the Premier winks at the contemplated attempt to take the provinces from the British connection; and that the Fenians drill in Toronto at night.

The Herald's Toronto dispatch says the Ministerial organ, L'Union Nationale, in speaking of the contemplated Fenian invasion, declares that the government is organizing an army of 40,000 men to be stationed along the entire frontier line of Quebec and Toronto, and to garrison all the frontier towns. Depositors are withdrawing their funds from the banks, and a panic prevails. The French Cadets, who left for Mexico, have turned up on the other side of the Lake, where they have unpacked kits and settled down.

The Fenians in the District of Columbia number about 2000 men. They are actively preparing for a movement, and are purchasing uniforms, arms, etc. Yesterday notice appeared in the public press signed by the committee, cautioning the brotherhood against further action in the anticipated movement until they knew more and hear further from the committee.

Cholera in New York.

The appearance of Asiatic cholera in New York, although it is thus far confined to a single vessel in quarantine, will send a wave of alarm through the country, out of all proportion, probably, to the causes. We all knew that this mysterious malady was traveling westward, and was to be expected here sometime during the present autumn. Our hope was that its arrival would be delayed till the settled cold weather, which has always proved a powerful check upon its virulence. And it is now a matter of doubt whether the cases, bad as they are, which are brought over in the steamer Atlanta, may not be so far in advance of that poisonous current in the air upon which the cholera is supposed to depend, that, with proper care, the disease may be kept from extending itself in this country at the present time.

But as to that a few days will determine. However, it is the duty of every one in the meanwhile to make up his mind that, sooner or later, we are to have a partial visitation of the cholera. This being so, it should be remembered that the first thing to do on the part both of individuals and the community, is to get rid of all alarm and excitement about it, as these are the very worst evils we can have in a sanitary point of view. The next thing is to make war—a war of extermination—on filth in every form and shape. Our municipal authorities should, without a moment's delay, take their share of the matter in hand. Every householder should look to his own premises, from garret to cellar, and see that every thing is clean and sweet. Every head of family should have a thoughtful regard for the physical regimen of himself and his own; for, differing as the medical authorities do upon almost every point in the treatment of cholera, they all agree that it never or rarely attacks a person in a high state of health, and that its virulence is in inverse proportion to the patient's vigor of constitution. The requisite preparations, then, may be summed up in these words, equanimity, cleanliness, good health.—Boston Journal.

THE STEAMER ATLANTA. Of the passengers and their conduct under the trying circumstances, the Evening Post says:

"The passengers of the Atlanta, numbering five hundred and fifty-two, were principally Germans, excepting the cabin passengers, of whom there were forty-eight. The vessel had taken nearly all the latter on board at London, and part of the steerage passengers; but she stopped at Havre, where more passengers were received.

The persons who brought the cholera on board came from Havre. On the day after the Atlanta went to sea, one of them, a child, was attacked, and died on the following day. Others became sick immediately, but the disease was confined entirely to the steerage. None of the cabin passengers were in the least degree affected by it. The cases of sickness numbered from fifty to sixty, and there were fifteen deaths.

The steerage passengers on the Atlanta did not know, it is said, till they arrived at this port, that the disease that was among them was the cholera. Some of the most intelligent among them suspected the fact, but the physician carefully withheld positive information from them, fearing the effect of excitement among them. It is thought that this accounts for the fact that only fifteen of the five hundred persons who were exposed to the disease died of it.

NEW YORK, Nov. 6. The Herald's intelligence from the Florida coast gives accounts of the ravages of the recent terrible storm. The destruction of shipping was very great. The ship Mersey, of Liverpool, foundered, and nine of her officers and crew were lost. The survivors suffered terribly on a raft, and quenched their thirst with the blood of one of their number. They were rescued by the U. S. steamer Newburn. The Prussian barque Hurgot was disabled. The steamship Catherine Whiting, of New York, of eight hundred and eighty-one tons, from New York, for Galveston, ship Caroline Nesmith, of New York, and barques John Wesley, of Searsport, Waltham, of Richmond, Me., and L. M. Harwood, of Bath, were lost.

☞ The minister of an English church, the pews of which bring a rental of six hundred and fifty pounds, announces that he is about to abandon this source of income and make all the seats free. He was converted to the free church system by reading a pamphlet thereon, which has lately attracted much attention in England.

☞ Over eleven hundred immigrants per day have arrived from Europe at New York during the past week.

Discussion.

A Discussion is to be held in Boston, at East Hall, between RUFUS WENDELL and Rev. J. S. LOVELAND. Question: Is it true that the spirits of those who have once lived in the flesh return and communicate with those who still live on the earth, as asserted by modern Spiritualists? The proof to be drawn from the Bible, reason, and philosophy. The discussion is to commence Tuesday evening, Nov. 14th, at 7 o'clock, and to continue four evenings.

Notice.

The Easterly Maine Advent Quarterly Conference will be holden at North Searsport, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over the following Sunday. It is earnestly hoped the brethren may come in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

For the brethren, THOS. SMITH,
F. A. BAKER.

Notice.

On Tuesday, Dec. 5th, I propose starting east to Champlain, Clinton Co., N. Y., via. Cleveland and Erie R. R. to Edinboro, Pa.; thence, via. Erie and Buffalo, to Syracuse; thence to Ogdensburg, and thence to Rouses Point, N.Y. If any of the brethren on either or all of these routes desire preaching by me "as I go," please write to me at once, directing to Olena, Huron Co., O., and I will forward the appointment, and time for them to meet myself, wife and boy at the cars. Do not delay.

Elder G. W. STETSON.

Western Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in the Booker school-house, Gardiner, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 30th, at 7 o'clock. Brethren from abroad will call on Joseph Booker, Thomas Booker, and George Peacock. Come to this meeting, brethren, prepared to work for the Lord. C. H. LEVERTON, Sec.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Deerfield, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 15th, to hold over the following Sunday. Provision will be made to take care of all who come. Meeting near Bro. John M. Quimby's.

S. W. BISHOP.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—Since writing before, I have visited West Ossipee. Found a few there who love the appearing of Jesus, although division, strife and contention have somewhat disturbed them. O that there might be a more liberal disposition among our brethren who love the Lord and the truths of his word.

I next met with the brethren at Freedom, where are a few families who love the truth; yet they are in a very low state, do not put forth much effort. They need more energy and engagedness. O that there were more life, zeal and energy among those who expect soon to see Jesus. Went to Parsonsfield, where are a few families who love the advent of Jesus, and meet together frequently to stir up each other's minds. I was with them two evenings. Should have staid longer, but so much sickness in the neighborhood prevented.

I have been gone ten weeks from home, and experienced much of God's goodness, and much of the kindness and hospitality of friends. This region where I have been is rather a neglected field. Little labor has been expended; yet there is room and encouragement for labor even here. O that our brethren who are strong and well able to labor, and love it, would visit this neglected field. They would find Advent friends in every town, who would bid them welcome to their houses, and hold up their hands while they labored. They could not, of course, expect much money, but they would get that which is better, and they would find ears to hear, and much more good would be effected than in those popular congregations where they have been cloyed with so much good preaching.

Come, brethren, walk back into this wild, romantic, mountain country, where sublime scenery will surround you, where people will hear, where good will be done, and God will bless you. I have traveled several times over twenty miles in a day, and visited several families, while my health and strength have improved, and I have taken just about enough to pay my traveling expenses. I now retire to my home for a few weeks. Yours,

Chelmsford, Mass. B. Spaulding.

From Sr. J. A. Jenness.

Bro. Grant:—Please permit me to make known through the Crisis to the saints scattered abroad the dealings of a kind and merciful heavenly Father to me, while I saw as it seemed to me death just before me. After having a lung fever, one of my lungs was left in a very serious condition, as was stated by the doctors to whom I applied for help, and it was supposed that I was nearly if not quite in the condition of any one in consumption. I had a very hard, wearing cough, so much so that rest did not seem to be within my reach day or night.

After becoming satisfied that no human prescription could reach my case for good, I humbled myself beneath the mighty arm of God, gave up all human skill, laid myself, with friends and all that was dear to me on earth, upon the altar, and said, "Here I am, Lord; do with me as seemeth good to thee. I will be thy child, come life or death." It then appeared to me to be right to take a Bible rule and call for the elders of the church to pray for me; but circumstances were such with those brethren that they could not come; but the Lord as ever remained the same, and I was satisfied that all things work for the good of those that love him.

I was at this time stopping with some of the Lord's children, and we thought it proper, as Jesus had given us his word, to believe it and ask for help from on high, which we did, and the Lord was just as good as his word. I was made whole in answer to prayer, thank his dear name. I am, after less than one week's time, a monument of his mercy. Glory to his name. The hard, wearing cough is silenced. I feel well, and what can I do but praise him? I must praise him now, and expect to forevermore.

And now, dear brethren and sisters, believe in Jesus, and no tongue can tell what blessings he will bestow upon you. How blessed, how glorious, to believe the words of God. To the careless sinner I would say, come to Christ, the Great Physician. Do not delay. The jewels of God will soon be gathered, his house filled, and where will you, where can you flee for safety? No time to escape, then. Escape for thy life, and do it now.

Alton, N. H. Josephine A. Jenness.

From Bro. D. M. Kinter.

Bro. Grant:—Having entered a new field of labor, and wishing to inform the readers of the Crisis of our whereabouts, I ask a corner in our excellent paper for that purpose. I arrived here (near Indiana, Pa.) about three weeks ago, and have preached some and talked a great deal on the subject of the christian religion and on the coming of our Lord and Savior. Our congregations are large and attentive, but prejudice and sectarianism are against me, and Satan's agents are not idle in circulating all manner of evil reports, and I have just learned that they say that we use a different Bible from the common version, and are trying to deceive the people; however, the excitement is getting up, and some will not be deceived by them, but are beginning to "search the Scriptures to see if these things be so." There have never been any of our preachers through here, and consequently they call us a setter forth of new doctrines, and as the time has come when men "will not endure sound doctrine," and "the devil hath great wrath because he knoweth that his time is short," we may expect opposition. We have, however, good encouragement to labor, and by the grace of God we shall continue to do so for a while. There is a large field here without any laborers, and with the proper effort many precious souls may be born to Jesus. Pray for me, dear brethren, that I may be sustained in this good work, and reap a rich harvest of souls for our reward. Tracts are needed here, as many are anxious to obtain the "precious little messengers of truth," and we have distributed the few we brought with us.

Brethren, be faithful. We have a great work to do, and but little more time to work in. Have you time? Use it for the warning of a wicked world. Have you influence? Let it extend far and wide for the good cause. Have you talent? Preach and write for all. Have you money? The Lord wants it to publish tracts, to support the watchmen on the watch tower, and to preach the gospel to the poor. Let no man deceive you; or, as our beloved Paul says, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked. Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting."—Gal. 6: 7, 8. We are all sowing time, influence, talents, and money; let us sow them to the Spirit, for we shall soon reap, if we faint not.

Hoping to meet you soon in the everlasting kingdom of our dear Redeemer, I am, dear brother, yours in the hope of eternal life at the coming of Christ, D. M. Kinter.

Gilpin, Pa., Oct., 1865.

From Sr. M. E. Streeter.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—My heart is made to rejoice from week to week, as I read your good letters in our blessed paper, the Crisis. I love to hear from the dear ones in Christ. And I do earnestly long for the coming of my dear Jesus; for then I know that all the good and faithful will be gathered home. Praise the Lord. I can truly say that I am sick of this vain world with its cares and anxieties. I am spoiled for it, and if I lose the kingdom, I lose all. But, blessed be the name of the Lord, I have no fears, for

"I'm bound for the kingdom;
Will you go to glory with me?"

My peace in Christ has been perfect for the last few months. And I am glad that it is our privilege to live where we can feel our acceptance with God daily, and then the scoffs and frowns of an ungodly world will not trouble us in the least. And if we do not suffer any persecution, we may know that there is something wrong; for the Master says if we live godly we "shall suffer persecution." Thank the Lord, then, for persecution, for it will only make us stronger in the Lord. What if cold-hearted professors do judge you, and say you have no religion, unless you say and do just as they do; remember the Lord is Judge, and he will do right, and all will be rewarded according to their works.

The enemy has done his utmost for a few weeks past to throw me off the track; but, thanks be to God, I have a sure foundation to stand upon. I do know in whom I have believed, and that he is able to keep me from falling. No earthly power can keep me from the love of God.

The Lord is soon coming, and by grace divine I mean to be ready to hail him with joy. I long for the time to come when the saints will all be gathered from east and west, north and south, and sit down in the kingdom of God, no more to be separated forever. Lord, hasten the time. Mary E. Streeter.

No. Dana, Mass.

Bro. S. Marsh writes from Shabbona:—"The Amboy campmeeting and the Dekalb tent meeting were of the best kind. The Brn. were lovely, brotherly, and liberal toward each other. Indeed, there appeared to be a general burst of joy, in hope of the Lord's soon coming; and I believe the time question is the principal cause of it. I have been very much interested in the time question. I believe the Lord will come in 1868, and I rejoice in it. I wish it might be sooner. By the help of God, I mean to wait patiently, and live by every word of God."

Obituaries.

Noble. At Westfield, West Parish, Mass., Sept. 9th, 1865, George Noble, after a few days sickness of a fever, when he fell sweetly asleep, looking unto Jesus, aged sixty-two years.

For more than forty years, Bro. Noble had confessed and endeavored to follow Christ; he having been converted when he was nineteen years of age, among the Methodists, in a revival, which occurred in connection with labors of Sister Barnes, who was afterwards a missionary to the Indians. This was before the old-time Methodism had been so largely diluted with worldliness as it has been in later days. Among those men of God who then fought the fight of faith, Bro. Noble stood firm and steadfast, and in his quiet way sought to work the work of God. For twenty-four successive years, in his attendance at meetings, it is said he averaged four meetings a week, besides Sundays. His house was a pilgrim's home, where God's servants could come and rest and pray, and feel that their peace abode there, and that the Son of Peace was there. He was an old friend and associate of my honored father, through long years of labor and conflict in the good warfare.

Some ten or twelve years since, after mature consideration and protracted investigation, concerning the nature and destiny of man, the pretensions of Spiritualism, and the teachings of the Bible, he was led to look to Christ as the only giver of immortal life, and to his glorious appearing as the blessed hope of the waiting church.

Henceforth, his position was taken, and whenever duty called, he was ready to bear witness to the truth. "His peculiar views," as some were pleased to call the words of God, which he so freely quoted, were not entirely relished by all of his former brethren; and at one time an effort was made to expel him from the Methodist Episcopal church, on account of the Scriptural heresies which he had embraced, concerning the nature and hope of man, and the wages of sin. The effort proved a failure; Rev. Daniel E. Chapin, and other prominent Methodists, stood up like men for the old-fashioned Methodist principles of toleration and freedom of private judgment.

He continued in the Methodist church to the close of his life. With other congenial spirits, who sympathized with him in his waiting for the consolation of Israel, he met from week to week in the class meeting of Bro. E. A. Eggleston, where they rejoiced together in the hope of the glory of God; and a distance of some four miles, and the darkness of night, and the infirmities of advancing age, did not prevent his constant attendance upon public and social worship.

He was also zealous in conversation, in the distribution of books and tracts, and in trying to spread the message of salvation in the regions beyond. Mild in manners, slow of speech, industrious, prudent, exact and honorable in business, he commanded the respect of community, and had a good report of them that were without.

At last the good man came to die. In perfect resignation and in peace, he passed his closing hours. He had no fears, and no will or choice concerning the issue of his sickness. His chamber of pain was a Bethel indeed—the house of God and the gate of heaven. Those who thought his faith gloomy, and his hope vain, should have heard the shouts of joy, and the hallelujahs of triumph of that quiet and retiring man, as, at last, with every doubt and fear forever gone, he praised the Lord upon his dying bed. They would have learned that this "blessed hope" "maketh not ashamed," because the love of God is shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost.

Summoned by telegraph, the writer barely found time to stop upon his westward tour to look upon the pallid face of his own and his father's friend, and to pronounce above his lifeless form words of consolation and hope to the throngs of friends and mourners who gathered there, from the words of the Psalmist, "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."—Psa. 37: 37.

So devout men carried him to his burial, and lamented over him, and his widowed wife and fatherless children shed their tears in sorrow, but yet in hope. His brethren and neighbors lament him, and the testimony of one of the members of the church was, "Bless God, that they didn't get him out of the church." The pastor of the Methodist church in Westfield assisted the writer in conducting the services of the funeral, and commended the afflicted ones to the fatherly care of God, who is their comforter. May they know the God of their father, and follow his faith, and so greet him again when the warfare is accomplished, and the salvation of the church completed. H. L. Hastings.

Tuck. Died in Bangor, Me., Oct. 21st, of heart disease, Joseph S. Tuck, aged sixty-five years, three months and fifteen days.

Father was a firm believer in the soon coming of Christ to raise the dead, change the living saints from mortal to immortal, and establish his everlasting kingdom. He was an old and tried Adventist, having been with that people from the very first of their existence as a people, witnessing and participating in the many trials and disappointments through which they have passed. He was a man of keen perception, mighty in the Scriptures, apt to teach, and possessed a heart always open to receive the truth, however unpopular it might be. He was the first one in this region who advocated the doctrine of no future life out of Christ.

Father is dead. The cruel hand of death has torn him from our midst. A large family are left to mourn his loss. May the Lord enable us so to live that we may all meet again in the kingdom of God.

A sermon was preached by Bro. Henry Perkins.

Charles C. Tuck.

Wait. Died at her residence in Warwick, Oct. 24th, 1865, Ellen M., wife of Dea. James B. Wait, in the thirty-first year of her age.

We think of her as a noble woman, a lovely wife, and a christian mother. Having had from her youth up a fixed principle of right, her life was a constant example of the religion of Christ. A higher degree of purity characterized her course than is often found in mortal life. Early in life, and by her own exertions, she stored her mind with useful knowledge, fitting herself for any position in life. May the great Redeemer, who ever hears the prayers of his children, take her little ones in his care, and soon, very soon call that mother from her grave, and restore her to her sorrowing husband and bereft children.

We've waited long, our God, for thee,
Let not the hour delay;
Oh, call our loved ones from the tomb,
And chase our tears away.

S. L. Reed.

Fisk. Died in Starkville, Herkimer county, N. Y., Elmira N. Fisk, daughter of Sister Lydia B. Fisk, aged about twenty-one years.

Her illness was short and very severe, and much of the time she was deprived of reason; but in her lucid moments she rejoiced and sang praises to God. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, and her funeral was attended by a minister of that church. She fell asleep in Jesus on Sunday, Oct. 8th. Her mother, who is well known in many places as a faithful and devoted servant of Christ, and a believer in his near coming, is thus bereft of her only earthly stay and staff in her declining years; but she mourns in sure and certain hope of a speedy return of her child from the "land of the enemy;" thus drying her tears, she meekly exclaims, "Thy will, O Lord, not mine, be done;" and "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." Randolph E. Ladd.

Alden. Died in Livermore, Me., Oct. 3d, 1865, Chesman T., son of Columbus and Ardela Alden, aged six years and ten months.

He was one of a family of twelve very interesting and highly intellectual children. May God's grace richly sustain the bereaved family, and help them to look forward to that time, when that sown in weakness shall be raised in power; that sown in corruption shall be raised in incorruption.

"Then, parents, dry your tears away,
And rest in Jesus day by day,
For soon your dear one, now asleep,
Will wake and live, no more to weep."

E. M. Haggett.

Young. Died in Livermore, Me., Aug. 12th, 1865, Lucius L., son of Lucius A. and Harriet B. Young, aged six years and seven months.

Thus our dear brother, in a few short months, has been called to part with his companion and his two only children. But he sorrows not as those who have no hope, for he believes "that Jesus died and rose again; even so them also that sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

"O father, weep not o'er his grave,
For Jesus died such ones to save;
And he has triumphed o'er the tomb,
And Lucius soon will wake to bloom."

E. M. Haggett.

Buxton. Died in Worcester, Mass., Oct. 20th, 1865, Lydia M., wife of Dr. H. W. Buxton, aged thirty-nine years.

At her funeral, words of comfort were spoken by Bro. S. G. Mathewson, to a large circle of mourners and friends.

A companion, three children, a mother, sister, and brothers, are called to mourn the loss of one whose meek and quiet spirit none knew but to love. The home is desolate now; but her companion, though in such bitter affliction, sorrows not without hope; for he is assured by the promises of God's word that she will rise again at the last day.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Oct. 18th, Queenstown 19th.

Lord Palmerston is dead. He had been seriously ill for some days from the effects of a cold. The symptoms had been very alarming, but he steadily improved. On the night of the 17th, however, a bulletin was issued to the effect that he had become worse since morning and that it could not be disguised he was very seriously ill. Telegrams were constantly being sent to the Queen at Balmoral. Palmerston would have completed his 81st year on the 20th of October.

The sensation news, published by the London Times, that Secretary Seward recently sent a peremptory dispatch to France, continued to attract attention, but it was generally regarded as wholly unfounded, and this view was confirmed by the Moravian's news. The Times contends that, let this remonstrance be what it may, coolness has certainly arisen between France and America.

The Paris Temps says the deaths from cholera in that city were averaging 200 per day.

TWO DAYS LATER.

The Globe announces that Earl Russell has undertaken the duty of reforming the Cabinet. A council is called for the 26th, when the matter will be decided.

The Daily News says it is everywhere assumed that an administration will duly be constructed to the extent rendered necessary by the appointment of a new Premier.

The Times says the augury is very difficult; the new Parliament and complications that may lead to war and the termination of the interregnum, as the administration has been called, constitute a new and inscrutable state of things.

The Daily News says no liberal Ministry is possible without Mr. Gladstone. Any Peer can lead the Lords, but there is no question as to who shall lead the Commons.

Lord Palmerston would be buried quite privately at Romsey on the 25th. The journals continue to lament his loss.

Most of the European governments have given their assent to an international conference at Constantinople for preventing the spread of the Asiatic cholera.

The cholera had almost disappeared at Madrid.

It is stated that M. Mirode, the Papal Minister of War, has not resigned, but has obtained leave of absence. It is reported that the Papal army is much disorganized.

Liverpool Oct. 26th, Queenstown 27th.

Austria and Prussia have addressed a severe remonstrance to the Senate of Frankfort against agitation and the coarse attacks on the two principal German powers, and threaten the Mayor and Senate with intervention should further meetings of delegates be permitted.

The Prussian Commissioners have announced that a powerful military force will be used to prevent the inhabitants of Schleswig from recognizing the Duke of Augustenburg, or other person, as having authority in the Duchy. The ovation to the Duke at Eckenford caused this demonstration.

The cholera had entirely disappeared from Barcelona, Valencia and the Baliaro Islands. At Madrid fifty cases occurred on the 23d, of which thirty-two were fatal.

DOMESTIC.

New York, Oct. 31. The Express says Havana advices confirm the accounts of a mutiny at Jamaica. Many revolting murders have been committed. A white magistrate has been killed, his fingers and toes were cut off and his bowels ripped open by negro women. The greatest alarm prevailed among the whites, and the mutiny was spreading.

New York, Nov. 6. Havana files per steamer Columbia give particulars regarding the negro insurrection in Jamaica. Kingston is in great excitement, business is entirely suspended, the population placing themselves in a state of defense. An immense meeting had been held, volunteers enlisting under the order of the Governor. The rebellion raged with fury in St. Thomas. In the East unprecedented outrages were committed upon lives and property. The volunteers sent to the insurrectionary districts were only partially successful in repulsing the insurgents. One band of negroes, 800 strong, and thoroughly organized, was sweeping everything before it. Kingston and other volunteers were being pressed forward.

A dispatch from Hon. W. P. George was read in the Commercial Exchange, stating that he had been wounded, and that Hon. Baron Von Ketchhool, one of the officials in St. Thomas, Dr. Gerard, Charles Anthony Price, Stephen Cooke and Rev. Mr. Hershell had been killed. A later dispatch confirms the above, and adds that the insurgents killed an official named Henry Alberga and cut his head off. Inspector of Police Finances, Bowen, and John Walton were also shot by the rebels. The Secretary Justice of the Peace is reported murdered.

A council of war was held in Kingston on the 10th ult. Subsequently martial law was declared for the District of Surrey in the name of the Queen. Major Gen. O'Connor has taken command of the troops, and is concentrating them. Active measures will be taken for a vigorous campaign against the rebellion. Paul Bogle, leader of the rebellion, has not yet been arrested.

The latest dispatch received from the seat of war to the Governor says the insurrection is increasing. Troops are wanted and there is no time to be lost. Among the clergy killed is Rev. Mr. Foote.

The Fenian Panic in Canada.

New York, Nov. 4. The Herald's Toronto dispatch says the Fenian excitement still continues. Quite a number of private soldiers are under arrest for sympathizing with the Fenians. The city and its approaches are picketed. Many Americans are preparing to leave for the States. Numbers of Orangemen are arriving for the defense of this district. I have positive information that the Canadian Brotherhood has a fast steamer ready for armament. It is reported that a number of officials of the government are engaged in the conspiracy. Great military preparations are going forward.

New York, Nov. 5. The Herald has a dispatch from Toronto, Canada West, dated yesterday, that says Ex-Grand Master of the Orangemen, Gowan, has published a manifesto declaring that the Fenians are coming, and calling Orangemen to arms. The Orange organ—the Watchman—declares that it has positive information of a contemplated invasion of the provinces; that six hundred armed men were in Toronto; that members of the government are fraternizing with the Fenians; that the Premier winks at the contemplated attempt to take the provinces from the British connection; and that the Fenians drill in Toronto at night.

The Herald's Toronto dispatch says the Ministerial organ, L'Union Nationale, in speaking of the contemplated Fenian invasion, declares that the government is organizing an army of 40,000 men to be stationed along the entire frontier line of Quebec and Toronto, and to garrison all the frontier towns. Depositors are withdrawing their funds from the banks, and a panic prevails. The French Cadets, who left for Mexico, have turned up on the other side of the Lake, where they have unpacked kits and settled down.

The Fenians in the District of Columbia number about 2000 men. They are actively preparing for a movement, and are purchasing uniforms, arms, etc. Yesterday notice appeared in the public press signed by the committee, cautioning the brotherhood against further action in the anticipated movement until they knew more and hear further from the committee.

Cholera in New York.

The appearance of Asiatic cholera in New York, although it is thus far confined to a single vessel in quarantine, will send a wave of alarm through the country, out of all proportion, probably, to the causes. We all knew that this mysterious malady was traveling westward, and was to be expected here sometime during the present autumn. Our hope was that its arrival would be delayed till the settled cold weather, which has always proved a powerful check upon its virulence. And it is now a matter of doubt whether the cases, bad as they are, which are brought over in the steamer Atlanta, may not be so far in advance of that poisonous current in the air upon which the cholera is supposed to depend, that, with proper care, the disease may be kept from extending itself in this country at the present time.

But as to that a few days will determine. However, it is the duty of every one in the meanwhile to make up his mind that, sooner or later, we are to have a partial visitation of the cholera. This being so, it should be remembered that the first thing to do on the part both of individuals and the community, is to get rid of all alarm and excitement about it, as these are the very worst evils we can have in a sanitary point of view. The next thing is to make war—a war of extermination—on filth in every form and shape. Our municipal authorities should, without a moment's delay, take their share of the matter in hand. Every householder should look to his own premises, from garret to cellar, and see that every thing is clean and sweet. Every head of family should have a thoughtful regard for the physical regimen of himself and his own; for, differing as the medical authorities do upon almost every point in the treatment of cholera, they all agree that it never or rarely attacks a person in a high state of health, and that its virulence is in inverse proportion to the patient's vigor of constitution. The requisite preparations, then, may be summed up in these words, equanimity, cleanliness, good health.—Boston Journal.

The Steamer Atlanta. Of the passengers and their conduct under the trying circumstances, the Evening Post says:

"The passengers of the Atlanta, numbering five hundred and fifty-two, were principally Germans, excepting the cabin passengers, of whom there were forty-eight. The vessel had taken nearly all the latter on board at London, and part of the steerage passengers; but she stopped at Havre, where more passengers were received.

The persons who brought the cholera on board came from Havre. On the day after the Atlanta went to sea, one of them, a child, was attacked, and died on the following day. Others became sick immediately, but the disease was confined entirely to the steerage. None of the cabin passengers were in the least degree affected by it. The cases of sickness numbered from fifty to sixty, and there were fifteen deaths.

The steerage passengers on the Atlanta did not know, it is said, till they arrived at this port, that the disease that was among them was the cholera. Some of the most intelligent among them suspected the fact, but the physician carefully withheld positive information from them, fearing the effect of excitement among them. It is thought that this accounts for the fact that only fifteen of the five hundred persons who were exposed to the disease died of it.

New York, Nov. 6. The Herald's intelligence from the Florida coast gives accounts of the ravages of the recent terrible storm. The destruction of shipping was very great. The ship Mersey, of Liverpool, foundered, and nine of her officers and crew were lost. The survivors suffered terribly on a raft, and quenched their thirst with the blood of one of their number. They were rescued by the U. S. steamer Newburn. The Prussian barque Hurger was disabled. The steamship Catherine Whiting, of New York, of eight hundred and eighty-one tons, from New York, for Galveston, ship Caroline Nesmith, of New York, and barques John Wesley, of Searsport, Waltham, of Richmond, Me., and J. M. Harwood, of Bath, were lost.

☞ The minister of an English church, the pews of which bring a rental of six hundred and fifty pounds, announces that he is about to abandon this source of income, and make all the seats free. He was converted to the free church system by reading a pamphlet thereon, which has lately attracted much attention in England.

☞ Over eleven hundred immigrants per day have arrived from Europe at New York during the past week.

Discussion.

A Discussion is to be held in Boston, at Kast Hall, between Rufus Wendell and Rev. J. S. Loveland. Question: Is it true that the spirits of those who have once lived in the flesh return and communicate with those who still live on the earth, as asserted by modern Spiritualists? The proof to be drawn from the Bible, reason, and philosophy. The discussion is to commence Tuesday evening, Nov. 14th, at 7 o'clock, and to continue four evenings.

Notice.

The Easterly Maine Advent Quarterly Conference will be holden at North Searsport, Me., to commence Thursday evening, Nov. 23d, and continue over the following Sunday. It is earnestly hoped the brethren may come in the fullness of the blessing of the gospel of Christ.

For the brethren, Thos. Smith, F. A. Baker.

Notice.

On Tuesday, Dec. 5th, I propose starting east to Champlain, Clinton Co., N. Y., via. Cleveland and Erie R. R. to Edinboro, Pa.; thence, via. Erie and Buffalo, to Syracuse; thence to Ogdensburg, and thence to Rouses Point, N.Y. If any of the brethren on either or all of these routes desire preaching by me "as I go," please write to me at once, directing to Olena, Huron Co., O., and I will forward the appointment, and time for them to meet myself, wife and boy at the cars. Do not delay.

Elder G. W. Stetson.

Western Quar. Conference.

The next session of this conference will be held in the Booker school-house, Gardiner, Me., commencing Thursday evening, Nov. 30th, at 7 o'clock. Brethren from abroad will call on Joseph Booker, Thomas Booker, and George Peacock. Come to this meeting, brethren, prepared to work for the Lord. C. H. Leverton, Sec.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Deerfield, N. H., commencing Wednesday evening, Nov. 15th, to hold over the following Sunday. Provision will be made to take care of all who come. Meeting near Bro. John M. Quimby's. S. W. Bishop. D. S. Holt.

Notice.

The appointment for the Western New York Christian Conference, as published last week, is hereby withdrawn. F. Burr.

Appointments.

☞ We would say to our preaching Brethren that it is necessary we should receive their appointments as early as Tuesday Morning, as our paper goes to press about noon, otherwise they will not be inserted till the week following.

For the World's Crisis.

"ALL QUIET."

"All quiet along the old world now," they say,
Except now and then a convulsion
Is heard from the wrath of the nations afar,
Like the tempest-tossed waves of the ocean.
"'Tis nothing; a murder or two now and then,
Will not hinder the world's conversion;
Not one of them lost, they have only escaped
From the body prepared as their prison."

All quiet all over the fair earth to-night;
Of safety the nations are dreaming;
They see not the signs of the last dreadful day,
Nor the light of the lone watcher gleaming.
A tremulous sigh struggles up from his breast,
Joy and sorrow his bosom are heaving;
Hark! that blast of glad music! his Captain's awake!
But the multitudes round him are sleeping.

He's awake! and is coming in battle array,—
In the beams of the morning are gleaming
The trumpet, the sword, and the dazzling train;
In the breezes his banner is streaming.
Now who's for the Lord! who's received the blessed One,
Who for us was laid low in a manger,
Who for us 'mid temptation and poverty toiled,
And suffered and died as a stranger?

Behold! as a conqueror now he appears,
Bright glory his sweet brow adorning;
His arm shall now gather you safe to his side,
Secure from his foes' bitter scorning.
All quiet along the bright earth in that day,
When the Savior in splendor is reigning;
He has banished our fears, all our tears,
No more sickness, nor death, nor complaining.

THE BIBLE TRIED.

BY REV. B. T. ROBERTS.

"The word of the Lord is tried." 2 Sam. 22: 31.

The mariner about to start upon a long and perilous voyage, avails himself of the best chart within his reach. No one would think of setting out without anything to direct his course. A prudent man would search carefully for the best instructions. How highly he would prize a chart giving all needed information, which had been tested by a thousand voyages, and been found, in all respects, entirely reliable!

To the voyager over life's tempestuous ocean God offers such a chart. There is not a rock on which the soul may be shipwrecked that is not pointed out; there is no part of the voyage in which a dangerous storm can arise, but that he is directed to a safe and accessible harbor; no danger can threaten against which ample security has not been provided.

With the Bible in his hand, no one need go to hell. If he does it will be his own fault. No one need be unhappy even here; for he is assured that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come. The Bible assures man that his aspirations for immortality are not baseless. He is to live forever. He is warned against the indulgence of passions that would render him miserable in time and in eternity. He is directed to the fountain in which impurity may be washed away. The Spirit to apply the remedy to every sinner's case is promised. The conditions upon which the blessings of salvation may be enjoyed by all are laid down with great plainness. He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned. The wicked shall be turned into hell. The pure in heart shall see God. They that have done evil shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal. Upon the statements of the Bible you may rely with the utmost confidence. It has been tested in every possible way. "THE WORD OF THE LORD IS TRIED." It has been tried both by enemies and friends.

1. Its history has been tried. There is a fullness in its historical details which would render it easy to detect mistakes did any occur in the Divine record. But not a single fact of the Bible has been successfully contradicted. Many of its most important statements have been confirmed by historians of the greatest authority.

The general deluge was an event which modern infidels have sometimes dared to call in question. But the account contained in the Bible is not only confirmed by the physical appearance of the earth, which shows that the highest mountains were once covered with water, but ancient writers, whose credibility is unquestioned, relate this event in language which bears a striking resemblance to that of the Bible. Berosus, an ancient Chaldean historian, wrote the history of his country, fragments of which history are yet preserved. The following account of the flood he copied from the archives of the temple of Belus at Babylon. Noah he calls Xisuthrus, places him, as the Bible does, in the tenth generation, says he was divinely warned, gives the dimensions of the ark, mentions the sending out of the dove at three several times, and the resting of the ark upon the mountains of Armenia. He says: "After the death of Ardates, the ninth sovereign, his son Xisuthrus reigned. In his time happened the great deluge, the history of which is thus described. The deity Cronus appeared to him in a vision and warned him that on the 15th day of the month Desius there would be a flood by which mankind would be destroyed. He therefore enjoined him to write a history of the beginning, procedure and conclusion of all things and to bury it in the city of the sun at Sippara; and to build a vessel and take with him into it his friends and relations and to convey on board everything necessary to sustain life, together with the different animals, both birds and quadrupeds, and trust himself fearlessly to the deep. Having asked the Deity whither he was to sail, he was answered, to the gods, upon which he offered up a prayer for the good of mankind. He then obeyed the divine admonition and built a vessel 3033 ft. in length and 1213 ft. in breadth. Into this he put every thing which he had prepared, and last of all conveyed into it his wife, his children and his friends.

"After the flood had been upon the earth, and was in time abated, Xisuthrus sent out birds from the vessel, which not finding any food, nor any place whereupon they might rest their feet, returned to him again. After an interval of some days he sent them forth a second time; and they now returned with their feet tinged with mud. He made a trial a third time with these birds; but they returned to him no more: from whence he judged that the surface of the earth had appeared above the waters. He therefore made an opening in the vessel, and upon looking out found that it was stranded upon the side of some mountain; upon which he immediately quitted it with his wife, his daughter, and the pilot. Xisuthrus then paid his adoration to the earth; and having constructed an altar, offered sacrifices to the gods, and with those who had come out with him disappeared. The vessel being stranded in Armenia, some part of it yet remains in the [illegible] mountains of Armenia [illegible] an account of the flood. Noah he styles Deucalion. He speaks of the different kinds of animals preserved in the ark, and says, "The greatest harmony subsisted between them through the influence of the Deity.

Concerning Abraham, Eupolemus, who wrote some 150 years before Christ, says, "In the tenth generation after the flood lived Abraham, of noble race and superior to all others in wisdom, of whom they relate that he was the inventor of astrology and Chaldean magic; and that on account of his eminent piety he was esteemed by God. It is further said that, under the directions of God he removed and lived in Phenicia and there taught the Phenicians the motions of the sun and moon and all other things, for which reason he was held in great reverence by their king." Berosus, also speaking of this eminent man, states, "That after the deluge, in the tenth generation, was a certain man among the Chaldeans, renowned for his justice and great exploits, and for his skill in the celestial sciences." Josephus says that "Abram communicated to the Egyptians Arithmetic and the science of astronomy."

Concerning Christ, Tacitus, a celebrated writer of Roman history, who flourished in the second century after Christ, records, "That the founder of the sect of christians was Christ, who suffered death in the reign of Tiberius, under his procurator, Pontius Pilate." Pliny became governor of Pontus and Bithynia not far from St. John's death. In his letter to the Emperor he states that he sometimes made the christians confess under torture. He says, "that they were wont to meet together on a stated day, before it was light, and sing among themselves a hymn to Christ as God; and bind themselves by an oath not to commit any wickedness, not to be guilty of theft, or robbery, or adultery, never to falsify their word, nor to deny a pledge committed to them when called upon to return it."

Lucian, a bitter enemy of the Christians, who flourished in the third century, bears testimony to the principal historical facts of Christianity; That its founder was crucified in Palestine, and was worshiped by the christians. He says, "It is incredible what expedition they use when any of their friends are known to be in trouble. In a word they spare nothing upon such an occasion, for these miserable men have no doubt they shall be immortal, and live forever, therefore they contemn death, and many surrender themselves to sufferings. Moreover their first law-giver has taught them that they are all brethren when once they have turned and renounced the gods of the Greeks, and worship this master of theirs who was crucified, and engage to live according to his laws. They have also a sovereign contempt for all things of this world, and look upon them as common."

"Josephus, (Ant. B. 18, chap. iii, §3.) says, "Now about this time there was Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was the Christ. And when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men among us had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, according as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe of Christians so named from him are not extinct at this day."

2. The word of the Lord is tried by its doctrines. Human reason is not competent to discover them. The most renowned philosophers of the most highly civilized nations that ever flourished without the Bible, held the wildest notions upon the most important subjects. Socrates believed in a supreme God, but sacrificed to fictitious deities. Pythagoras believed in the immortality of the soul, but taught the absurd doctrine of the transmigration of the soul from man to beast and from beast to man. Not a single doctrine which reason generally approves, have philosophers ever taught which was not found in the word of God. The wisest men of antiquity acknowledged the need of a Divine revelation.

3. By the morality it inculcates. Warmer praises we do not ask for than those which have been extorted by its most bitter enemies. Rousseau, a French infidel, says, "I will confess to you that the majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with admiration as the purity of the gospel has its influence on my heart." Paine, the well-known infidel, says, "Nothing that is here said can apply even with the most distant disrespect to the moral character of Jesus Christ. He was a virtuous and amiable man. The morality that he preached and practiced was of the most benevolent kind. He called men to the practice of moral virtue and the belief of one God. The great trait of his character is philanthropy." Bolingbroke, a celebrated English infidel writer, says, "No religion ever appeared in the world whose natural tendancy was so much directed to promote the peace and happiness of mankind as the christian. The gospel of Christ is one continual lesson of the strictest morality, of justice, benevolence and universal charity. Supposing christianity to be a human invention, it is the most amiable and successful invention that ever was imposed on mankind for their good."

4. By its influence on communities. The first collection ever taken for benevolent purposes was for the poor saints at Jerusalem; the first hospital ever opened for the distressed was by a christian widow. Look among the present nations of the world, and you will find that, without a solitary exception, where the Bible is most read and its precepts most generally practiced, there is the most intelligence and refinement, the most public and private virtue and the most personal and domestic happiness. This could not be the case were the Bible a cunningly devised fable.

5. By the assaults of its enemies. In the year 303 Diocletian ordered the churches to be torn down and the Bible to be burned. In one month 17,000 martyrs suffered death. In the province of Egypt, 144,000 died by persecution, and 700,000 through the fatigues of banishment, or of the public works to which they were condemned. Gildas, an old British historian, relates that all the books of the Holy Scriptures that could be found were burned in the streets. In defence of the Bible the greatest tortures were endured. Felix, of Tibiura, condemned to be beheaded because he refused to give up the Scriptures, said, "I thank thee, O Lord, that I have lived fifty-six years, have preserved the Gospel, and have preached faith and truth. O, my Lord Jesus, the God of Heaven and earth, I bow my head to be sacrificed to thee who livest to all eternity." Euplius of Catona in Sicily, being seized with gospels in his hand, was examined on the rack, "Why do you keep the Scriptures, forbidden by the Emperor?" "Because I am a Christian. Life eternal is in them; he that gives them up loses life eternal." Did this determined effort succeed? Nay, God took care of his word, and it mightily prevailed.

Paine says, "I have gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood with an axe on his shoulder and fell trees, here they lie; and the priests, if they can, may replant them. They may perhaps stick them in the ground but they will never grow." Has the tree of life died? It is spreading its branches over the earth, and the nations are partaking of its life-giving fruit, and reposing in safety beneath its branches. "In five years," he declared, "there will not be a Bible in America."

Voltaire boasted that with one hand he would overthrow that edifice of Christianity which required the hands of twelve apostles to built up. His press at Ferney was afterwards employed in printing the Holy Scriptures. The first meeting of a Bible society at Edinburg was held in the room in which Hume, the infidel, died.

6. By men in whose talents and candor the world has confidence. Patrick Henry, a short time before his death, said to a friend, who found him reading the Bible, "Here is a book worth more than all the other books which ever were printed."

Dr. Franklin, visited by a skeptical young man upon his death-bed, said, "Young man, my advice to you is that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is your certain interest."

John Locke, the profound thinker and acute metaphysician, cried out, "O, the depths of the riches of the goodness and the knowledge of God! In the Bible are contained the words of eternal life. IT HAS GOD FOR ITS AUTHOR, SALVATION FOR ITS END, AND TRUTH WITHOUT ANY MIXTURE OF ERROR FOR ITS MATTER."

Dr. Johnson, to a young gentleman, said, "Young man, attend to the voice of one who has possessed a certain degree of fame in the world, and who will shortly appear before his Judge. Read the Bible every day of your life."

Lord Bacon said, "That a little smattering of philosophy would lead a man to Atheism, but a thorough insight of it will lead him back again to a first cause. He affirms that the first principle of right reason is religion, and seriously professes that after all his studies and investigations, he durst not die with any other thoughts than those of religion, taught as it is professed among christians."

John Q. Adams wrote to his son as follows: "So great is my veneration for the Bible and so strong my belief, that when duly read and meditated upon, it is of all the books in the world that which contributes most to make men good, wise and happy, that the earlier my children begin to read it, and the more steadily they pursue the practice of reading it throughout their lives, the more lively and confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful with years, to their country, respectable members of society, and a real blessing to their parents. I have myself, for many years, made it a practice to read the Bible through every year."

7. It has been tried by experience. A pious slave, whom a learned sceptical white man sought to turn from his faith in the Scriptures, replied, "I cannot meet your arguments, but I know the Bible is true by its effects upon my heart." This is a test which cannot fail. The Bible abounds in promises, relating both to the life which now is and that which is to come. They are to be found in almost every chapter. A large proportion of them refer to blessings which may be secured at once. Of the thousands of thousands who have tried those promises, who ever knew a single one of them to fail? Among the many who have backslidden, and the many who have proved faithful to the grace of God, what individual ever testified that any promise contained in the Bible was not fulfilled when the conditions were fairly met? Any one, however uneducated, may test the Scriptures. Let him repent of his sins and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and he will find a peace that passeth all understanding. Scepticism has its seat in the heart. Men reject the Bible because the Bible condemns them. But their rejection of its claims does not alter its truth. It has stood every test which could be applied to it for eighteen hundred years, and from one and all it has come forth like gold tried in the fire, all the brighter for the ordeal through which it has passed.

Let us, then, cling to the Bible. Let us obey its precepts and claim its exceeding great and precious promises. It encourages us to seek for degrees of grace which enable us to triumph over all difficulties and rejoice in the Lord always with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Let us, then, search the Scriptures and be enabled to say with the Psalmist, "THY WORD, O, LORD, HAVE I HID IN MY HEART!"—Earnest Christian.

THE TEST OF A NEW CREATURE.

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." 2 Cor. 13: 5.

1. Do I feel any pride; or am I partaker of the meek and lowly mind that was in Jesus? Am I dead to all desire of praise? If any despise me, do I like them worse for it? Or, if they love and approve, do I love them more on that account? Am I willing to be accounted useless, and of no consequence,—glad to be made of no reputation? Do humiliations give me real pleasure, and is it the language of my heart,

Make me little and unknown,
Loved and prized by God alone?

2. Does God bear witness in my heart that it is purified? that in all things I please him?

3. Is the life I live, "by the faith of the Son of God;" so that Christ dwelleth in me? Is Christ the life of all my affections and designs, as my soul is the life of my body? Is my eye single and my soul full of light,—all eye within and without; always watchful?

4. Have I always the presence of God? Does no cloud come between God and the eye of my faith? Can I "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks?"

5. Am I saved from the fear of man? Do I speak plainly to all, neither fearing their frowns, nor seeking their favors? Have I no shame of religion; and am I always ready to confess Christ, to suffer with his people, and to die for his sake?

6. Do I deny myself at all times, and take up my cross as the Spirit of God leads me? Do I embrace the cross of every sort, being willing to give up my ease and convenience to [illegible] to my hours and customs? Does the cross sit light upon me, and am I willing to suffer all the will of God? Can I trample on pleasure and pain? Have I

A soul inured to pain,
To hardship, grief, and loss,
Bold to take up, firm to sustain,
The consecrated cross?

7. Are my bodily senses, and outward things, all sanctified to me? Do I not seek my own things to please myself? Do I seek grace more for God's honor than my own profit, preferring the glory of God to all in earth or heaven, the giver to the gift?

8. Am I "poor in spirit?" Do I "take pleasure in infirmities, necessities, distresses, reproaches;" so that out of weakness, want, and danger I may cast myself on the Lord? Have I no false shame in approaching God? Do I seek to be saved, as a poor sinner, by grace alone?

9. Do I not "lean to my own understanding?" Am I ready to give up the point, when contradicted, unless conscience forbid? Am I easy to be persuaded? Do I esteem every one better than myself? Am I as willing to be a cypher as to be useful, and does my zeal burn bright notwithstanding this willingness to be nothing?

10. Have I no false wisdom, goodness, strength; as if the grace I feel were my own? Do I never take that glory to myself which belongs to Christ? Do I feel my want of Christ as much as ever, to be my all? and do I draw near to God, as poor and needy, only presenting before him his well-beloved Son? Can I say,

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merit of thy death?
I shall hang upon my God,
Till I thy perfect glory see,
Till the sprinkling of thy blood
Shall speak me up to thee?"

Do I find joy in being thus nothing, empty, undeserving, giving all the glory to Christ? Or do I wish that grace made me something, instead of God being all?

11. Have I meekness? Does it bear rule over all my tempers, affections, and desires; so that my hopes, fears, joy, zeal, love, and hatred are duly balanced? Do I feel no disturbance from others, and do I desire to give none? If any offend me, do I still love them, and make it an occasion to pray for them? If condemned by the world, do I entreat;—if condemned by the godly, am I one in whose mouth there is no reproof; replying only as conscience and not as impatient nature dictates? If in the wrong, do I confess it? If in the right, do I submit, being content to do well, and suffer for it? It is the sin of superiors to be overbearing, of inferiors to be stubborn; if, then, I am a servant, do I yield not only to the gentle, but to the froward, committing my cause in silence to God; or, if a master, do I "show all long-suffering?" The Lord of all was "as he that serveth." If I am the greatest, do I make myself least, "and the servant of all;" if a teacher, am I lowly, meek, and patient, not conceited, self-willed, nor dogmatic? Am I ready to give up the claims of respect due to age, station, parent, master, etc; or do I rigidly exact those demands?

12. Do I possess resignation; am I content with whatever is, or may be; seeing that God, the Author of all events, does, and will do, all for my good? Do I desire nothing but God, willing to part with all, if the Lord manifest his will for my so doing? Do I "know how to abound," and yet not gratify unnecessary wants; but being content with things needful, do I faithfully and freely dispose of all the rest for the help of others? Do I know how to suffer need? Is my confidence unshaken while I feel the distress of poverty, and have the prospect of future want, while, humanly speaking, strangling were better than life? And, in these circumstances, do I pity those who, having plenty, waste it in excess, instead of helping me?

13. Am I just; doing in all things as I would others should do unto me? Do I render homage to those above me, not presuming on their lenity and condescension? As a superior, do I exercise no undue authority, taking no advantage of the timidity, respect, or necessity of any man? Do I consider the great obligation superiority lays me under, of being lowly and kind, and of setting a good example?

14. Am I temperate, using the world, and not abusing it? Do I receive outward things in the order of God, making earth a scale to heaven? Is the satisfaction I take in the creation consistent with my being dead to all below, and a means of leading me more to God? Is the turn of my mind and temper in due subjection, not leading me to any extreme, either of too much silence, or of too much talkativeness, of reserve, or freedom?

15. Am I courteous, not severe? Suiting myself to all with sweetness? Striving to give no one pain, but to gain and win all for their good?

16. Am I vigilant; redeeming time, taking every opportunity of doing good; or do I spare myself, being careless about the souls and bodies to which I might do good? Can I do no more than I do? Do I perform the most servile offices, such as require labor and humiliation, with cheerfulness? Is my conversation always seasoned with salt, at every time administering some kind of favor to those I am with?

17. Do I "love God with all my heart?" Do I constantly present myself, my time, substance, talents, and all that I have, a living sacrifice? Is every thought brought into subjection to Christ? Do I like, or dislike, only such things as are pleasing or displeasing to God?

18. Do I love God with all my strength, and are my spiritual faculties always vigorous? Do I give way to no sinful languor? Am I always on the watch? Do not business, worldly care, and conversation, damp my fervor and zeal for God?

19. Do I love my neighbor as myself; every man for Christ's sake, and honor all men, as the image of God? Do I think no evil, listen to no groundless surmises, nor judge from appearances? Can I bridle my tongue, never speaking of the faults of another, but with a view to do good; and when I am obliged to do it, have I the testimony that I sin not? Have I that love which hopeth, believeth and endureth all things?

20. How am I in my sleep? If Satan presents an evil imagination, does my will immediately resist, or give way to it?

21. Do I bear the infirmities of age or sickness, without seeking to repair the decays of nature by strong liquors; or do I make Christ my sole support, casting the burden of a feeble body into the arms of his mercy?

Jesus, Lord of all, grant thy purest gifts to every willing disciple. [illegible] mark of the prize of our high calling." Let us die to all thou art not; and seek thee with our whole heart, till we enjoy the fullness of the purchased possession.—Fletcher.

SIR ISAAC NEWTON AND VOLTAIRE

ON RAILWAY TRAVELING.

Sir Isaac Newton wrote a work upon the prophet Daniel, and another upon the book of Revelations, in one of which he said, that in order to fulfill certain prophecies before a certain duty was terminated—namely, 1260 years—there would be a mode of traveling, of which the men of his time had no conception; nay, that the knowledge of mankind would be so increased that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

Voltaire, who did not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, got hold of this, and said: "Now look at that mighty mind of Newton's, who discovered gravity, and told us such marvels for us all to admire. When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study that book called the Bible; and it seems that, in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind will be so increased, that we shall be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

"The poor dotard!" exclaimed the philosophic infidel Voltaire, in the self-complacency of his pity.

But who is the dotard now?

THOUGHTS OF GOD.

Father, thou art full of love,
Thou who rulest in heaven above,
Thou dost every sorrow know,
Always to thee will I go.

Upon thee will I depend,
Ever be my constant friend;
In distress, or pain, or need,
Me to thee oh! gently lead.

To thee will I ever look,
Never will thou me forsake;
To thee shall I ever flee,
Till thy face at last I see.

I have nothing that I love
As I do my God above;
Never will I thee deny,—
Savior, hear my humble cry.

Thou hast been my shield and sun,
Ever to thee will I come,
Until thou shalt come again,
Then with thee I hope to reign.

Savior, hasten that glad day,
For it do I ever pray;
Let thy dear saints all go home,
Never here again to roam.

THE TRUE CAUSE OF REJOICING.

Dear reader, I shall endeavor to lay before you here the true cause of rejoicing; for it must be truly a matter of congratulation to every lover of those great principles which we esteem to be christianity in its purity, that these principles have been and are so abundantly prospered. From all quarters the tidings come to us of their advancing and continually increasing triumphs over opposition and all the influences of error.

We cannot, indeed, very well exaggerate in reference to this subject. When we consider all the circumstances of the case—the complete uprooting of old prejudices and opinions, a work requisite before our faith can be accomplished, and the manner in which it has been opposed, and then see what advances it has made, and the conquests it has achieved over all that has been arrayed against it, we cannot very well speak too strongly in reference to it.

A wonderful work has been accomplished; and when we compare the present with the state of things twenty or even ten years ago, a change is presented to us hardly equalled in the annals of religious history. Truly we may say, "The Lord has done great things for us," and feel that we have reason to be glad therefor.

Great, however, as the occasion for rejoicing here presented us, is there not a higher ground which we should seek to attain, and which attained will afford us still greater occasion for congratulation? Faithfulness to the great principles professed,—a development by us and among us everywhere of their holy moral power, in their application to the heart and life; and a manifestation of their ability to work out the spiritual regeneration of man;—this is the true and only real ground of rejoicing with us; and not until this is attained should we be satisfied.

This, then, is the result which should be verily proposed among us, and which every believer in the great salvation should earnestly devote himself to accomplish. However distinguished our outward prosperity may be, we should really have little or no cause for exultation, so long as this remains unaccomplished.

It cannot be too frequently said, nor too deeply realized, that in the mere outward and physical triumph of any case or principle in the fact that it has overcome opposition, in the gaining of sympathy to itself, or in the gathering of numbers around its standard, more than gather to the standard of an opposing principle, that its true glory and results are found. These are to be found in the working out of a great and good mission by that cause or principle—in the accomplishment by it of good in each individual heart and life, and thus benefit to man and society, benefit which would be wrought, and greater than any other cause could produce. This is the true glory of any movement or principle—its only glory, to which everything else, all other successes are but means.

To rejoice, therefore, in the mere outward extension of any cause, in its mere success and advance, spite of opposition and over opposition, before this its glory appears, is to rejoice before the time—is to rejoice in the means rather than the result. And if these results were not gained, however much sympathy might be given the cause, however much opposition it might overcome, and however many friends it might gain to itself, the true end of the movement and the true cause of the rejoicing would be lost.

The christian cause of rejoicing is higher, holier, greater and nobler than any cause that can be produced. It is that mankind may be made better and purer, holier and happier by its effects; it is not only that men may be made free from sin and error, but that they be built up in the truth, led away from sin into the more devoted service of God, transformed into the image of Christ Jesus, with their spirits baptized into his spirit, with their hearts purified and their affections sanctified, and thus made partakers of that holiness without which no man can see the Lord, nor partake of those joys that are laid up in store for the righteous.

Let this subject, then, be more thought of [illegible] the advances of our cause in making the new ground it is every day gaining, let us see to it that a still greater occasion of joy is found in our increasing moral strength and power as a denomination. Let each one make it an individual matter with his own conscience—feel that individual responsibility rests on him, and that he has individual duties to perform, and then, by the help of God, be faithful;—let this be done, and great will be the blessing.

TREATMENT OF MEASLES.

BY W. T. VAIL, M. D.

This is one of those peculiar diseases especially incident to childhood, which seldom occurs to the same person more than once in a lifetime. In character it may be considered simply a peculiar kind of eruptive fever. Between measles, chicken pox, small pox, scarlatina, typhus and typhoid fevers, there exist many strong points of resemblance.

They are all fevers. All are communicated by one person to another, though in very different degrees. All vary a good deal in the intensity and complication of the development. All have their peculiar modes of development, and all pass through their regular routine of symptoms and stages. They all resemble each other also in the fact that in none of them can the peculiar generating poison be counteracted or neutralized by any poisonous drug administered to the patient, either before or after the accession of the disease, nor be removed from the system by vomiting, sweating, purging, or diuresis. Nor can any kind of treatment, either internal or external, by water or otherwise, reach their morbific causes and remove them from the organism.

We must therefore never expect to cure the patient of measles; but only to treat him while he is passing through the various stages and developments of the disease. The disease itself is to be considered merely the process of cure, the arrest or hindrance of which would be the patient's swift and certain destruction. Its developments consist in those specific evolutions which the living organism institutes and carries forward for the purpose of ridding itself of the peculiar morbific principles it has unwittingly imbibed, and whose presence it can no longer tolerate.

TREATMENT.—In numerous cases the spontaneous action of the system itself, left wholly to the care of its own organic forces, is fully equal to the task of expelling the peculiar poison, and speedily restoring the patient to health. But in many others, this labor will be so great, owing to constitutional peculiarities, or previously disordered and debilitated conditions of the system, that the organic forces may be taxed to their uttermost in the accomplishment, or may fail altogether, unless prompt, vigorous, and persevering assistance be rendered.

The most critical period of the disorder, and the one usually attended with the greatest amount of pain and suffering, is that elapsing between the first accession of the symptoms and the complete development of the eruption. During this period, usually lasting from three to five days, a little of the right kind of treatment will go a great way towards diminishing the intensity of the symptoms, abating the sufferings of the patient, and making sure of a favorable result.

Warm Baths at 95 to 100 degrees, by immersion or otherwise, will be sure to abate the unpleasant symptoms and to assist the organic functions in the process of bringing out the eruption. If taken by immersion they may be continued five to eight minutes at a time, and may be repeated from two to four times a day, as the urgency of the case may require.

Each bath may be followed up with a cold, wet compress to the forehead and eyes, should there be heat and pain therein. If the patient be feverish, and especially if confined to his bed, he will derive much benefit from the abdominal bandage wet in cool or tepid water, and from hot bottles or other warming appliances to the feet.

If the heat and pain in the head should be excessive, a gentle pouring of cold water over the head for five to ten minutes, allowing the water to drip in a sitz-tub below, will be found one of the best of measures, and may be repeated a dozen times a day or more, if required for the patient's comfort.

If the warm bath by immersion is inconvenient, a warm sitz at 100, at the same time, may be taken in stead, which may be continued fifteen or twenty minutes or more, with hot water added from time to time to sustain the temperature. This bath may be repeated three or four times a day, if need be, and may be followed by the same appliances as mentioned for the full bath.

Packs are an excellent mode of treatment in the beginning of measles. There will seldom, however, be any particular advantage in employing this bath at the very first appearance of the symptoms, nor after the eruption has fully appeared, as other baths which do not make so great a draft upon the organic forces, and which may be more easily administered, will have an equally good, if not better effect. If the patient should have chilly sensations, it would be better before packing, to give him a warm foot-bath, or warm sitz bath, or both, and then after wringing the sheet out of water at 90 to 100 degrees, let him go directly from the sitz and foot bath to the pack. If not chilly or sensitive to cold, the water used for the sheet may be 80 to 90 degrees. Let him remain in the pack an hour, or until he is thoroughly warm. He may then be taken from the pack and heated to a tepid wash-down or towel-rubbing at a temperature most agreeable to him, and the bath may be followed up with the same appliances before mentioned. This bath may be resorted to once or twice during the twenty-four hours, but if the patient needs general treatment oftener than this, some other form of bath would be preferable.

The cough in measles is sometimes troublesome and there is frequently a tendency to prolonged irritation of the lining membrane of the lungs, or that of the bronchial tubes, resulting in pneumonia or bronchitis. Cold, wet compresses applied to the upper part of the chest, covered with dry ones, are the proper treatment for this complication, and should be continued night and day. If the cough should still prove troublesome, hot fomentations to the lungs, for fifteen minutes, two or three times a day, followed up by the cold compresses, will give the desired relief. The hot fomentations may be given by wringing flannels out of hot water, and applying to the chest, covering them with dry ones, or in any other convenient way. It is sometimes done by applying compresses and hot bottles or hot bricks to the part to be fomented.

After the eruption is fully out there will be but little to be done besides keeping the extremities warm, and allowing nature to complete for herself the operation she has commenced, and which she alone is competent to finish.

Feed the patient sparingly on fruits and farinacea for a few days and all will be well.

If the eruption recedes shortly after its appearance, through taking cold or from scrofulous or other infirmity of constitution, the case becomes greatly complicated, and danger is always imminent. In this case the full warm bath at 100 to 110 degrees, or sitz and foot-bath before mentioned will be the resort. If a gentle perspiration is induced all the better, or the patient should be put to [illegible] the balance of the circulation be restored and relief obtained. Warm sitz and foot-baths should then be continued for several days, or as long as the symptoms require.

Few persons would ever die of measles, or be troubled with any dangerous diseases as sequences, were the above suggestions for treatment to be carried out.—Herald of Health.

DYSPEPSIA AMONG FARMERS.

Farmers, cultivators of the soil, look out, be careful of your diet, what you eat, how you eat, when you eat. Be temperate in all things, else look out for breakers. A Western paper says:

It is a notorious fact that indigestion prevails more extensively among the farming population of the West than among any other class. Why is this? They certainly take any reasonable amount of exercise, and that too in the open air, and in the broad sunlight. Their houses are well ventilated, and by their insulated situation free from the many unhealthy influences of a pent-up city.

We think if our farmers will pause for a moment and look this matter gravely in the face, they will discern the cause of the prevalence of this mother of most maladies, among them to be:

1. The constant use of salt meat, particularly salt pork. It is well known that this abominable swine's flesh, fried in its own filthy grease, constitutes the "staff of life" in nearly every farmhouse in the Mississippi valley. Hog and hominy are household gods, and according to the Hoosier's creed, indispensable to man's existence.

2. The use of coffee. The faithful Western housewife serves it up "strong and good," morning, noon, and night. Reader, just think of it, the vilest of flesh washed into the stomach three times a day by a decoction of narcotic poison.

3. Rapid eating. We should remember that swallowing one's food is not the first process necessary to healthy digestion. If we had gizzards we might then swallow our food whole as ducks do, but instead of gizzards, we have teeth, (some of us,) and are commanded to use them in grinding food for the stomach, but if we compel the stomach to do both its own work and that of the teeth, it will soon give signs of debility and disease in the shape of acidity, headaches, sense of weight over the whole man, irritable temper, despondency, etc.

Our farmers seldom spend more than ten or fifteen minutes at a meal, and then go immediately to the field and engage in the most laborious work. At least one hour should be spent after each meal in repose of both body and mind. This will allow the stomach to collect to itself, so to speak, a due quantity of blood, out of which to elaborate the gastric juice. Violent exercise calls the blood to other parts of the body, and thus robs the stomach.

These gentle hints are applicable, not only to farmers, but to every-day life all around us. Better all of us given to appetite, take Solomon's advice, "put a knife to our throats" "Be not among wine-bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh."—Home Thrusts.

HEALTHFULNESS OF WOMAN'S DRESS.

Man's dress is allowed to fit his body; woman's body is compelled to fit her dress. His chest and waist need no compressing—they were created perfect, and so are allowed to develop naturally, as God designed them; but she—her Maker's "last, best gift to man"—in fashion's eye a sad mistake was made in her creation. The beautifully rounded waist, so full, so perfect, with room within for all the vital organs to play their part in the great drama of physical life, is so "very ungenteel, so vulgar!" And so the little girl, whose form up to the age of thirteen or fourteen years has been left to grow as free and as untrammeled as her brother's, must now begin to pay attention to her figure. The short dress is lengthened down to sweep the floor; the childish waist, so comfortably loose, is laid aside forever; and encased in whalebones, if not in corsets, with a dress so tight that an attempt to take a free breath would endanger every hook and eye upon it, but which fashion says fits so neatly, the process of improving God's handiwork begins.

The muscles of the chest, denied development, become enfeebled by disuse, and gradually shrink away, causing the waist to diminish in size; the heart labors ineffectually to properly circulate the blood through the arteries, capillaries, and veins; the ribs, forced downward and inward, press upon the vital organs, often crowding the abdominal viscera out of position; while the poor lungs, crowded, stifled, unable to more than half expand, become the ready seat of fatal disease. And as she grows older, additional stays are deemed essential, corset-strings are tighter drawn, the dress fits still "more neatly," and by the time she has arrived at womanhood, the goal is won! She has reached the genuine wasp-waist standard, and fashion decides her figure to be "elegant." An "elegant figure!" And yet, with effects following as surely in the wake of their causes as the sunshine follows shade, she cannot see her dress has anything to do with her sickness. Not one woman in a thousand will acknowledge that her dress is tight. "See how loose it is!" she tells you, as, holding her breath and taking up a fold in front, she deems you have convincing proof; when if her dress were but unfastened, and she were but to breathe naturally, it would barely reach together within three inches. From the crown of her head to the sole of her foot there is hardly one article of woman's dress that is really what it should be.—Mrs. M. Jones.

"ALL QUIET."

"All quiet along the old world now," they say,
Except now and then a convulsion
Is heard from the wrath of the nations afar,
Like the tempest-tossed waves of the ocean.
"Tis nothing; a minister or two now and then,
Will not hinder the world's conversion;
Not one of them lost, they have only escaped
From the body prepared as their prison."

All quiet all over the fair earth to-night;
Of peace the nations are dreaming;
They see not the signs of the last dreadful day,
Nor the light of the lone watcher gleaming.
A tremulous sigh struggles up from his breast,
Joy and sorrow his bosom are heaving;
Hark! that blast of glad music! his Captain's awake!
But the multitudes round him are sleeping.

He's awake! and is coming in battle array,—
In the beams of the morning are gleaming
The trumpet, the sword, and the dazzling train;
In the breezes his banner is streaming.
Now who's for the Lord? who's received the blessed One,
Who for us was laid low in a manger,
Who for us 'mid temptation and poverty toiled,
And suffered and died as a stranger?

Behold! as a conqueror now he appears,
Bright glory his sweet brow adorning;
His arm shall now gather you safe to his side,
Secure from his foes' bitter scorning.
All quiet along the bright earth in that day,
When the Savior in splendor is reigning;
He has banished our fears, all our tears,
No more sickness, nor death, nor complaining.

THE BIBLE TRIED.

BY REV. B. T. ROBERTS.

"The word of the Lord is tried." 2 Sam. 22 : 31.

The mariner about to start upon a long and perilous voyage, avails himself of the best chart within his reach. No one would think of setting out without anything to direct his course. A prudent man would search carefully for the best instructions. How highly he would prize a chart giving all needed information, which had been tested by a thousand voyages, and been found, in all respects, entirely reliable!

To the voyager over life's tempestuous ocean God offers such a chart. There is not a rock on which the soul may be shipwrecked that is not pointed out; there is no part of the voyage in which a dangerous storm can arise, but that he is directed to a safe and accessible harbor; no danger can threaten against which ample security has not been provided.

With the Bible in his hand, no one need go to hell. If he does it will be his own fault. No one need be unhappy even here; for he is assured that "godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life which now is, and of that which is to come. The Bible assures man that his aspirations for immortality are not baseless. He is to live forever. He is warned against the indulgence of passions that would render him miserable in time and in eternity. He is directed to the fountain in which impurity may be washed away. The Spirit to apply the remedy to every sinner's case is promised. The conditions upon which the blessings of salvation may be enjoyed by all are laid down with great plainness. He that confesseth and forsaketh his sins shall find mercy. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not shall be damned. The wicked shall be turned into hell. The pure in heart shall see God. They that have done evil shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal. Upon the statements of the Bible you may rely with the utmost confidence. It has been tested in every possible way. "THE WORD OF THE LORD IS TRIED." It has been tried both by enemies and friends.

1. Its history has been tried. There is a fullness in its historical details which would render it easy to detect mistakes did any occur in the Divine record. But not a single fact of the Bible has been successfully contradicted. Many of its most important statements have been confirmed by historians of the greatest authority.

The general deluge was an event which modern infidels have sometimes dared to call in question. But the account contained in the Bible is not only confirmed by the physical appearance of the earth, which shows that the highest mountains were once covered with water, but ancient writers, whose credibility is unquestioned, relate this event in language which bears a striking resemblance to that of the Bible. Berosus, an ancient Chaldean historian, wrote the history of his country, fragments of which history are yet preserved. The following account of the flood he copied from the archives of the temple of Belus at Babylon. Noah he calls Xisuthrus, places him, as the Bible does, in the tenth generation, says he was divinely warned, gives the dimensions of the ark, mentions the sending out of the dove at three several times, and the resting of the ark upon the mountains of Armenia. He says: "After the death of Ardates, the ninth sovereign, his son Xisuthrus reigned. In his time happened the great deluge, the history of which is thus described. The deity Cronus appeared to him in a vision and warned him that on the 15th day of the month Desius there would be a flood by which mankind would be destroyed. He therefore enjoined him to write a history of the beginning, procedure and conclusion of all things and to bury it in the city of the sun at Sippora; and to build a vessel and take with him into it his friends and relations and to convey on board everything necessary to sustain life, together with the different animals, both birds and quadrupeds, and trust himself fearlessly to the deep. Having asked the Deity whither he was to sail, he was answered, to the gods, upon which he offered up a prayer for the good of mankind. He then obeyed the divine admonition and built a vessel 3033 ft. in length and 1213 ft. in breadth. Into this he put every thing which he had prepared, and last of all conveyed into it his wife, his children and his friends.

"After the flood had been upon the earth, and was in time abated, Xisuthrus sent out birds from the vessel, which not finding any food, nor any place whereupon they might rest their feet, returned to him again. After an interval of some days he sent them forth a second time, and they now returned with their feet tinged with mud. He made a trial a third time with these birds, but they returned to him no more; from whence he judged that the surface of the earth had appeared above the waters. He therefore made an opening in the vessel, and upon looking out found that it was stranded upon the side of some mountain; upon which he immediately quitted it, with his wife, his daughter, and the pilot. Xisuthrus then paid his adoration to the earth; and having constructed an altar offered sacrifices to the gods, and with those who had come out with him, disappeared. The vessel being stranded in Armenia, some part of it yet remains in the Corcyrean mountains of Armenia."

Among the Greek writers, Lucian preserved an account of the flood. Noah he styles Deucalion. He speaks of the different kinds of animals preserved in the ark, and says, "The greatest harmony subsisted between them through the influence of the Deity."

Concerning Abraham, Eupolemus, who wrote some 150 years before Christ, says, "In the tenth generation after the flood lived Abraham, of noble race and superior to all others in wisdom, of whom they relate that he was the inventor of astrology and Chaldean magic; and that on account of his eminent piety he was esteemed by God. It is further said that, under the directions of God he removed and lived in Phenicia and there taught the Phenicians the motions of the sun and moon and all other things, for which reason he was held in great reverence by their king." Berosus, also speaking of this eminent man, states, "That after the deluge, in the tenth generation, was a certain man among the Chaldeans, renowned for his justice and great exploits, and for his skill in the celestial sciences." Josephus says that "Abram communicated to the Egyptians Arithmetic and the science of astronomy."

Concerning Christ, Tacitus, a celebrated writer of Roman history, who flourished in the second century after Christ, records, "That the founder of the sect of christians was Christ, who suffered death in the reign of Tiberius, under his procurator, Pontius Pilate." Pliny became governor of Pontus and Bithynia not far from St. John's death. In his letter to the Emperor he states that he sometimes made the christians confess under torture. He says, "that they were wont to meet together on a stated day, before it was light, and sing among themselves a hymn to Christ as God; and bind themselves by an oath not to commit any wickedness, not to be guilty of theft, or robbery, or adultery, never to falsify their word, nor to deny a pledge committed to them when called upon to return it."

Lucian, a bitter enemy of the Christians, who flourished in the third century, bears testimony to the principal historical facts of Christianity; That its founder was crucified in Palestine, and was worshiped by the christians. He says, "It is incredible what expedition they use when any of their friends are known to be in trouble. In a word they spare nothing upon such an occasion, for these miserable men have no doubt they shall be immortal, and live forever, therefore they contemn death, and many surrender themselves to sufferings. Moreover their first law-giver has taught them that they are all brethren when once they have turned and renounced the gods of the Greeks, and worship this master of theirs who was crucified, and engage to live according to his laws. They have also a sovereign contempt for all things of this world, and look upon them as common."

"Josephus, (Ant. B. 18, chap. iii, §3.) says, "Now about this time there was Jesus, a wise man, if it be lawful to call him a man; for he was a doer of wonderful works, a teacher of such men as receive the truth with pleasure. He drew over to him both many of the Jews and many of the Gentiles. He was the Christ. And when Pilate, at the suggestion of the principal men among us had condemned him to the cross, those that loved him at first did not forsake him, for he appeared to them alive again the third day, according as the divine prophets had foretold these and ten thousand other wonderful things concerning him. And the tribe of Christians so named from him are not extinct at this day."

2. The word of the Lord is tried by its doctrines. Human reason is not competent to discover them. The most renowned philosophers of the most highly civilized nations that ever flourished without the Bible, held the wildest notions upon the most important subjects. Socrates believed in a supreme God, but sacrificed to fictitious deities. Pythagoras believed in the immortality of the soul, but taught the absurd doctrine of the transmigration of the soul from man to beast and from beast to man. Not a single doctrine which reason generally approves, have philosophers ever taught which was not found in the word of God. The wisest men of antiquity acknowledged the need of a Divine revelation.

3. By the morality it inculcates. Warmer praises we do not ask for than those which have been extorted by its most bitter enemies. Rousseau, a French infidel, says, "I will confess to you that the majesty of the Scriptures strikes me with admiration as the purity of the gospel has its influence on my heart." Paine, the well-known infidel, says, "Nothing that is here said can apply even with the most distant disrespect to the moral character of Jesus Christ. He was a virtuous and amiable man. The morality that he preached and practiced was of the most benevolent kind. He called men to the practice of moral virtue and the belief of one God. The great trait of his character is philanthropy." Bolingbroke, a celebrated English infidel writer, says, "No religion ever appeared in the world whose natural tendency was so much directed to promote the peace and happiness of mankind as the christian. The gospel of Christ is one continual lesson of the strictest morality, of justice, benevolence and universal charity. Supposing christianity to be a human invention, it is the most amiable and successful invention that ever was imposed on mankind for their good."

4. By its influence on communities. The first collection ever taken for benevolent purposes was for the poor saints at Jerusalem; the first hospital ever opened for the distressed was by a christian widow. Look among the present nations of the world, and you will find that, without a solitary exception, where the Bible is most read and its precepts most generally practiced, there is the most intelligence and refinement, the most public and private virtue and the most personal and domestic happiness. This could not be the case, were the Bible a cunningly devised fable.

5. By the assaults of its enemies. In the year 303 Diocletian ordered the churches to be torn down and the Bible to be burned. In one month 17,000 martyrs suffered death. In the province of Egypt, 144,000 died by persecution, and 700,000 through the fatigues of banishment, or of the public works to which they were condemned. Gildas, an old British historian, relates that all the books of the Holy Scriptures that could be found were burned in the streets. In defence of the Bible the greatest tortures were endured. Felix, of Tibiura, condemned to be beheaded because he refused to give up the Scriptures, said, "I thank thee, O Lord, that I have lived fifty-six years, have preserved the Gospel, and have preached faith and truth. O, my Lord Jesus, the God of Heaven and earth, I bow my head to be sacrificed to thee who livest to all eternity." Euplius of Catona in Sicily, being seized with gospels in his hand, was examined on the rack, "Why do you keep the Scriptures, forbidden by the Emperors?" "Because I am a Christian. Life eternal is in them; he that gives them up loses life eternal." Did this determined effort succeed? Nay, God took care of his word, and it mightily prevailed.

Paine says, "I have gone through the Bible as a man would go through a wood with an axe on his shoulder and fell trees, here they lie; and the priests, if they can, may replant them. They may perhaps stick them in the ground but they will never grow." Has the tree of life died? It is spreading its branches over the earth, and the nations are partaking of its life-giving fruit, and reposing in safety beneath its branches. "In five years," he declared, "there will not be a Bible in America." Voltaire boasted that with one hand he would overthrow that edifice of Christianity which required the hands of twelve apostles to built up. His press at Ferney was afterwards employed in printing the Holy Scriptures. The first meeting of a Bible society at Edinburg was held in the room in which Hume, the infidel, died.

6. By men in whose talents and candor the world has confidence. Patrick Henry, a short time before his death, said to a friend, who found him reading the Bible, "Here is a book worth more than all the other books which ever were printed."

Dr. Franklin, visited by a skeptical young man upon his death-bed, said, "Young man, my advice to you is that you cultivate an acquaintance with, and a firm belief in, the Holy Scriptures. This is your certain interest."

John Locke, the profound thinker and acute metaphysician, cried out, "O, the depths of the riches of the goodness and the knowledge of God! In the Bible are contained the words of eternal life. IT HAS GOD FOR ITS AUTHOR, SALVATION FOR ITS END, AND TRUTH WITHOUT ANY MIXTURE OF ERROR FOR ITS MATTER."

Dr. Johnson, to a young gentleman, said, "Young man, attend to the voice of one who has possessed a certain degree of fame in the world, and who will shortly appear before his Judge. Read the Bible every day of your life."

Lord Bacon said, "That a little smattering of philosophy would lead a man to Atheism, but a thorough insight of it will lead him back again to a first cause. He affirms that the first principle of right reason is religion, and seriously professes that after all his studies and investigations, he durst not die with any other thoughts than those of religion, taught as it is professed among christians."

John Q. Adams wrote to his son as follows: "So great is my veneration for the Bible and so strong my belief, that when duly read and meditated upon, it is of all the books in the world that which contributes most to make men good, wise and happy, that the earlier my children begin to read it, and the more steadily they pursue the practice of reading it throughout their lives, the more lively and confident will be my hopes that they will prove useful with years, to their country, respectable members of society, and a real blessing to their parents. I have myself, for many years, made it a practice to read the Bible through every year."

7. It has been tried by experience. A pious slave, whom a learned sceptical white man sought to turn from his faith in the Scriptures, replied, "I cannot meet your arguments, but I know the Bible is true by its effects upon my heart." This is a test which cannot fail. The Bible abounds in promises, relating both to the life which now is and that which is to come. They are to be found in almost every chapter. A large proportion of them refer to blessings which may be secured at once. Of the thousands of thousands who have tried those promises, who ever knew a single one of them to fail? Among the many who have backslidden, and the many who have proved faithful to the grace of God, what individual ever testified that any promise contained in the Bible was not fulfilled when the conditions were fairly met? Any one, however uneducated, may test the Scriptures. Let him repent of his sins and believe in the Lord Jesus Christ, and he will find a peace that passeth all understanding. Scepticism has its seat in the heart. Men reject the Bible because the Bible condemns them. But their rejection of its claims does not alter its truth. It has stood every test which could be applied to it for eighteen hundred years, and from one and all it has come forth like gold tried in the fire, all the brighter for the ordeal through which it has passed.

Let us, then, cling to the Bible. Let us obey its precepts and claim its exceeding great and precious promises. It encourages us to seek for degrees of grace which enable us to triumph over all difficulties and rejoice in the Lord always with joy unspeakable and full of glory. Let us, then, search the Scriptures and be enabled to say with the Psalmist, "THY WORD, O, LORD, HAVE I HID IN MY HEART!"—Earnest Christian.

THE TEST OF A NEW CREATURE.

"Examine yourselves, whether ye be in the faith." 2 Cor. 13 : 5.

1. Do I feel any pride; or am I partaker of the meek and lowly mind that was in Jesus? Am I dead to all desire of praise? If any despise me, do I like them worse for it? Or, if they love and approve, do I love them more on that account? Am I willing to be accounted useless, and of no consequence,—glad to be made of no reputation? Do humiliations give me real pleasure, and is it the language of my heart,

Make me little and unknown,
Loved and prized by God alone?

2. Does God bear witness in my heart that it is purified? that in all things I please him?

3. Is the life I live, "by the faith of the Son of God;" so that Christ dwelleth in me? Is Christ the life of all my affections and designs, as my soul is the life of my body? Is my eye single and my soul full of light,—all eye within and without; always watchful?

4. Have I always the presence of God? Does no cloud come between God and the eye of my faith? Can I "rejoice evermore, pray without ceasing, and in every thing give thanks?"

5. Am I saved from the fear of man? Do I speak plainly to all, neither fearing their frowns, nor seeking their favors? Have I no shame of religion; and am I always ready to confess Christ, to suffer with his people, and to die for his sake?

6. Do I deny myself at all times, and take up my cross as the Spirit of God leads me? Do I embrace the cross of every sort, being willing to give up my ease and convenience to oblige others; or do I expect them to conform to my hours and customs? Does the cross sit light upon me, and am I willing to suffer all the will of God? Can I trample on pleasure and pain? Have I

A soul inured to pain,
To hardship, grief, and loss,
Bold to take up, firm to sustain,
The consecrated cross?

7. Are my bodily senses, and outward things, all sanctified to me? Do I not seek my own things to please myself? Do I seek grace more for God's honor than my own profit, preferring the glory of God to all in earth or heaven, the giver to the gift?

8. Am I "poor in spirit?" Do I "take pleasure in infirmities, necessities, distresses, reproaches;" so that out of weakness, want, and danger I may cast myself on the Lord? Have I no false shame in approaching God? Do I seek to be saved, as a poor sinner, by grace alone?

9. Do I not "lean to my own understanding?" Am I ready to give up the point, when contradicted, unless conscience forbid? Am I easy to be persuaded? Do I esteem every one better than myself? Am I as willing to be a cypher as to be useful, and does my zeal burn bright notwithstanding this willingness to be nothing?

10. Have I no false wisdom, goodness, strength; as if the grace I feel were my own? Do I never take that glory to myself which belongs to Christ? Do I feel my want of Christ as much as ever, to be my all? and do I draw near to God, as poor and needy, only presenting before him his well-beloved Son? Can I say,

"Every moment, Lord, I need
The merit of thy death?
I shall hang upon my God,
Till I thy perfect glory see,
Till the sprinkling of thy blood
Shall speak me up to thee?"

Do I find joy in being thus nothing, empty, undeserving, giving all the glory to Christ? Or do I wish that grace made me something, instead of God being all?

11. Have I meekness? Does it bear rule over all my tempers, affections, and desires; so that my hopes, fears, joy, zeal, love, and hatred are duly balanced? Do I feel no disturbance from others, and do I desire to give none? If any offend me, do I still love them, and make it an occasion to pray for them? If condemned by the world, do I entreat;—if condemned by the godly, am I one in whose mouth there is no reproof; replying only as conscience and not as impatient nature dictates? If in the wrong, do I confess it? If in the right, do I submit, being content to do well, and suffer for it? It is the sin of superiors to be overbearing, of inferiors to be stubborn; if, then, I am a servant, do I yield not only to the gentle, but to the froward, committing my cause in silence to God; or, if a master, do I "show all long-suffering?" The Lord of all was "as he that serveth." If I am the greatest, do I make myself least, "and the servant of all;" if a teacher, am I lowly, meek, and patient, not conceited, self-willed, nor dogmatic? Am I ready to give up the claims of respect due to age, station, parent, master, etc; or do I rigidly exact those demands?

12. Do I possess resignation; am I content with whatever is, or may be; seeing that God, the Author of all events, does, and will do, all for my good? Do I desire nothing but God, willing to part with all, if the Lord manifest his will for my so doing? Do I "know how to abound," and yet not gratify unnecessary wants; but being content with things needful, do I faithfully and freely dispose of all the rest for the help of others? Do I know how to suffer need? Is my confidence unshaken while I feel the distress of poverty, and have the prospect of future want, while, humanly speaking, strangling were better than life? And, in these circumstances, do I pity those who, having plenty, waste it in excess, instead of helping me?

13. Am I just; doing in all things as I would others should do unto me? Do I render homage to those above me, not presuming on their lenity and condescension? As a superior, do I exercise no undue authority, taking no advantage of the timidity, respect, or necessity of any man? Do I consider the great obligation superiority lays me under, of being lowly and kind, and of setting a good example?

14. Am I temperate, using the world, and not abusing it? Do I receive outward things in the order of God, making earth a scale to heaven? Is the satisfaction I take in the creation consistent with my being dead to all below, and a means of leading me more to God? Is the turn of my mind and temper in due subjection, not leading me to any extreme, either of too much silence, or of too much talkativeness, of reserve, or freedom?

15. Am I courteous, not severe? Suiting myself to all with sweetness? Striving to give no one pain, but to gain and win all for their good?

16. Am I vigilant; redeeming time, taking every opportunity of doing good; or do I spare myself, being careless about the souls and bodies to which I might do good? Can I do no more than I do? Do I perform the most servile offices, such as require labor and humiliation, with cheerfulness? Is my conversation always seasoned with salt, at every time administering some kind of favor to those I am with?

17. Do I "love God with all my heart?" Do I constantly present myself, my time, substance, talents, and all that I have, a living sacrifice? Is every thought brought into subjection to Christ? Do I like, or dislike, only such things as are pleasing or displeasing to God?

18. Do I love God with all my strength, and are my spiritual faculties always vigorous? Do I give way to no sinful languor? Am I always on the watch? Do not business, worldly care, and conversation, damp my fervor and zeal for God?

19. Do I love my neighbor as myself; every man for Christ's sake, and honor all men, as the image of God? Do I think no evil, listen to no groundless surmises, nor judge from appearances? Can I bridle my tongue, never speaking of the faults of another, but with a view to do good; and when I am obliged to do it, have I the testimony that I sin not? Have I that love which hopeth, believeth and endureth all things?

20. How am I in my sleep? If Satan presents an evil imagination, does my will immediately resist, or give way to it?

21. Do I bear the infirmities of age or sickness, without seeking to repair the decays of nature by strong liquors; or do I make Christ my sole support, casting the burden of a feeble body into the arms of his mercy?

Jesus, Lord of all, grant thy purest gifts to every waiting disciple. Enlighten us with the knowledge of thy will, and show us "the mark of the prize of our high calling." Let us die to all thou art not; and seek thee with our whole heart, till we enjoy the fullness of the purchased possession.—Fletcher.

SIR ISAAC NEWTON AND VOLTAIRE

ON RAILWAY TRAVELING.

Sir Isaac Newton wrote a work upon the prophet Daniel, and another upon the book of Revelations, in one of which he said, that in order to fulfill certain prophecies before a certain duty was terminated—namely, 1260 years—there would be a mode of traveling, of which the men of his time had no conception; nay, that the knowledge of mankind would be so increased that they would be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

Voltaire, who did not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, got hold of this, and said: "Now look at that mighty mind of Newton's, who discovered gravity, and told us such marvels for us all to admire. When he became an old man, and got into his dotage, he began to study that book called the Bible; and it seems that, in order to credit its fabulous nonsense, we must believe that the knowledge of mankind will be so increased, that we shall be able to travel at the rate of fifty miles an hour.

"The poor dotard!" exclaimed the philosophic infidel Voltaire, in the self-complacency of his pity.

But who is the dotard now?

THOUGHTS OF GOD.

Father, thou art full of love,
Thou who rulest in heaven above,
Thou dost every sorrow know,
Always to thee will I go.

Upon thee will I depend,
Ever be my constant friend;
In distress, or pain, or need,
Me to thee oh! gently lead.

To thee will I ever look,
Never will thou me forsake;
To thee shall I ever flee,
Till thy face at last I see.

I have nothing that I love
As I do my God above;
Never will I thee deny,—
Savior, hear my humble cry.

Thou hast been my shield and sun,
Ever to thee will I come,
Until thou shalt come again,
Then with thee I hope to reign.

Savior, hasten that glad day,
For it do I ever pray;
Let thy dear saints all go home,
Never here again to roam.

THE TRUE CAUSE OF REJOICING.

Dear reader, I shall endeavor to lay before you here the true cause of rejoicing; for it must be truly a matter of congratulation to every lover of those great principles which we esteem to be christianity in its purity, that these principles have been and are so abundantly prospered. From all quarters the tidings come to us of their advancing and continually increasing triumphs over opposition and all the influences of error.

We cannot, indeed, very well exaggerate in reference to this subject. When we consider all the circumstances of the case—the complete uprooting of old prejudices and opinions, a work requisite before our faith can be accomplished, and the manner in which it has been opposed, and then see what advances it has made, and the conquests it has achieved over all that has been arrayed against it, we cannot very well speak too strongly in reference to it.

A wonderful work has been accomplished; and when we compare the present with the state of things twenty or even ten years ago, a change is presented to us hardly equalled in the annals of religious history. Truly we may say, "The Lord has done great things for us," and feel that we have reason to be glad therefor.

Great, however, as the occasion for rejoicing here presented us, is there not a higher ground which we should seek to attain, and which attained will afford us still greater occasion for congratulation? Faithfulness to the great principles professed,—a development by us and among us everywhere of their holy moral power, in their application to the heart and life; and a manifestation of their ability to work out the spiritual regeneration of man;—this is the true and only real ground of rejoicing with us; and not until this is attained should we be satisfied.

This, then, is the result which should be verily proposed among us, and which every believer in the great salvation should earnestly devote himself to accomplish. However distinguished our outward prosperity may be, we should really have little or no cause for exultation, so long as this remains unaccomplished.

It cannot be too frequently said, nor too deeply realized, that in the mere outward and physical triumph of any case or principle in the fact that it has overcome opposition, in the gaining of sympathy to itself, or in the gathering of numbers around its standard, more than gather to the standard of an opposing principle, that its true glory and results are found. These are to be found in the working out of a great and good mission by that cause or principle—in the accomplishment by it of good in each individual heart and life, and thus benefit to man and society, benefit which would be wrought, and greater than any other cause could produce. This is the true glory of any movement or principle—its only glory, to which everything else, all other successes are but means.

To rejoice, therefore, in the mere outward extension of any cause, in its mere success and advance, spite of opposition and over opposition, before this its glory appears, is to rejoice before the time—is to rejoice in the means rather than the result. And if these results were not gained, however much sympathy might be given the cause, however much opposition it might overcome, and however many friends it might gain to itself, the true end of the movement and the true cause of the rejoicing would be lost.

The christian cause of rejoicing is higher, holier, greater and nobler than any cause that can be produced. It is that mankind may be made better and purer, holier and happier by its effects; it is not only that men may be made free from sin and error, but that they be built up in the truth, led away from sin into the more devoted service of God, transformed into the image of Christ Jesus, with their spirits baptized into his spirit, with their hearts purified and their affections sanctified, and thus made partakers of that holiness without which no man can see the Lord, nor partake of those joys that are laid up in store for the righteous.

Let this subject, then, be more thought of; and while we shall ever delight to think of the advances of our cause in making the new ground it is every day gaining, let us see to it that a still greater occasion of joy is found in our increasing moral strength and power as a denomination. Let each one make it an individual matter with his own conscience—feel that individual responsibility rests on him, and that he has individual duties to perform, and then, by the help of God, be faithful;—let this be done, and great will be the blessing.

"This is for your health."—Paul.

TREATMENT OF MEASLES.

BY W. T. VAIL, M. D.

This is one of those peculiar diseases especially incident to childhood, which seldom occurs to the same person more than once in a lifetime. In character it may be considered simply a peculiar kind of eruptive fever. Between measles, chicken pox, small pox, scarlatina, typhus and typhoid fevers, there exist many strong points of resemblance.

They are all fevers. All are communicated by one person to another, though in very different degrees. All vary a good deal in the intensity and complication of the development. All have their peculiar modes of development, and all pass through their regular routine of symptoms and stages. They all resemble each other also in the fact that in none of them can the peculiar generating poison be counteracted or neutralized by any poisonous drug administered to the patient, either before or after the accession of the disease, nor be removed from the system by vomiting, sweating, purging, or diuresis. Nor can any kind of treatment, either internal or external, by water or otherwise, reach their morbific causes and remove them from the organism.

We must therefore never expect to cure the patient of measles; but only to treat him while he is passing through the various stages and developments of the disease. The disease itself is to be considered merely the process of cure, the arrest or hindrance of which would be the patient's swift and certain destruction. Its developments consist in those specific evolutions which the living organism institutes and carries forward for the purpose of ridding itself of the peculiar morbific principles it has unwittingly imbibed, and whose presence it can no longer tolerate.

TREATMENT.—In numerous cases the spontaneous action of the system itself, left wholly to the care of its own organic forces, is fully equal to the task of expelling the peculiar poison, and speedily restoring the patient to health. But in many others, this labor will be so great, owing to constitutional peculiarities, or previously disordered and debilitated conditions of the system, that the organic forces may be taxed to their uttermost in the accomplishment, or may fail altogether, unless prompt, vigorous, and persevering assistance be rendered.

The most critical period of the disorder, and the one usually attended with the greatest amount of pain and suffering, is that elapsing between the first accession of the symptoms and the complete development of the eruption. During this period, usually lasting from three to five days, a little of the right kind of treatment will go a great way towards diminishing the intensity of the symptoms, abating the sufferings of the patient, and making sure of a favorable result.

Warm Baths at 95 to 100 degrees, by immersion or otherwise, will be sure to abate the unpleasant symptoms and to assist the organic functions in the process of bringing out the eruption. If taken by immersion they may be continued five to eight minutes at a time, and may be repeated from two to four times a day, as the urgency of the case may require.

Each bath may be followed up with a cold, wet compress to the forehead and eyes, should there be heat and pain therein. If the patient be feverish, and especially if confined to his bed, he will derive much benefit from the abdominal bandage wet in cool or tepid water, and from hot bottles or other warming appliances to the feet.

If the heat and pain in the head should be excessive, a gentle pouring of cold water over the head for five to ten minutes, allowing the water to drip in a sitz-tub below, will be found one of the best of measures, and may be repeated a dozen times a day or more, if required for the patient's comfort.

If the warm bath by immersion is inconvenient, a warm sitz at 100, at the same time, may be taken in stead, which may be continued fifteen or twenty minutes or more, with hot water added from time to time to sustain the temperature. This bath may be repeated three or four times a day, if need be, and may be followed by the same appliances as mentioned for the full bath.

Packs are an excellent mode of treatment in the beginning of measles. There will seldom, however, be any particular advantage in employing this bath at the very first appearance of the symptoms, nor after the eruption has fully appeared, as other baths which do not make so great a draft upon the organic forces, and which may be more easily administered, will have an equally good, if not better effect. If the patient should have chilly sensations, it would be better before packing, to give him a warm foot-bath, or warm sitz bath, or both, and then after wringing the sheet out of water at 90 to 100 degrees, let him go directly from the sitz and foot bath to the pack. If not chilly or sensitive to cold, the water used for the sheet may be 80 to 90 degrees. Let him remain in the pack an hour, or until he is thoroughly warm. He may then be taken from the pack and heated to a tepid wash-down or towel-rubbing at a temperature most agreeable to him, and the bath may be followed up with the same appliances before mentioned. This bath may be resorted to once or twice during the twenty-four hours, but if the patient needs general treatment oftener than this, some other form of bath would be preferable.

The cough in measles is sometimes troublesome and there is frequently a tendency to prolonged irritation of the lining membrane of the lungs, or that of the bronchial tubes, resulting in pneumonia or bronchitis. Cold, wet compresses applied to the upper part of the chest, covered with dry ones, are the proper treatment for this complication, and should be continued night and day. If the cough should still prove troublesome, hot fomentations to the lungs, for fifteen minutes, two or three times a day, followed up by the cold compresses, will give the desired relief. The hot fomentations may be given by wringing flannels out of hot water, and applying to the chest, covering them with dry ones, or in any other convenient way. It is sometimes done by applying compresses and hot bottles or hot bricks to the part to be fomented.

After the eruption is fully out there will be but little to be done besides keeping the extremities warm, and allowing nature to complete for herself the operation she has commenced, and which she alone is competent to finish.

Feed the patient sparingly on fruits and farinacea for a few days and all will be well.

If the eruption recedes shortly after its appearance, through taking cold or from scrofulous or other infirmity of constitution, the case becomes greatly complicated, and danger is always imminent. In this case the full warm bath at 100 to 110 degrees, or sitz and foot-bath before mentioned will be the resorts. If a gentle perspiration is induced all the better, or the patient should be put to bed and measures taken to induce a gentle perspiration which should be sustained until the balance of the circulation be restored and relief obtained. Warm sitz and foot-baths should then be continued for several days, or as long as the symptoms require.

Few persons would ever die of measles, or be troubled with any dangerous diseases as sequences, were the above suggestions for treatment to be carried out.—Herald of Health.

DYSPEPSIA AMONG FARMERS.

Farmers, cultivators of the soil, look out, be careful of your diet, what you eat, how you eat, when you eat. Be temperate in all things, else look out for breakers. A Western paper says:

It is a notorious fact that indigestion prevails more extensively among the farming population of the West than among any other class. Why is this? They certainly take any reasonable amount of exercise, and that too in the open air, and in the broad sunlight. Their houses are well ventilated, and by their insulated situation free from the many unhealthy influences of a pent-up city.

We think if our farmers will pause for a moment and look this matter gravely in the face, they will discern the cause of the prevalence of this mother of most maladies, among them to be:

1. The constant use of salt meat, particularly salt pork. It is well known that this abominable swine's flesh, fried in its own filthy grease, constitutes the "staff of life" in nearly every farmhouse in the Mississippi valley. Hog and hominy are household gods, and according to the Hoosier's creed, indispensable to man's existence.

2. The use of coffee. The faithful Western housewife serves it up "strong and good," morning, noon, and night. Reader, just think of it, the vilest of flesh washed into the stomach three times a day by a decoction of narcotic poison.

3. Rapid eating. We should remember that swallowing one's food is not the first process necessary to healthy digestion. If we had gizzards we might then swallow our food whole as ducks do, but instead of gizzards, we have teeth, (some of us,) and are commanded to use them in grinding food for the stomach, but if we compel the stomach to do both its own work and that of the teeth, it will soon give signs of debility and disease in the shape of acidity, headaches, sense of weight over the whole man, irritable temper, despondency, etc.

Our farmers seldom spend more than ten or fifteen minutes at a meal, and then go immediately to the field and engage in the most laborious work. At least one hour should be spent after each meal in repose of both body and mind. This will allow the stomach to collect to itself, so to speak, a due quantity of blood, out of which to elaborate the gastric juice. Violent exercise calls the blood to other parts of the body, and thus robs the stomach.

These gentle hints are applicable, not only to farmers, but to every-day life all around us. Better all of us given to appetite, take Solomon's advice, "put a knife to our throats." "Be not among wine-bibbers; among riotous eaters of flesh."—Home Thrusts.

HEALTHFULNESS OF WOMAN'S DRESS.

Man's dress is allowed to fit his body; woman's body is compelled to fit her dress. His chest and waist need no compressing—they were created perfect, and so are allowed to develop naturally, as God designed them; but she—her Maker's "last, best gift to man"—in fashion's eye a sad mistake was made in her creation. The beautifully rounded waist, so full, so perfect, with room within for all the vital organs to play their part in the great drama of physical life, is so "very ungenteel, so vulgar!" And so the little girl, whose form up to the age of thirteen or fourteen years has been left to grow as free and as untrammeled as her brother's, must now begin to pay attention to her figure. The short dress is lengthened down to sweep the floor; the childish waist, so comfortably loose, is laid aside forever; and encased in whalebones, if not in corsets, with a dress so tight that an attempt to take a free breath would endanger every hook and eye upon it, but which fashion says fits so neatly, the process of improving God's handiwork begins.

The muscles of the chest, denied development, become enfeebled by disuse, and gradually shrink away, causing the waist to diminish in size; the heart labors ineffectually to properly circulate the blood through the arteries, capillaries, and veins; the ribs, forced downward and inward, press upon the vital organs, often crowding the abdominal viscera out of position; while the poor lungs, crowded, stifled, unable to move than half expand, become the ready seat of fatal disease. And as she grows older, additional stays are deemed essential, corset-strings are tighter drawn, the dress fits still "more neatly," and by the time she has arrived at womanhood, the goal is won! She has reached the genuine wasp-waist standard, and fashion decides her figure to be "elegant." An "elegant figure!" And yet, with effects following as surely in the wake of their causes as the sunshine follows shade, she cannot see her dress has anything to do with her sickness. Not one woman in a thousand will acknowledge that her dress is tight. "See how loose it is!" she tells you, as, holding her breath and taking up a fold in front, she deems you have convincing proof; when if her dress were but unfastened, and she were but to breathe naturally, it would barely reach together within three inches. From the crown of her head to the sole of her foot there is hardly one article of woman's dress that is really what it should be.—Mrs. M. Jones.

EIN FESTE BURG.

The famous "Battle Song of the Reformation," composed by Luther, A. D. 1529. Newly translated, in the metre of the original, as a fit piece for our times.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

A mighty fortress is our God,
A Shield and Sword unfailing;
He freely helps through all the flood
Of troubles now assailing.
The old Foe, unspent,
On what wrath intent!
Dreadful craft and power
He wieldeth at this hour;
Earth nowhere has his equal.

Did we in our own strength confide,
Naught 'gainst him were effected;
But the true Champion's on our side,
By God himself elected.
Askest thou his name?
Jesus Christ's the same;
Of all hosts, the Lord,
Nor less than God adored.
Sure he the field secureth.

And should the world with devils teem,
To glut their fury on us;
Nor hopeless yet our cause we'd deem;
The victory still must crown us.
Let the lord of hell,
Scowl with malice fell;
Us no ill is wrought;
For now to judgment brought,
One word can overwhelm him.

The truth shall stand, nor ever yield;
Nor thanks to en'mies for it;
'Tis Christ upholds us on this field,
With his good gifts and Spirit.
Freedom they may take;
Earthly joys unmake;
But when all is done
They still have nothing won,
Whilst for us waits the kingdom.

THREE PARABLES.

MATT. 13 : 44. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field."

The treasure is commonly supposed to mean salvation, and the act of the man selling all that he had and buying the field, is supposed to represent the way in which a sinner obtains salvation. But, then, the man is represented as buying, not the treasure, but the field, for the sake of the treasure which it contained. Besides, the sinner in no sense buys salvation—he has nothing to pay, and even those things that were gain to him, the believer counts but loss. "By grace are ye saved." Again, the very last thing that a believer would do with that which he finds in Christ, is to hide it. "Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed?"

In a previous part of the same discourse, we know that "the field" represents "the world," and we cannot suppose that the Lord would introduce confusion into his teaching by using the figure in a different sense, almost in the same breath. The treasure represents something found in the world of unspeakable preciousness to him who became the purchaser of it, but which carnal eyes cannot see, and which remains in safe concealment until the purchaser comes to take possession of his own. The believer will disclaim all thoughts of being either the finder of the treasure, or the purchaser of the field. He, poor bankrupt! owes ten thousand talents, and has nothing to pay. But he knows One who had something—wealth boundless as the glory of God—and of that he emptied himself; precious blood, which he freely poured forth, and for what? We are too much accustomed to confine our views of God's gracious purpose in redemption, to our own salvation; and to lose sight of the display of the glory of God in the ultimate glory of Christ's kingdom, which is deferred, as Paul teaches us, "till the redemption of the purchased possession."

The world is Christ's by purchase, whoever may claim it, and it contains his hidden treasure. The day is coming when it will be his in visible possession. The purpose of God cannot be thwarted. The enemy cannot steal away Christ's garnered wealth; and very soon the Royal Owner will make good his claim against all rivals, and bring his hidden treasure to light. To us, meanwhile, it is given to pray: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Verses 45, 46. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man seeking goodly pearls; who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it."

Here, again, according to the common interpretation, we have the sinner buying salvation. But it must be observed that this pearl is not one excellent thing in contrast with many worthless things, but one pearl of great price in comparison with many goodly pearls—the priceless among the precious, the dearest among many beloved. But the gospel is not the best among many goodly systems, but truth in contrast with falsehood; and the salvation which it reveals is not the best among many other goodly hopes, but the only real good in contrast with utter ruin and destruction.

What insolent conceit there is in the thought that the sinner seeks Christ, chooses him, and buys him with his goods! Some one may say: But does not the Lord demand that we should forsake all that we have? Yes, but it is one thing to forsake the ruin and wrath from which grace rescues us, and another thing to purchase salvation by a price of our own. We do not say that the rescued mariner purchased the life-boat with the wreck which he abandoned; nor that a man saved from the devouring flames hired or bought the strong arms of his deliverers, with the home which he left in ashes. Why will men speak as though they could purchase Christ with the world, bliss with misery, heaven with hell? Believers can tell whether they chose God, or he chose them; whether they were the seekers or the sought, the purchasers or the purchased.

In that merchantman seeking goodly pearls, and finding one pearl of great price, we have another view of the shepherd who had a hundred sheep, all the objects of his tender care; but who left the ninety and nine safe in the pasture, and went after the one that had gone astray. In this pearl of great price we see the Church in Christ's estimate of it. Among the other objects of his divine regard—all goodly pearls—this was selected by his especial love, to be the very jewel of his crown. By what displays of love did he win it for himself! "He who was rich, for our sakes became poor." And whatever might be told of the estimation in which he held the other objects of his holy love, of this it is said, in distinction from all the rest, "Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it"—THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

Verses 47–50. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind; which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away," etc.

This, which is usually styled "the parable of the draw-net," would be more appropriately named "the parable of the final separation of good and bad;" for both in the parable and in the Lord's application of it, the preliminary action is lost sight of, and attention is directed to the solemn, judicial act in which the kingdom of heaven shall be established. In the common interpretation, almost every thing in the parable is referred to the Church—the Church is the fisherman, the Lord's agent in gathering sinners to himself; the Church is the net into which they are gathered; and, since the Church is composed of sinners saved, the Church is also the fish caught in the net—as though any such confusion of thought could ever be found in the parables of the Lord. The net here spoken of is not the ordinary net used by fishermen, but the sayene, used to sweep a stream or pool through its whole extent, and take all the fish which it contains.

In the parable, we hear nothing of the fishermen who cast the net; and in the Lord's application of it, the only agents mentioned are not those whom the Lord makes "fishers of men," but "the angels," who are always introduced in connection with the final separation of the two classes of mankind. The parable, therefore, is not designed to teach a lesson regarding the ordinary ministry of the gospel, or the mission of the Church.

It teaches a peculiarly solemn lesson regarding the influence of the gospel on men at large, including all within a responsibility which they cannot elude. Thus encompassed, they are dragged along to the day of final decision, when to have received or rejected Christ will make all the difference between heaven and hell. The purpose of God is advancing irresistibly to its consummation, in which all mankind shall receive their final doom or their deliverance. "When it is full," when the purpose of God shall have reached the point of accomplishment, he who has been seen as the sower of the seed will appear as the administrator of judgment; "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." The result of the final judgment is always described as a final separation of the two classes of mankind, and the removal of all who are opposed to his righteous sceptre; so that there may be none left to disturb the peace of his reign. "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity."

This parable relates to all who come within range of gospel influences. Those who are justified by faith shall be welcomed into the joy of his kingdom. The wrath so long suspended will be executed on unbelievers and hypocrites. The Lord gives us none of the details of the sinner's doom, in which a distempered fancy so strangely revels. The silence of an unutterable horror rests upon it; but surely it is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of the living God. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth"—the anguish of insupportable woe, the impotent fury of a desperate soul armed against itself in still more insupportable self-reproach. Gospel-despisers! it is to this you are hastening.

2 Cor. v. 9. "Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him."

This passage is sometimes used to foster a legal spirit, as though our acceptance with God were yet undecided, and we were still called to labor to secure it. The impression is, perhaps, strengthened by the reference, in the next verse, to the judgment-seat of Christ, as though it were there that the question of our acceptance is to be determined, and that, too, upon the ground of the things done in the body. If this were the doctrine of the passage, it would be in open conflict with all that the Spirit of God has taught by the apostles, and by Paul in particular, regarding the salvation of believers, which is of grace, and not by works. It is not reserved for future decision, for "He hath made us accepted in the Beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." Believers have the Lord's own word for it, that they "shall not come into condemnation," or rather "into the judgment."

Nothing could be more positive than the assurance with which Paul speaks of acceptance as a present and accomplished blessedness, in this very chapter. Just because it is so, and in view of the grace that has made it so, under the sweet but strong constraints of love, "We labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be WELL PLEASING to him." A loving child, just in proportion to his love, and in proportion to his sense of his father's love, labors to secure that father's approbation; he desires, when his father is out of sight, to act as would be agreeable to his father if he were present, and desires that his conduct may be such, that when his father returns it may be acknowledged as "WELL DONE." So believers seek to walk now in the light of their Lord's approval—so that, when the Lord comes and reckons with his servants, he may say to them: "Well done, good and faithful servant." A father's approval or disapproval of a child, is a different thing from a judge's acquital or condemnation of a criminal. The word translated "accepted," in this passage, is properly translated "well pleasing" in Col. 3 : 20, and Heb. 13 : 21.

John 17 : 24. "Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am."

"I will" sounds harsh, according to the ordinary use of the word, as it implies something like an authoritative demand. Its true meaning is, "I desire;" and then there is a peculiar sweetness in the passage, since it expresses not only his love toward us, but his filial confidence that the intimation of his desire was more than a sufficient plea with the Father's abundant love.—The Witness.

EDWARD IRVING ON THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"The church, in the primitive times, did remember the coming of her Lord to judge the nations, especially pagan Rome, which had slain her children; and accordingly, under the fifth seal, the souls of them that had been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held, cried with a loud voice and said, 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?' But that same church, which had glorified God in the fires of persecution, through the strength of her hope in the coming Lord, who had reserved judgment unto himself,—that same church could not bear the prosperity of being established over the Roman empire. She then forgot that she was a widow; she forgot that her Husband was in the heavens, and was about to appear again for her justification; she made love to the kings of earth, and gave herself to them, even unto that beast who had slain her children, and which was possessed by Satan, that old serpent and devil. But still, God raised up witnesses to witness against this fornication; and he drew out this nation with a high hand, to protest against it, and to pray for judgment upon the mother of harlots, which rideth upon the beast. And this destruction our fathers expected at the coming of Christ. I say the reformers and fathers of the British church did not more certainly expect and believe in a personal advent of Christ, than they expected that to destroy the antichristian Papacy. He was to come; so that until these days, these high and palmy days as they dream, there ever was lifted up by the widow a prayer unto the great Judge, to be righted and redressed of all her wrongs upon that papal destroyer, in whom is found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth. But now, behold England and Scotland; Church Presbyterian, and Church Episcopalian, Churchman and Dissenter, have altogether ceased from putting up this prayer for justice upon the adversary. Indeed, they have ceased to regard her as an adversary at all. They have forgotten her deeds of darkness, and her words of blasphemy, and they desire to bring to her succor and help.

I say again, except it be from those who have faith in the coming of the Son of man to judge the quick, there be hardly any members of any church in Christendom who are heartily lifting up the prayer for judgment upon the adversary. There is no faith of such a judgment. They have stricken a league with her upon the ground of political rights, as they are pleased to term them. Meanwhile the rights of God's church have been forgotten; the rights of the Son of man to the only allegiance and affection of his church have been forgotten. Would that the parable of the poor widow, which our Lord constructed with such wisdom, and applied with such earnestness, had been remembered; then would there neither have been an apostasy, nor would there have been proposals of a league with that apostasy. For is she not judged in terms of this very parable? as it is written (Rev. 18 : 7), 'For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her.'

"They talk most idly who speak of a spiritual coming of the kingdom, as yet future; for we have now his spiritual kingdom, hidden within us,—that is to say, he reigneth in the hearts of his believing people. The souls of believers are the only existence upon earth, where Christ reigns. Through the soul indeed, reclaimed by the Holy Ghost, Christ doth enforce the body unto obedience; and the worldly tools likewise: but Satan is natural master, both of the flesh and of the world, succumbing truly to the soul Christ possessed; but unwillingly, with diabolical reluctancy. Here we have no question with those Spiritualists, but hold much higher and distincter doctrine than they do. But when they, in their ignorance and blindness, will go about to say that this is all which God's word hath promised and Christ hath purchased, to totally abjure and abhor their narrow mindedness and indifference to God's verity and to Christ's glory. And we hold that the Son of man is to come like the lightning, and that he is to judge the quick, as the furnace judgeth between the gold and the dross; and he is to separate bosom friends and closest united companions—the one unto destruction, like the deluge, or like Sodom; the other unto honor and to glory, according to no other principle of judgment than this, whether they are expecting him and ready to receive him or not. We say he is to come to destroy the careless church, all indifferent to his coming; to slay the great enemy of the chosen one, which is Antichrist in all his forms, and to deliver his elect ones, who have cried day and night for vengeance upon the adversary, from his oppression, whether that oppression be the oppression of the church upon the living, or the oppression of the grave upon the dead. And I say, moreover, that it is his elect who cry unto him day and night for vengeance, and they only who have the promise of this deliverance; and those only who are on tip-toe readiness to obey the summons, who receive the escape from the fiery deluge. What say you; are not these things in the warning of our Lord? Is not this, and this only, the substance of his warning? Shall I be ashamed to echo the words which my Lord hath spoken? Shall you be unwilling to hear the words he hath commanded us to speak! God forbid! Let the gainsayer gainsay, and let the deniers to the uttermost deny that the Lord is coming in person to judge the Antichrist church; it is the voice of God's word, and it cannot be broken. And if they would quench in death every living voice which declareth it, then the thunders from the heaven above, and the lightnings flashing from pole to pole, and the earthquake's shock from beneath, will make men hear it; ay, and believe it too; but, like the devils, to believe and tremble. Therefore, O men! give heed how ye hear.

"I observe, finally, that it is the duty, the safety, and the glory of every believer, to pray for the coming of the Lord in judgment upon the adversary of his church; to pray always, and not to faint; and those who have so little discernment as not to dare pray for the downfall of the oppressor, the casting out of Satan, the destruction of Babylon, have neither lot nor part in this matter. Those who will not pray for Christ to come, who feel shocked at the thought of the rending bolt which bears him, and the arrowy shower of lightning which goes before him; those who have not their peace made with him, and are hanging in doubt whether he be their Savior or not; those who love father, mother, brother, sister, life, more than him; those who love traffic, wealth, estate, more than him; those who are not ready to take wing and flee from the storm, like doves unto their windows; those who are not, like old Simeon, waiting for his salvation; those who have a divided heart, like Lot's wife: what shall I say of such? That they shall not enter into his kingdom. Do these words strike to the quick? do they prick your heart? I mean it so; in love I mean it so, that ye may instantly shake loose the fetters, as Samson did, in the might of the Holy Ghost given unto you, and join yourselves to the Savior, whom I preach unto every sinner, for instant peace, for instant blessedness: so that I can say to every one that heareth these words, and believeth them, If Christ were this night to appear, this night shalt thou be with him in paradise!"

"THE WANE OF FAITH."

I was much struck with the article on the "Wane of Faith," in the "Prophetic Times," and as a somewhat similar corroboration of the views there expressed came under my notice lately, I thought I would also make it known.

About a year ago, I wrote to a christian friend in Scotland, giving him my views upon the state of religion in Canada, and asking him how he thought matters stood at home? "There is not, in my opinion," I said, "five per cent. of christianity in Canada. Do you think there is more in Scotland? Is there ten per cent.? Is there twenty?" My friend's answer struck me forcibly. His statement was this: "The condition of Christ's cause in Scotland at this moment is very sad; and look at what quarter of the world we may, we are compelled to say that it is very sad. For my part, I look for persecution, or a return of dreary Moderatism." A Scotticism for lukewarmness in religion. In a recent letter, my friend, without further solicitation, again returns to the subject, and writes as follows:—"The Established Assembly created fully as much interest as ours (the Free Church) this year, in consequence of the 'Innovation discussion.' The bulk of serious people whom I have met with seem gratified that Dr. Lee, McLeod & Co. have got a church. I believe that McLeod, Blaiker & Co. are doing great injury to the cause of Christ in Scotland. They are all very popular with young men, specially young ministers, who are getting more and more impregnated with their views. McLeod tries to have a kind of sough (sighing of the wind through the trees) of the gospel, but not at all hearty—awfully 'Broad Church.' Lee and Blaiker are both, I hold, unchristian men. They are both professors (i. e. of theology), and so all our young Established ministers can through them meet. Thus I fear the evangelical element is gradually becoming less and less in the Established Church. Would I could say that it is holding its place among ourselves. I cannot but fear it is not. The grand, sappy truths of the gospel, such as the substitution of Christ, his righteousness, atonement, etc., have not that foremost place in the discourses of many of our young ministers which formerly characterized the preaching of our evangelical ministers. The prevailing cry is, that our preaching must keep up with the requirements of the age; by which they seem to mean that it must be with 'cheering words of man's wisdom.' Of course, there are many exceptions to this; many are faithful ministers of Christ; and perhaps in none are the grand fundamental truths ignored; but what I lament is, that with many they do not get that prominence which is, I hold, essential. Often, after listening to an able, pretty, carefully prepared discourse, when we come home and try to reach it, how amazingly little there is to hold by! And then you meet with a friend, and the remark is, 'Was not that a beautiful discourse we have had?' Perhaps I take too gloomy a view of things. I cannot help dreading there is a time of dreary Moderatism before us. Certainly, there is little appearance of vitality among us. The bones are very dry. 'Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.'"

The above remarks speak for themselves, and prove my friend to be what I well know he is, a thoroughly earnest and intelligent christian man, and one who seeks and cares for the abominations of the land. What renders the opinion all the more remarkable, is the fact that he is not a premillennialist, and that he almost, but I think not quite, believes in the conversion of the world.—Prophetic Times.

THY WAY—NOT MINE.

Thy way—not mine, O Lord!
However dark it be;
Lead me by thine own hand;
Choose out the path for me.

Smooth let it be, or rough,
It will be still the best;
Winding or straight, it matters not—
It leads me to thy rest.

I dare not choose my lot;
I would not if I might:
Choose thou for me, my God,
So shall I walk aright.

The kingdom that I seek
Is thine; so let the way
That leads to it be thine,
Else surely I might stray.

Take thou my cup, and it
With joy or sorrow fill;
As best to thee may seem,
Choose thou my good and ill.

Choose thou for me my friends,
My sickness or my health;
Choose thou my cares for me,
My poverty or wealth.

Not mine—not mine the choice,
In things or great or small;
Be thou my guide, my strength,
My wisdom, and my all.

CONSCIENCE SAKE.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—ROM. 14 : 19.

That men are not placed here on this earth to accomplish or gratify their own ends or desires, is evident from what the apostle has said in the text we have just used. But that we were placed here for the mutual benefit of each other; that every individual has an influence that extends over all with whom he is associated, is certain. Somebody is looking up to him. Some are watching us and looking to us for an example. Then ought we not to be very careful?

I have come across many in my travels, who act and talk as if they had a right to do and say what they had a mind to (that is, if their conscience did not condemn them). Now that Paul did not look at it in this light is quite certain.

Hear him, in verse thirteenth, "Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more, but judge this rather; that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way." It is true the apostle is speaking in regard to meats, etc., but to my mind it does not stop there; there are more ways than one whereby we may cause our brother to stumble or fall.

But, says one, I can do thus and so. I can allow myself to talk and jest, and not be condemned for it (which I very much doubt). But suppose you can do some things, and not be condemned, is not there a duty for you to do? Are you a stumbling block for any one? Remember that while we may not be condemned in things we allow, if our brother or sister, who is weak and young in the faith, is stumbling in consequence of our proceedings, ought we not to stop at once?

Hear Paul again,—"Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend (or stumble), I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."—1 Cor. 8 : 13. There are certain things that I, perhaps, might do, which in and of themselves might not be sin. But if by my allowing myself to perform a certain act, through the influence that I have over some, they in doing the same thing, sin, fall, and are lost at last, who is to blame? "Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin against the brethren and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ."—1 Cor. 8 : 11.

Now is it not made plain that we are responsible for our influence? Brethren and sisters, let us be careful how we speak, and what we do. The ideas that Paul has advanced in this chapter, although they are upon meats, are not confined there. Let us take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours became a stumbling block to them that are weak. Ver. 9. Then if we persist in the way that is causing our brother or sister to stumble and be lost at last, shall we not be held to an account for it? If we but viewed the worth of mortal men, or had half the love for our fellowmen that Christ had, we should be more careful.

"But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat (or talk, or dress, or any thing), now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died. . . . It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."—Rom. 14 : 15, 21. "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones, which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the sea."—Matt. 18 : 6.

Brethren and sisters, let us live for the benefit of our fellow men. This is what Christ came into this world for. He that was rich for our sakes became poor, that we who were poor might be rich. The love he bore poor fallen man caused him to suffer and die for us. If Christ esteemed man worth as much as that, shall not we, for whom Christ died, do the same one for the other? May God help us to live more for his glory, and be saved when he comes. Your brother in Christ,

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

How much is contained in the above words. What a theme is here presented for our meditation:—Immortality, what is it? I answer, an exemption from death, and every thing connected with it. A life beyond the present, to continue through the ceaseless ages of eternity. Such being the case, we shall see at once the importance of the inquiry, is that immortality to be a source of endless bliss to but a few, or is it to be one of never-ending suffering and anguish for a large portion of the human family? This question is paramount to all others in its importance to the interest of man; and I venture to affirm, that it has engaged his attention and excited his intellectual powers more, and to a greater degree, than all others combined. And why should it not; for who is there in the wide world around us, who has not felt within himself an ardent aspiration for an existence beyond this present life?—a "longing for immortality?"

This sustains the true believer amid the turmoil, vexations and disappointments which it may be his lot to endure while here. It is this blessed hope which enables the christian to endure with such calm resignation the buffetings and persecutions so often heaped upon him. Is he poor, and suffering for a sufficiency of this world's goods, he sees in anticipation a treasure in heaven. Is he persecuted for opinion's sake, he sees with an eye of faith [illegible] children will join in singing praises to their heavenly Father. Has his character been traduced, his most worthy virtues misrepresented; has the voice of scandal been busy with her thousand tongues to villify and abuse him, causing him many sleepless nights and weary days? He has the assurance founded upon the immutable promise contained in the volume of inspiration, that at death all enmity will be laid aside; every evil passion which rages with such uncontrolled fury in the human breast, will then be done away; the lion and the lamb shall then lie down together, and the ransomed of the Lord be made children of the resurrection, and led to that abode where peace and joy shall ever increase.

It is highly important that we make a preparation to meet the day of redemption, lest we be weighed in the balance and found wanting. This is our highest and most essential calling. If we have not our robes washed in the blood of the Lamb, and made clean, all will be lost; and we shall be cast aside into a consuming fire.

Dear reader, let us make a preparation to meet this great and trying day. Let us be up and doing all we can in the service of the Supreme God, before the night of death shall overtake us. Then all will be well with us; then we may die rejoicing. J. ELKINS.

For the World's Crisis.

TO THE DEAR ONES.

Permit me to say a few words more in your paper. I hope and pray I may not offend any one, nor cause any one to grieve God's Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.

I would like to say a few words more about the twentieth of Revelation. After speaking of Satan's being bound and cast into the bottomless pit, then John says he "saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls (or persons) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, AND THEY," mark the expression, and they "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." They lived, which implies once dead. "My son was dead and is alive again."—Luke 15 : 24. We think the angel was plain on this point, when he said, "they lived and reigned with Christ." I think John saw those dear ones as they came from their dusty beds. He says "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years; but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Is not that enough to show that Christ will reign yet a thousand years? Is he not to have the throne of his father David? I think so. Is he not to reign until he has put all enemies under his feet?

I think John looked down the stream of time, until the angel came and bound Satan; then the dear ones rise from their long and silent slumbers, and live "and reign with Christ a thousand years." That does not look like his having the kingdom set up, while he is in the air, or on his Father's throne. We will let him have his father David's throne. If I live to see the Lord come in the clouds of heaven, I hope and pray I may be accounted worthy to enter the beautiful city, where I can be with all his dear saints.

I have said quite a number of things about the twentieth of Revelation. I could say more, but don't know as what I have said will do any good, but hope it will not hurt any one. I hope I have not wearied any one by my articles. They may seem strange, or fanciful, to some, and yet look good to me. Let us all study, and with studying strive to enter in at the straight gate. Keep the good spirit, live with an eye single to God's glory.

I would say to the dear saints scattered throughout the land, be faithful. Do you meet with trials, ask God to help. He is always ready and willing, thank his name. Ye weak ones, may God help you, with me, to face the storm a little longer. We will anchor soon, if faithful.

A few more words to the watchmen; you whom God has chosen and sent out to proclaim his everlasting kingdom at hand, ye aged ones, as you are called to go from place to place, doubtless you meet with cold hearts and frowns from this wicked world. It is not pleasant; but then you meet with some warm hearts, and see some giving their hearts to God. That pays for all the frowns,—yes, an hundred-fold in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting.

You young ones, you that have left ALL, father, mother, wife, children, brothers and sisters, yes, dear ones at home, may God help you, as you go over the hills and through the vales to new places, as it were to break up the soil, may the good seed be sown, and bring forth fruit in the day when God will make up his jewels. May you be blessed and furthered on your journey. May God help you to look to him. He will not leave nor forsake. Dear children, let us pray for them, that God will help them in this trying hour.

Should any one chance to read these lines who has no hope, where will you appear when the saints sing the song of triumph, and hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful." I ask you to ponder well these things. Do you ever think what God has done for you? Think of Calvary, think of the garden, think of those drops of blood. Do you ask what that was for? O, I answer, that was for you. I warn you, in the name of my Master, to flee from the wrath to come. Give your heart to Jesus; love and serve him, and instead of calling on the rocks and mountains to fall on you, it will be said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." I know something of what you think are pleasures. I have been there. I have tried both. If you want pleasure that is pleasure, [illegible] keep all his commandments, and when you lie down at night all is well. I know it is better. Christ knows it is better. The angels know it is better. All that have ever tried it know it is better. You know it is better. Now will you try it? Soon it will be too late. O, may God help you.

Dear children, let us be faithful a little longer, and meet the trials like good soldiers. Pray for me. May God help, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

For the World's Crisis.

GRATITUDE.

I wish to tell of some of the dealings of God toward me, which call for praise and thanksgiving. Instead of looking about to find some who seem to be more highly favored, I would "make a covenant with mine eyes," like Job, and look only upon those dealings and providences which demand the exercise of the spirit of gratitude.

In regard to temporal blessings, I have been fed and clothed every day of my life. If some have fared more sumptuously, their costly fare probably produced various diseases, which more than counterbalanced the pleasure of gratifying the desire. So, however strange such a statement may appear, I have more reason to be thankful for a poor man's fare, than I should have been for the more costly viands of the rich, if I had been placed in their condition.

Agur did not profess to be wise, but his prayer—"Feed me with food convenient for me," was in itself the embodiment of wisdom, so far as temporal things are concerned. The table of the rich often becomes a "snare and a trap," and they that will be rich fall into many "foolish and hurtful lusts, that drown men in perdition and destruction."

The poor do not often praise the Lord that he has kept them from becoming rich, but we have reason to do so. And we shall see this more clearly by and by. One approving smile—one "well done" from the lips of our Master, infinitely outweighs all the wealth, honor and fame of the world. Then praise the Lord for our low estate. Praise him that he has hedged up the way, so that we are kept from the dangers that attend the estate of the rich and the great.

Think of this, ye who have been straining every nerve to get wealth, if you have failed; it is an evidence that you are not yet given over to destruction. Do you remember who it was that said, "How hardly shall they who have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven"? Now if you will only strive as earnestly to gain the "true riches," as you have done to amass a little of the dust of earth, you will surely be more successful, and have reason to praise God forever that you failed to become rich in the gold that perisheth. The Lord is

"Good when he gives, supremely good,
No less when he denies."

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

A GREAT THING.—A loving heart and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could truly say of him, "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across his threshold."

EIN FESTE BURG.

The famous "Battle Song of the Reformation," composed by Luther, A. D. 1529. Newly translated, in the metre of the original, as a fit piece for our times.

BY JOSEPH A. SEISS, D. D.

A mighty fortress is our God,
A Shield and Sword unfailing;
He freely helps through all the flood
Of troubles now assailing.
The old Foe, unspent,
On what wrath intent!
Dreadful craft and power
He wieldeth at this hour;
Earth nowhere has his equal.

Did we in our own strength confide,
Naught 'gainst him were effected;
But the true Champion's on our side,
By God himself elected.
Askest thou his name?
Jesus Christ's the same;
Of all hosts, the Lord,
Nor less than God adored.
Sure he the field secureth.

And should the world with devils teem,
To glut their fury on us;
Nor hopeless yet our cause we'd deem;
The victory still must crown us.
Let the lord of hell,
Scowl with malice fell;
Us no ill is wrought;
For now to judgment brought,
One word can overwhelm him.

The truth shall stand, nor ever yield;
Nor thanks to en'mies for it;
'Tis Christ upholds us on this field,
With his good gifts and Spirit.
Freedom they may take;
Earthly joys unmake;
But when all is done
They still have nothing won,
Whilst for us waits the kingdom.

THREE PARABLES.

MATT. 13: 44. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field."

The treasure is commonly supposed to mean salvation, and the act of the man selling all that he had and buying the field, is supposed to represent the way in which a sinner obtains salvation. But, then, the man is represented as buying, not the treasure, but the field, for the sake of the treasure which it contained. Besides, the sinner in no sense buys salvation—he has nothing to pay, and even those things that were gain to him, the believer counts but loss. "By grace are ye saved." Again, the very last thing that a believer would do with that which he finds in Christ, is to hide it. "Is a candle brought to be put under a bushel, or under a bed?"

In a previous part of the same discourse, we know that "the field" represents "the world," and we cannot suppose that the Lord would introduce confusion into his teaching by using the figure in a different sense, almost in the same breath. The treasure represents something found in the world of unspeakable preciousness to him who became the purchaser of it, but which carnal eyes cannot see, and which remains in safe concealment until the purchaser comes to take possession of his own. The believer will disclaim all thoughts of being either the finder of the treasure, or the purchaser of the field. He, poor bankrupt! owes ten thousand talents, and has nothing to pay. But he knows One who had something—wealth boundless as the glory of God—and of that he emptied himself; precious blood, which he freely poured forth, and for what? We are too much accustomed to confine our views of God's gracious purpose in redemption, to our own salvation; and to lose sight of the display of the glory of God in the ultimate glory of Christ's kingdom, which is deferred, as Paul teaches us, "till the redemption of the purchased possession."

The world is Christ's by purchase, whoever may claim it, and it contains his hidden treasure. The day is coming when it will be his in visible possession. The purpose of God cannot be thwarted. The enemy cannot steal away Christ's garnered wealth; and very soon the Royal Owner will make good his claim against all rivals, and bring his hidden treasure to light. To us, meanwhile, it is given to pray: "Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

Verses 45, 46. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant man seeking goodly pearls; who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it."

Here, again, according to the common interpretation, we have the sinner buying salvation. But it must be observed that this pearl is not one excellent thing in contrast with many worthless things, but one pearl of great price in comparison with many goodly pearls—the priceless among the precious, the dearest among many beloved. But the gospel is not the best among many goodly systems, but truth in contrast with falsehood; and the salvation which it reveals is not the best among many other goodly hopes, but the only real good in contrast with utter ruin and destruction.

What insolent conceit there is in the thought that the sinner seeks Christ, chooses him, and buys him with his goods! Some one may say: But does not the Lord demand that we should forsake all that we have? Yes, but it is one thing to forsake the ruin and wrath from which grace rescues us, and another thing to purchase salvation by a price of our own. We do not say that the rescued mariner purchased the life-boat with the wreck which he abandoned; nor that a man saved from the devouring flames hired or bought the strong arms of his deliverers, with the home which he left in ashes. Why will men speak as though they could purchase Christ with the world, bliss with misery, heaven with hell? Believers can tell whether they chose God, or he chose them; whether they were the seekers or the sought, the purchasers or the purchased.

In that merchantman seeking goodly pearls, and finding one pearl of great price, we have another view of the shepherd who had a hundred sheep, all the objects of his tender care; but who left the ninety and nine safe in the pasture, and went after the one that had gone astray. In this pearl of great price we see the Church in Christ's estimate of it. Among the other objects of his divine regard—all goodly pearls—this was selected by his especial love, to be the very jewel of his crown. By what displays of love did he win it for himself! "He who was rich, for our sakes became poor." And whatever might be told of the estimation in which he held the other objects of his holy love, of this it is said, in distinction from all the rest, "Christ also loved the Church, and gave himself for it"—THE PEARL OF GREAT PRICE.

Verses 47–50. "Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a net that was cast into the sea, and gathered of every kind; which, when it was full, they drew to shore, and sat down, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away," etc.

This, which is usually styled "the parable of the draw-net," would be more appropriately named "the parable of the final separation of good and bad;" for both in the parable and in the Lord's application of it, the preliminary action is lost sight of, and attention is directed to the solemn, judicial act in which the kingdom of heaven shall be established. In the common interpretation, almost every thing in the parable is referred to the Church—the Church is the fisherman, the Lord's agent in gathering sinners to himself; the Church is the net into which they are gathered; and, since the Church is composed of sinners saved, the Church is also the fish caught in the net—as though any such confusion of thought could ever be found in the parables of the Lord. The net here spoken of is not the ordinary net used by fishermen, but the sayene, used to sweep a stream or pool through its whole extent, and take all the fish which it contains.

In the parable, we hear nothing of the fishermen who cast the net; and in the Lord's application of it, the only agents mentioned are not those whom the Lord makes "fishers of men," but "the angels," who are always introduced in connection with the final separation of the two classes of mankind. The parable, therefore, is not designed to teach a lesson regarding the ordinary ministry of the gospel, or the mission of the Church.

It teaches a peculiarly solemn lesson regarding the influence of the gospel on men at large, including all within a responsibility which they cannot elude. Thus encompassed, they are dragged along to the day of final decision, when to have received or rejected Christ will make all the difference between heaven and hell. The purpose of God is advancing irresistibly to its consummation, in which all mankind shall receive their final doom or their deliverance. "When it is full," when the purpose of God shall have reached the point of accomplishment, he who has been seen as the sower of the seed will appear as the administrator of judgment; "whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather the wheat into his garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." The result of the final judgment is always described as a final separation of the two classes of mankind, and the removal of all who are opposed to his righteous sceptre; so that there may be none left to disturb the peace of his reign. "The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them that do iniquity."

This parable relates to all who come within range of gospel influences. Those who are justified by faith shall be welcomed into the joy of his kingdom. The wrath so long suspended will be executed on unbelievers and hypocrites. The Lord gives us none of the details of the sinner's doom, in which a distempered fancy so strangely revels. The silence of an unutterable horror rests upon it; but surely it is a terrible thing to fall into the hands of the living God. "There shall be weeping and gnashing of teeth"—the anguish of insupportable woe, the impotent fury of a desperate soul armed against itself in still more insupportable self-reproach. Gospel-despisers! it is to this you are hastening.

2 Cor. v. 9. "Wherefore we labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be accepted of Him."

This passage is sometimes used to foster a legal spirit, as though our acceptance with God were yet undecided, and we were still called to labor to secure it. The impression is, perhaps, strengthened by the reference, in the next verse, to the judgment-seat of Christ, as though it were there that the question of our acceptance is to be determined, and that, too, upon the ground of the things done in the body. If this were the doctrine of the passage, it would be in open conflict with all that the Spirit of God has taught by the apostles, and by Paul in particular, regarding the salvation of believers, which is of grace, and not by works. It is not reserved for future decision, for "He hath made us accepted in the Beloved, in whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace." Believers have the Lord's own word for it, that they "shall not come into condemnation," or rather "into the judgment."

Nothing could be more positive than the assurance with which Paul speaks of acceptance as a present and accomplished blessedness, in this very chapter. Just because it is so, and in view of the grace that has made it so, under the sweet but strong constraints of love, "We labor, that, whether present or absent, we may be WELL PLEASING to him." A loving child, just in proportion to his love, and in proportion to his sense of his father's love, labors to secure that father's approbation; he desires, when his father is out of sight, to act as would be agreeable to his father if he were present, and desires that his conduct may be such, that when his father returns it may be acknowledged as "WELL DONE." So believers seek to walk now in the light of their Lord's approval—so that, when the Lord comes and reckons with his servants, he may say to them: "Well done, good and faithful servant." A father's approval or disapproval of a child, is a different thing from a judge's acquital or condemnation of a criminal. The word translated "accepted," in this passage, is properly translated "well pleasing" in Col. 3: 20, and Heb. 13: 21.

John 17: 24. "Father, I will that those whom thou hast given me be with me where I am."

"I will" sounds harsh, according to the ordinary use of the word, as it implies something like an authoritative demand. Its true meaning is, "I desire;" and then there is a peculiar sweetness in the passage, since it expresses not only his love toward us, but his filial confidence that the intimation of his desire was more than a sufficient plea with the Father's abundant love.—The Witness.

EDWARD IRVING ON THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"The church, in the primitive times, did remember the coming of her Lord to judge the nations, especially pagan Rome, which had slain her children; and accordingly, under the fifth seal, the souls of them that had been slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held, cried with a loud voice and said, 'How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?' But that same church, which had glorified God in the fires of persecution, through the strength of her hope in the coming Lord, who had reserved judgment unto himself,—that same church could not bear the prosperity of being established over the Roman empire. She then forgot that she was a widow; she forgot that her Husband was in the heavens, and was about to appear again for her justification; she made love to the kings of earth, and gave herself to them, even unto that beast who had slain her children, and which was possessed by Satan, that old serpent and devil. But still, God raised up witnesses to witness against this fornication; and he drew out this nation with a high hand, to protest against it, and to pray for judgment upon the mother of harlots, which rideth upon the beast. And this destruction our fathers expected at the coming of Christ. I say the reformers and fathers of the British church did not more certainly expect and believe in a personal advent of Christ, than they expected that to destroy the antichristian Papacy. He was to come; so that until these days, these high and palmy days as they dream, there ever was lifted up by the widow a prayer unto the great Judge, to be righted and redressed of all her wrongs upon that papal destroyer, in whom is found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth. But now, behold England and Scotland; Church Presbyterian, and Church Episcopalian, Churchman and Dissenter, have altogether ceased from putting up this prayer for justice upon the adversary. Indeed, they have ceased to regard her as an adversary at all. They have forgotten her deeds of darkness, and her words of blasphemy, and they desire to bring to her succor and help.

I say again, except it be from those who have faith in the coming of the Son of man to judge the quick, there be hardly any members of any church in Christendom who are heartily lifting up the prayer for judgment upon the adversary. There is no faith of such a judgment. They have stricken a league with her upon the ground of political rights, as they are pleased to term them. Meanwhile the rights of God's church have been forgotten; the rights of the Son of man to the only allegiance and affection of his church have been forgotten. Would that the parable of the poor widow, which our Lord constructed with such wisdom, and applied with such earnestness, had been remembered; then would there neither have been an apostasy, nor would there have been proposals of a league with that apostasy. For is she not judged in terms of this very parable? as it is written (Rev. 18: 7), 'For she saith in her heart, I sit a queen, and am no widow, and shall see no sorrow. Therefore shall her plagues come in one day, death and mourning and famine; and she shall be utterly burned with fire, for strong is the Lord God that judgeth her.'

"They talk most idly who speak of a spiritual coming of the kingdom, as yet future; for we have now his spiritual kingdom, hidden within us,—that is to say, he reigneth in the hearts of his believing people. The souls of believers are the only existence upon earth, where Christ reigns. Through the soul indeed, reclaimed by the Holy Ghost, Christ doth enforce the body unto obedience; and the worldly tools likewise: but Satan is natural master, both of the flesh and of the world, succumbing truly to the soul Christ possessed; but unwillingly, with diabolical reluctancy. Here we have no question with those Spiritualists, but hold much higher and distincter doctrine than they do. But when they, in their ignorance and blindness, will go about to say that this is all which God's word hath promised and Christ hath purchased, to totally abjure and abhor their narrow mindedness and indifference to God's verity and to Christ's glory. And we hold that the Son of man is to come like the lightning, and that he is to judge the quick, as the furnace judgeth between the gold and the dross; and he is to separate bosom friends and closest united companions—the one unto destruction, like the deluge, or like Sodom; the other unto honor and to glory, according to no other principle of judgment than this, whether they are expecting him and ready to receive him or not. We say he is to come to destroy the careless church, all indifferent to his coming; to slay the great enemy of the chosen one, which is Antichrist in all his forms, and to deliver his elect ones, who have cried day and night for vengeance upon the adversary, from his oppression, whether that oppression be the oppression of the church upon the living, or the oppression of the grave upon the dead. And I say, moreover, that it is his elect who cry unto him day and night for vengeance, and they only who have the promise of this deliverance; and those only who are on tip-toe readiness to obey the summons, who receive the escape from the fiery deluge. What say you; are not these things in the warning of our Lord? Is not this, and this only, the substance of his warning? Shall I be ashamed to echo the words which my Lord hath spoken? Shall you be unwilling to hear the words he hath commanded us to speak! God forbid! Let the gainsayer gainsay, and let the deniers to the uttermost deny that the Lord is coming in person to judge the Antichrist church; it is the voice of God's word, and it cannot be broken. And if they would quench in death every living voice which declareth it, then the thunders from the heaven above, and the lightnings flashing from pole to pole, and the earthquake's shock from beneath, will make men hear it; ay, and believe it too; but, like the devils, to believe and tremble. Therefore, O men! give heed how ye hear.

"I observe, finally, that it is the duty, the safety, and the glory of every believer, to pray for the coming of the Lord in judgment upon the adversary of his church; to pray always, and not to faint; and those who have so little discernment as not to dare pray for the downfall of the oppressor, the casting out of Satan, the destruction of Babylon, have neither lot nor part in this matter. Those who will not pray for Christ to come, who feel shocked at the thought of the rending bolt which bears him, and the arrowy shower of lightning which goes before him; those who have not their peace made with him, and are hanging in doubt whether he be their Savior or not; those who love father, mother, brother, sister, life, more than him; those who love traffic, wealth, estate, more than him; those who are not ready to take wing and flee from the storm, like doves unto their windows; those who are not, like old Simeon, waiting for his salvation; those who have a divided heart, like Lot's wife: what shall I say of such? That they shall not enter into his kingdom. Do these words strike to the quick? do they prick your heart? I mean it so; in love I mean it so, that ye may instantly shake loose the fetters, as Samson did, in the might of the Holy Ghost given unto you, and join yourselves to the Savior, whom I preach unto every sinner, for instant peace, for instant blessedness: so that I can say to every one that heareth these words, and believeth them, If Christ were this night to appear, this night shalt thou be with him in paradise!"

"THE WANE OF FAITH."

I was much struck with the article on the "Wane of Faith," in the "Prophetic Times," and as a somewhat similar corroboration of the views there expressed came under my notice lately, I thought I would also make it known.

About a year ago, I wrote to a christian friend in Scotland, giving him my views upon the state of religion in Canada, and asking him how he thought matters stood at home? "There is not, in my opinion," I said, "five per cent. of christianity in Canada. Do you think there is more in Scotland? Is there ten per cent.? Is there twenty?" My friend's answer struck me forcibly. His statement was this: "The condition of Christ's cause in Scotland at this moment is very sad; and look at what quarter of the world we may, we are compelled to say that it is very sad. For my part, I look for persecution, or a return of dreary Moderatism." A Scotticism for lukewarmness in religion. In a recent letter, my friend, without further solicitation, again returns to the subject, and writes as follows:—"The Established Assembly created fully as much interest as ours (the Free Church) this year, in consequence of the 'Innovation discussion.' The bulk of serious people whom I have met with seem gratified that Dr. Lee, McLeod & Co. have got a church. I believe that McLeod, Blaiker & Co. are doing great injury to the cause of Christ in Scotland. They are all very popular with young men, specially young ministers, who are getting more and more impregnated with their views. McLeod tries to have a kind of sough (sighing of the wind through the trees) of the gospel, but not at all hearty—awfully 'Broad Church.' Lee and Blaiker are both, I hold, unchristian men. They are both professors (i. e. of theology), and so all our young Established ministers can through them meet. Thus I fear the evangelical element is gradually becoming less and less in the Established Church. Would I could say that it is holding its place among ourselves. I cannot but fear it is not. The grand, sappy truths of the gospel, such as the substitution of Christ, his righteousness, atonement, etc., have not that foremost place in the discourses of many of our young ministers which formerly characterized the preaching of our evangelical ministers. The prevailing cry is, that our preaching must keep up with the requirements of the age; by which they seem to mean that it must be with 'cheering words of man's wisdom.' Of course, there are many exceptions to this; many are faithful ministers of Christ; and perhaps in none are the grand fundamental truths ignored; but what I lament is, that with many they do not get that prominence which is, I hold, essential. Often, after listening to an able, pretty, carefully prepared discourse, when we come home and try to reach it, how amazingly little there is to hold by! And then you meet with a friend, and the remark is, 'Was not that a beautiful discourse we have had?' Perhaps I take too gloomy a view of things. I cannot help dreading there is a time of dreary Moderatism before us. Certainly, there is little appearance of vitality among us. The bones are very dry. 'Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.'"

The above remarks speak for themselves, and prove my friend to be what I well know he is, a thoroughly earnest and intelligent christian man, and one who seeks and cares for the abominations of the land. What renders the opinion all the more remarkable, is the fact that he is not a premillennialist, and that he almost, but I think not quite, believes in the conversion of the world.—Prophetic Times.

THY WAY—NOT MINE.

Thy way—not mine, O Lord!
However dark it be;
Lead me by thine own hand;
Choose out the path for me.

Smooth let it be, or rough,
It will be still the best;
Winding or straight, it matters not—
It leads me to thy rest.

I dare not choose my lot;
I would not if I might:
Choose thou for me, my God,
So shall I walk aright.

The kingdom that I seek
Is thine; so let the way
That leads to it be thine,
Else surely I might stray.

Take thou my cup, and it
With joy or sorrow fill;
As best to thee may seem,
Choose thou my good and ill.

Choose thou for me my friends,
My sickness or my health;
Choose thou my cares for me,
My poverty or wealth.

Not mine—not mine the choice,
In things or great or small,
Be thou my guide, my strength,
My wisdom, and my all.

CONSCIENCE SAKE.

"Let us therefore follow after the things which make for peace, and things wherewith one may edify another."—Rom. 14: 19.

That men are not placed here on this earth to accomplish or gratify their own ends or desires, is evident from what the apostle has said in the text we have just used. But that we were placed here for the mutual benefit of each other; that every individual has an influence that extends over all with whom he is associated, is certain. Somebody is looking up to him. Some are watching us and looking to us for an example. Then ought we not to be very careful?

I have come across many in my travels, who act and talk as if they had a right to do and say what they had a mind to (that is, if their conscience did not condemn them). Now that Paul did not look at it in this light is quite certain.

Hear him, in verse thirteenth, "Let us not, therefore, judge one another any more, but judge this rather; that no man put a stumbling block, or an occasion to fall, in his brother's way." It is true the apostle is speaking in regard to meats, etc., but to my mind it does not stop there; there are more ways than one whereby we may cause our brother to stumble or fall.

But, says one, I can do thus and so. I can allow myself to talk and jest, and not be condemned for it (which I very much doubt). But suppose you can do some things, and not be condemned, is not there a duty for you to do? Are you a stumbling block for any one? Remember that while we may not be condemned in things we allow, if our brother or sister, who is weak and young in the faith, is stumbling in consequence of our proceedings, ought we not to stop at once?

Hear Paul again,—"Wherefore, if meat make my brother to offend (or stumble), I will eat no flesh while the world standeth, lest I make my brother to offend."—1 Cor. 8: 13. There are certain things that I, perhaps, might do, which in and of themselves might not be sin. But if by my allowing myself to perform a certain act, through the influence that I have over some, they in doing the same thing, sin, fall, and are lost at last, who is to blame? "Through thy knowledge shall the weak brother perish, for whom Christ died? But when ye sin against the brethren and wound their weak conscience, ye sin against Christ."—1 Cor. 8: 11.

Now is it not made plain that we are responsible for our influence? Brethren and sisters, let us be careful how we speak, and what we do. The ideas that Paul has advanced in this chapter, although they are upon meats, are not confined there. Let us take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours became a stumbling block to them that are weak. Ver. 9. Then if we persist in the way that is causing our brother or sister to stumble and be lost at last, shall we not be held to an account for it? If we but viewed the worth of mortal men, or had half the love for our fellowmen that Christ had, we should be more careful.

"But if thy brother be grieved with thy meat (or talk, or dress, or any thing), now walkest thou not charitably. Destroy not him with thy meat, for whom Christ died. . . . It is good neither to eat flesh, nor to drink wine, nor any thing whereby thy brother stumbleth, or is offended, or is made weak."—Rom. 14: 15, 21. "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones, which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and he were drowned in the depth of the sea."—Matt. 18: 6.

Brethren and sisters, let us live for the benefit of our fellow men. This is what Christ came into this world for. He that was rich for our sakes became poor, that we who were poor might be rich. The love he bore poor fallen man caused him to suffer and die for us. If Christ esteemed man worth as much as that, shall not we, for whom Christ died, do the same one for the other? May God help us to live more for his glory, and be saved when he comes. Your brother in Christ,

N. Dana, Mass. GEO. A. STREETER.

THE IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

How much is contained in the above words. What a theme is here presented for our meditation:—Immortality, what is it? I answer, an exemption from death, and every thing connected with it. A life beyond the present, to continue through the ceaseless ages of eternity. Such being the case, we shall see at once the importance of the inquiry, is that immortality to be a source of endless bliss to but a few, or is it to be one of never-ending suffering and anguish for a large portion of the human family? This question is paramount to all others in its importance to the interest of man; and I venture to affirm, that it has engaged his attention and excited his intellectual powers more, and to a greater degree, than all others combined. And why should it not; for who is there in the wide world around us, who has not felt within himself an ardent aspiration for an existence beyond this present life?—a "longing for immortality?"

This sustains the true believer amid the turmoil, vexations and disappointments which it may be his lot to endure while here. It is this blessed hope which enables the christian to endure with such calm resignation the buffetings and persecutions so often heaped upon him. Is he poor, and suffering for a sufficiency of this world's goods, he sees in anticipation a treasure in heaven. Is he persecuted for opinion's sake, he sees with an eye of faith [illegible] children will join in singing praises to their heavenly Father. Has his character been traduced, his most worthy virtues misrepresented; has the voice of scandal been busy with her thousand tongues to villify and abuse him, causing him many sleepless nights and weary days? He has the assurance founded upon the immutable promise contained in the volume of inspiration, that at death all enmity will be laid aside; every evil passion which rages with such uncontrolled fury in the human breast, will then be done away; the lion and the lamb shall then lie down together, and the ransomed of the Lord be made children of the resurrection, and led to that abode where peace and joy shall ever increase.

It is highly important that we make a preparation to meet the day of redemption, lest we be weighed in the balance and found wanting. This is our highest and most essential calling. If we have not our robes washed in the blood of the Lamb, and made clean, all will be lost; and we shall be cast aside into a consuming fire.

Dear reader, let us make a preparation to meet this great and trying day. Let us be up and doing all we can in the service of the Supreme God, before the night of death shall overtake us. Then all will be well with us; then we may die rejoicing. J. ELKINS.

TO THE DEAR ONES.

Permit me to say a few words more in your paper. I hope and pray I may not offend any one, nor cause any one to grieve God's Holy Spirit, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption.

I would like to say a few words more about the twentieth of Revelation. After speaking of Satan's being bound and cast into the bottomless pit, then John says he "saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls (or persons) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands, AND THEY," mark the expression, and they "lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years." They lived, which implies once dead. "My son was dead and is alive again."—Luke 15: 24. We think the angel was plain on this point, when he said, "they lived and reigned with Christ." I think John saw those dear ones as they came from their dusty beds. He says "they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years; but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished." Is not that enough to show that Christ will reign yet a thousand years? Is he not to have the throne of his father David? I think so. Is he not to reign until he has put all enemies under his feet?

I think John looked down the stream of time, until the angel came and bound Satan; then the dear ones rise from their long and silent slumbers, and live "and reign with Christ a thousand years." That does not look like his having the kingdom set up, while he is in the air, or on his Father's throne. We will let him have his father David's throne. If I live to see the Lord come in the clouds of heaven, I hope and pray I may be accounted worthy to enter the beautiful city, where I can be with all his dear saints.

I have said quite a number of things about the twentieth of Revelation. I could say more, but don't know as what I have said will do any good, but hope it will not hurt any one. I hope I have not wearied any one by my articles. They may seem strange, or fanciful, to some, and yet look good to me. Let us all study, and with studying strive to enter in at the straight gate. Keep the good spirit, live with an eye single to God's glory.

I would say to the dear saints scattered throughout the land, be faithful. Do you meet with trials, ask God to help. He is always ready and willing, thank his name. Ye weak ones, may God help you, with me, to face the storm a little longer. We will anchor soon, if faithful.

A few more words to the watchmen; you whom God has chosen and sent out to proclaim his everlasting kingdom at hand, ye aged ones, as you are called to go from place to place, doubtless you meet with cold hearts and frowns from this wicked world. It is not pleasant; but then you meet with some warm hearts, and see some giving their hearts to God. That pays for all the frowns,—yes, an hundred-fold in this life, and in the world to come life everlasting.

You young ones, you that have left ALL, father, mother, wife, children, brothers and sisters, yes, dear ones at home, may God help you, as you go over the hills and through the vales to new places, as it were to break up the soil, may the good seed be sown, and bring forth fruit in the day when God will make up his jewels. May you be blessed and furthered on your journey. May God help you to look to him. He will not leave nor forsake. Dear children, let us pray for them, that God will help them in this trying hour.

Should any one chance to read these lines who has no hope, where will you appear when the saints sing the song of triumph, and hear it said, "Well done, good and faithful." I ask you to ponder well these things. Do you ever think what God has done for you? Think of Calvary, think of the garden, think of those drops of blood. Do you ask what that was for? O, I answer, that was for you. I warn you, in the name of my Master, to flee from the wrath to come. Give your heart to Jesus; love and serve him, and instead of calling on the rocks and mountains to fall on you, it will be said, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." I know something of what you think are pleasures. I have been there. I have tried both. If you want pleasure that is pleasure, [illegible] keep all his commandments, and when you lie down at night all is well. I know it is better. Christ knows it is better. The angels know it is better. All that have ever tried it know it is better. You know it is better. Now will you try it? Soon it will be too late. O, may God help you.

Dear children, let us be faithful a little longer, and meet the trials like good soldiers. Pray for me. May God help, is the prayer of your brother in Christ,

GRATITUDE.

I wish to tell of some of the dealings of God toward me, which call for praise and thanksgiving. Instead of looking about to find some who seem to be more highly favored, I would "make a covenant with mine eyes," like Job, and look only upon those dealings and providences which demand the exercise of the spirit of gratitude.

In regard to temporal blessings, I have been fed and clothed every day of my life. If some have fared more sumptuously, their costly fare probably produced various diseases, which more than counterbalanced the pleasure of gratifying the desire. So, however strange such a statement may appear, I have more reason to be thankful for a poor man's fare, than I should have been for the more costly viands of the rich, if I had been placed in their condition.

Agur did not profess to be wise, but his prayer—"Feed me with food convenient for me," was in itself the embodiment of wisdom, so far as temporal things are concerned. The table of the rich often becomes a "snare and a trap," and they that will be rich fall into many "foolish and hurtful lusts, that drown men in perdition and destruction."

The poor do not often praise the Lord that he has kept them from becoming rich, but we have reason to do so. And we shall see this more clearly by and by. One approving smile—one "well done" from the lips of our Master, infinitely outweighs all the wealth, honor and fame of the world. Then praise the Lord for our low estate. Praise him that he has hedged up the way, so that we are kept from the dangers that attend the estate of the rich and the great.

Think of this, ye who have been straining every nerve to get wealth, if you have failed; it is an evidence that you are not yet given over to destruction. Do you remember who it was that said, "How hardly shall they who have riches enter into the kingdom of heaven"? Now if you will only strive as earnestly to gain the "true riches," as you have done to amass a little of the dust of earth, you will surely be more successful, and have reason to praise God forever that you failed to become rich in the gold that perisheth. The Lord is

"Good when he gives, supremely good,
No less when he denies."

"Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name."

Sutton, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

A GREAT THING.—A loving heart and a pleasant countenance are commodities which a man should never fail to take home with him. They will best season his food and soften his pillow. It were a great thing for a man that his wife and children could truly say of him, "He never brought a frown or unhappiness across his threshold."

REPORT OF THE MAINE SEC. ADV. MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE.

Met at North Parish meeting-house, Augusta, Me., at 1 o'clock P. M., Oct. 26th, 1865. S. K. Partridge was chosen President. Adjourned to 9 A. M. Friday. Met Friday according to adjournment. C. H. Leverton was chosen Secretary. The report of the last meeting was called for, and read. Moved, that a committee of three be appointed to take the supervision of the meeting, present business, etc. Carried. Brn. Wellcome, Carr and Damman were appointed.

The committee reported as follows: 1. That we hear the report of the committee on the Constitution. 2. That we have two sessions each day—one at 9 A. M., the other at 1 P. M. Preaching at 7 P. M. Adopted. Adjourned at 12 M. to 1 P. M. The Constitution was adopted with amendments.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. 1. This conference shall be called The Maine Second Advent Ministerial Conference.

ART. 2. The officers of this conference shall be, a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and a committee of three to be an Executive Board, and shall be chosen annually.

ART. 3. The regular meetings shall be held annually, on the second Tuesday in January.

ART. 4. The Executive Board shall call an extra session of the conference, at such time and place as they judge best for its welfare; always previously giving six weeks notice.

ART. 5. The objects of this conference shall be to obtain thorough investigation and knowledge of the Scriptures, by united examination; a greater unity in the faith, in purity and in doctrine among the ministry; the promotion of gospel order and discipline among ourselves and the churches; christian union and effort to build up the believers in Christ in the doctrine of the New Covenant, and in the knowledge of all Bible truth, especially the proclamation of the immediate personal advent of Christ to restore all things. Also, to bring sinners to Christ for pardon and salvation in the kingdom of God, by harmony of action in preaching; to encourage all whom we believe divinely impressed to preach the word, to move forward in the work of God; and to circulate such publications as we believe the best adapted for these ends.

ART. 6. The members of this conference shall consist of all such ordained ministers as wish to unite in the above objects, and who are not objected to by any of its members.

ART. 7. No person called a preacher shall be received into this conference, unless in the judgment of all its members present such person has natural qualifications to teach, grace enough to be taught, and a call from God to preach, though he be a christian.

ART. 8. All complaints against the character or conduct of any member, to receive attention, must be put in writing, accompanied by the name of the complainant, and then presented to the Secretary, who shall lay it before the Executive Board at once; who [if satisfied there is need of discipline for moral delinquency] may notify the accused to refrain from preaching, and the public from giving him countenance, until the next session of the conference, when proper investigation of the [illegible]

ART. 9. No person ordained by members of this conference shall be thus recognized, unless their character and qualifications agree with article seven.

ART. 10. All members of this conference shall report at each session, either personally or by letter, to the Secretary.

Moved, That we now proceed to elect officers. Carried. Moved, That the President and Secretary now officiating stand for the ensuing year. Carried. Moved, That Wm. H. Mitchell be Vice President. Carried. Moved, That I. C. Wellcome be Treasurer. Carried. Moved, That Wm. H. Mitchell, R. R. York, and S. K. Partridge be the Executive Board. Carried. Moved, That we now hear the report of the Agent of the Tract Society. Carried.

Bro. I. C. Wellcome then read the report.

Total receipts.	$203.03
Total disbursements. . . .	$164.79
Balance in treasury.	$38.24

The report was accepted.

Moved. That the Conference be constituted a Tract Society. Carried. Adjourned to 9 A. M., Saturday. Met Saturday, at 9 A. M. Opened as usual by prayer. Moved, That I. C. Wellcome be agent of the Tract Society. Carried. Moved, That we raise $200.00 for the Tract Fund. Carried. Moved, That the Executive Board, with the agent, be the Board of Managers for the selection and distribution of books and tracts. Carried. Bro. L. L. Howard then moved that the following resolutions [passed at our last session] be rescinded.

1. Resolved, That we believe that the doctrine of the Seventh-day Sabbath, as interpreted in the publications emanating from Battle Creek, and the theory of the non-revival of the wicked dead, from elsewhere, are contrary to the teachings of the New Covenant; and their promulgation is subversive of the christian faith, and tends to distraction. We therefore exhort all our brethren not to encourage their circulation.

2. Resolved, That the law of faith by which man is justified, or condemned, is the doctrine of Christ, as brought to view in Rom. 10: 5–11, and John 3: 18; which law is established by the death and resurrection of Christ.

The yeas and nays being called, the vote stood as follows: yeas,—L. L. Howard, Isaac Wight, D. M. Hanscomb. Nays,—J. Carr, H. D. Reed, I. C. Wellcome, I. Damman, C. H. Leverton; these being all the members beside the Chair present. The vote to rescind was lost.

Met at one. The following was then presented;—

Resolved, That we, as ministers of Christ composing this conference, will avoid all vain expressions, and, also, all unchristian personal allusions, in public or private. Carried.

Brn. Wight, Hanscomb and Howard now requested to be dismissed. Previous to this, Bro. Howard, conceiving that his presence in the conference was objectionable, made a motion that he should be turned out, without one vote in favor. It was now Moved, That Brn. I. Wight, L. L. Howard, and D. M. Hanscomb, at their request, be dismissed. Carried. Moved, That a report of this session be sent to the "World's Crisis" and "Advent Herald" for publication. Carried. Adjourned sine die.

During the session there was preaching each evening, and on Sunday, with good interest. We think the meeting was a benefit to the people.

S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
C. H. LEVERTON, Secretary.

The World's Crisis AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.

Boston, Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3,00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

BE PATIENT.

Some of our readers will need a little patience to bear with our delays in business matters. One of our clerks, Bro. E. P. Woodward, has been sick for some weeks, and as the result, orders for tracts, books, and changes in the direction of papers, have not been attended to as promptly as we could wish; but we have endeavored to do the best we could under the circumstances. Bro. W. is now better, and expects to be in the office again this week, after which, we hope all will be right.

TRACTS.—We are out of some kinds of tracts, and consequently have not been able to fill all orders. We hope to have a supply soon. Sickness has been the cause of the delay.

OUR VISIT TO PHILADELPHIA.

Our late visit to the city of "Brotherly Love" was one of much interest and profit to us, on account of the delightful interviews enjoyed with the dear children of the Lord, who are looking for his speedy return. We found some in different churches, who appear to be wholly consecrated to Christ, and are anxiously waiting his appearing, and expecting him within a very brief period. We have never met persons to whom the second coming of our Savior seemed to be more of a reality, than to these humble souls. They show their faith by their works. It is no matter of speculation with them. They feel as confident as did Simeon about the first advent; and as sure they shall live to see him come, as he did that he should not die till he had seen the babe of Bethlehem. We have never seen before so much intelligence and devotion combined. It was truly a feast to our soul, for which we have great reason to thank the Lord.

While in Philadelphia we had pleasant interviews with Bro. F. H. Burbank, who is doing a good work among the colored people and poor whites. The Lord is blessing his faithful labors, in company with others who are aiding him. Those who have any thing to spare for the poor will put it to a good use if they send it to the "Dorcas Mission." [See notice on second page.] Brn. Himes and Hastings made a short visit to the city on their way to other fields of labor. They [illegible] interesting meetings in places where they have recently been.

Our last day in the city, Oct. 29th, was one of much interest. Our meetings were held in Concert Hall, on Chestnut St., where the Spiritualists held their National Convention. It is said to be the nicest hall in the city, and to hold some three thousand people. The usual price for the hall is $50 a day.

On the same platform where the Spiritualists formed their National Organization, we gave three discourses to large audiences, on the subject of Spiritualism; showing the cause of the various phenomena attributed to the spirits of our friends,—that they proceed from demons, and not from human spirits. We next examined the morals and doctrines of Spiritualism, and found the tendency of the former directly the opposite of christianity; and the latter all opposed to the Bible. In the evening we spoke on "the future of Spiritualism," in its political aspect. Several asked questions during the day and evening. The truth did not suffer in consequence of criticism. Several prominent Spiritualists were present to hear what we had to say. During the intermission at noon, we had a pleasant interview with one who has spent some ten thousand dollars in experimenting in Spiritualism. He has invented different machines to aid the spirits in making communications. He has just completed an instrument which surpasses all others, and he says the spirits are delighted with it, because they can communicate through it so rapidly. He took us to his rooms and showed us his various inventions. He is very ardently engaged in his investigations of the various phenomena of Spiritualism. But after listening to his statements for sometime, we felt it duty to point him to the Scriptures of truth on the subject, and show him that if he followed on, it would be as it had been, a continual promise of something he would not obtain; and at last he would only find himself among those who are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."—2 Tim. 3: 7. We exhorted him to leave the ignis-fatuus he was then pursuing, and take the Bible for his guide, and he would be led aright. He is a man of wealth and influence, and very zealously engaged in the cause of Spiritualism. We think we never saw one more in earnest. The spirits keep making him large promises, and are giving him many interesting and encouraging prophecies of what they will soon accomplish.

This is truly an age of wonders—"lying wonders," with which, if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect.

CORRECTION.—In an editorial, in the last Crisis, (Nov. 7th), concerning a "free paper," we are made to say the opposite of what we meant, as follows:—"Neither do we know of an editor who inserts articles that he does not indorse himself." It should read; "Neither do we know of an editor who does not insert articles that he does not indorse himself."

DISCUSSION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Our discussion in Philadelphia with Mr. J. G. Fish, of Hammonton, N. J., was one of considerable interest, and did much to advance the cause of truth. The discussion was in Sansom street hall, commencing Monday evening, Oct. 23d, and was continued every evening during the week. We discussed the following question:—

Resolved, That man has a spirit which exists after the death of the body, in a conscious state, and communicates to the inhabitants of earth."

Mr. Fish, who was formerly a Baptist preacher, is now one of the boldest and ablest defenders of Spiritualism. He does not hesitate to make earnest efforts to overthrow the Bible and to denounce the God of the Bible. During his remarks the first evening, he said: "I am going to impeach the Bible;—it shall be impeached." But when he brought forward his witnesses, for the purpose of impeaching the Bible, they were all proved to be lying witnesses; hence the Bible was acquitted, while they were condemned by their own contradictions, and hypocritical lies.

He made a great effort to prove that Moses' writings were copied from the Zend-Avesta* of Zoroaster, and read what was claimed to have been taken by Moses from the Avesta. At the close of the discussion on Thursday evening, after our opponent had been quoting, as it was claimed, from the Zend-Avesta, what he asserted was written three hundred years before the days of Moses, giving a strange account of the origin of man and other things; a stranger to us, who had been attending the discussion, came and said, that he was pained to hear the Avesta so misrepresented, and inquired why we did not correct our opponent? We replied, that we had not the Zend-Avesta, so that we could do it. He replied that he knew of a copy to which he could get access, and if we would call the next day at his office, he would have it there for our inspection. Of course the opportunity was improved, and the book carefully examined; when it was found that no such things were in the book as had been given to the audience by my opponent during the debate, which had been given as extracts from the Avesta. On Friday evening Mr. Fish brought up the subject again, asserting that the Zend-Avesta of Zoroaster was three hundred years older than the books of Moses; and that Moses made up his writings in part from the Zend-Avesta. He had been reading extracts from a book, which, from the way he spoke, we had supposed was the Zend-Avesta, till after our examination of the real work, which is very scarce. The copy loaned to us was the only one we ever saw. It has not been translated into English but a short time.

After hearing the statement of our opponent, in our reply, we said, here is a copy of the real Zend-Avesta; and remarked further, that we did not know what book our opponent had been reading, but would like to have him tell the audience, for we mistrusted it was one got up by the spirits and their followers, and was not very reliable, as we could not find a sentence in the Zend-Avesta, which had been quoted by our opponent as coming from Zoroaster. Mr. Fish did not see fit to inform the people anything about the book from which he read, so that we are still ignorant of its authorship.

After stating to the audience that there were no such things in the Zend-Avesta as had been represented by our opponent, he said if we would let him take the book, he would read from it and prove his position; so we very gladly passed the book to him; but after examining it for some time, he did not find one word to read to the audience; hence we concluded that he was obliged to admit that what his book had said was not true. We do not charge Mr. Fish with wilfull misrepresentation; but the author of his book was the one who led him astray.

We then showed that, according to the best authority, Zoroaster, the author of the Zend-Avesta, wrote about one thousand years after Moses; hence Moses could not copy from Zoroaster's writings as my opponent had claimed; and whatever might be found in the Zend-Avesta that resembled the writings of Moses, Zoroaster was the one who copied, and not the Jewish writer.

In the English Encyclopedia, Vol. VII. p. 1038, we found the following:—"The modern Parsees assign to their prophet [Zoroaster] the date of 550 B. C." The Parsees were the priests of the Persian religion, and would be most likely to know better about the time when the founder of their religion lived than any one else. It is understood that the priests of any religion are better prepared to give information relative to their religious matters than any outsiders.

Beeton says:—"Zoroaster . . . is supposed to have lived in the reign of Darius Hystaspes."—Beeton's Dictionary of Universal Information, p. 1407. When Cyrus, king of Persia, had reigned seven years, after the conquest of Babylon, his son Cambyses reigned seven years and five months, then Smerdis, the Magian, reigned seven months, and was followed by Darius Hystaspes. Cyrus began his sole reign, as may be most clearly shown, B. C. 488. Cambyses reigned jointly with Cyrus about four years, leaving three for his sole reign; so that Darius Hystaspes did not begin to reign earlier than B. C, 477, which was over ten hundred years after Moses wrote. These facts served to open the eyes of some and remove the fog and dust that had been thrown around them by statements not resting on facts.

In the course of the debate, our opponent said:—"Man is panting for immortality." We inquired how a man could pant after a thing already in his possession? We then showed that the Bible nowhere teaches that man is immortal in this state of existence, but is to seek for it "by patient continuance in well-doing."—Rom. 2: 7.

When referring to the resurrection of our Savior, our opponent said he was not raised, but his body was embalmed by Joseph, and stolen away by the apostles. But while holding to such unscriptural doctrines as these, it is claimed that Spiritualism is ancient christianity revived; whereas, the facts in the case show that they have nothing in common. Spiritualism is wholly anti-christian, opposed to God and the Bible.

Our opponent further stated that the Bible was a "mass of fables." He admitted that Spiritualism and heathenism were alike. He stated that the God of the Bible was a human spirit, or a demon, and "ought to have repented of his sins long ago." He said, "I would that Spiritualism prevailed now instead of christianity." Such is the teaching of the spirits, and their followers. Is not this antichrist?

We think the discussion resulted in much good to many by opening their eyes to see the character of Spiritualism as they had never seen it before. But few were aware how deeply it is riveted in error, infidelity and sensualism. To them it had looked "like a lamb," but they now see that it speaks "as a dragon," and is the great enemy of Christ and his religion, "speaking lies in hypocrisy."

Our audiences were large, intelligent, and attentive. The truth found some warm friends who were well satisfied with the results of the discussion.

* ZEND-AVESTA is from Zend and Avesta. Zend properly signifies the translation of the Avesta, or the scriptures of Zoroaster into the Huzvaresh or Pehlevi language, an ancient Persian dialect, in which the Avesta is written. The Avesta is the text itself. The Zend is the interpretation, or commentary on the Avesta.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We think all must admire the spirit of the following, which was appended to one of the articles in this paper:

"When you receive any of my poetical effusions (if poetry it may be called,) I do not wish you to publish them unless you deem them worthy, and leave it wholly with you to decide; as I wish 'our paper' to continue to be the best in the world."

If all writers felt thus, an editor's troubles and burdens would be greatly relieved. And we are glad to say that we are often cheered in our labors by expressions like the foregoing. It is just such a spirit as we suppose all christians feel. The Spirit of Christ never leads us to seek honor, or a high position in the sight of men, or to be offended if we are not put as high as some one else. It is the "old man that clamors for the honors of this world, while "the new man" is led to "condescend to men of low estate," "in honor preferring one another." Humility never murmurs because it is put in a low condition; while pride would be very uneasy and fretful if not honored. The Lord gives grace to the humble.

THE REVELATION.

Sir Isaac Newton's "Observations upon the prophecies of Daniel, and the Apocalypse of St. John," printed in London, in 1733, he says:—

"These prophecies of Daniel and John should not be understood till the time of the end; . . . but in the very end, the prophecy should be so far interpreted as to convince many. Then, saith Daniel, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." . . . And therefore it makes for the credit of the prophecy, that it is not yet [in 1733] understood. But if the last age, the age of opening these things, be now approaching, as . . . it seems to be, we have more encouragement than ever to look into these things. If the general preaching of the gospel be approaching, it is to us and our posterity that those words mainly belong. In the time of the end "the wise shall understand." . . .

The folly of interpreters has been, to foretell times and things by this prophecy, as if God designed to make them prophets. By this rashness they have not only exposed themselves, but brought the prophecy also into contempt."—"Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel," pp. 150—1.

"THE HERALD OF THE BRIDEGROOM."—This is a new paper, the first number of which we have just received. It is published in Newark, N. J., and is largely supported, we learn, by the liberality of Bro. A. Flavel. It is edited by Bro. S. S. Brewer, and devoted mainly to the evidence that the Lord will come in 1867. It is to be published semi-monthly. Price $1.25 for twenty-six numbers. It is proposed to sustain it mostly by voluntary contributions.

We think there is no danger of awakening too much interest on the subject of the Lord's coming. The great event is just at hand. It is time all were more awake upon the subject.

HOW TO COOK.

"The Hygienic Cook Book, or How to cook without the use of salt, butter, lard, or condiments. By Mrs. Mary E. Cox, M. D., Chester, N. H.

"The Hygienic Cook Book" we consider an excellent work, and ought to be in every family. It gives a great variety of receipts for making healthy bread and cake,—the best ways yet known to health reformers. Send and get one of the books. Price 20 cents, postage paid.

DIFFERENT SPIRITS.

From two letters received in one day last week:—

One from Maine.

"I see that you withhold publishing what I have written, and I want to know for what reason. I know it was not written in very good style, and if I cannot have the privilege of publishing my communications in our paper, I do not want it any longer."

Another from Washington, D. C.

"Please consult the glory of God in the publication or withholding of this, and use your own judgment whether it will be most to his glory to publish it or not; and be assured that, decide as you may, the writer will be satisfied. I know it is full of faults."

☞ Be sure that you do not search for faults in others more than you do in yourself, for one should know his weak points in order to grow strong.

For the Dorcas Mission Sunday School.

This is an Advent Mission Sunday School among the poor colored people of Philadelphia. It numbers already more than one hundred boys and girls, and is rapidly increasing. They want a hundred copies of the Young Pilgrim, and are not able to pay the $35.00 a year for them. They call upon the benevolent for help. Who will give it?

WORDS AND THOUGHTS IN THE OFFICE.

We hope every reader will remember that it is no pleasant position to pore over some letters that come on business to the office; to have one's patience taxed to a very large extent, and also to cause the Publication Society to pay for half an hour's time lost in almost a fruitless effort to find out where such a letter came from, or where the person now takes his paper; or if he gives the town, he does not the State; perhaps neither. Or he may go into some other town, and write from there that he wants his paper changed, but does not say where he now takes it.

Here is an incident a day since. A line from A. R. to be credited for $2.50 Now he had only given the town he was in; he did not state that he took the paper in that town. Well, we looked through the large book of twelve hundred pages. Found no town that had such a name to it, and, to be sure, we looked again; and the fact that he wanted to be credited, showed he was not a new subscriber. Well, he must be on the books somewhere. We had in our mind to say a good many things about him. The Lord gave us grace enough to bear such a tax on our patience, and so from one to another we went, and learned that he formerly took the paper in one town, then he had ordered it to another town, and went into still another town, where he dated his letter, but no State.

"THE YOUNG PILGRIM."

A WORD TO ITS FRIENDS.

To you who, in the Pilgrim's infancy, labored so nobly and so successfully to extend its circulation and enlarge its usefulness,—to you we appeal in its behalf now.

It was by your efforts, with God's help, that its subscription list ran up to six thousand, in the six months while it was under our charge before, and to seven thousand at the close of its first year. Such was the interest then felt, and so encouraging was the prospect, that a large and continued increase was expected in the year following. Our expectations were disappointed. Instead of an increase, its second year showed a falling off of some four thousand subscribers.

This was to be lamented; and must now, if possible, be remedied. To bring it back to its former circulation and usefulness, ought to be the effort of every friend of the young, and every lover of the truth.

The paper is needed; and we cannot afford to do without it. If every other denomination, even those who are less numerous and less able than we are, can support a Sunday School paper for the special instruction of their young in the principles of the gospel and the doctrines of their faith, why should not we? And if they, who differ from one another so little, need each a paper of their own, surely we, who, in many things, differ so widely from them all, need one of our own much more,—to guard our youth from error, and to establish them in the truth.

God has a mission for the Young Pilgrim to fulfill, equally with our other periodicals; and, until that mission is completed, no one, surely, can wish to see the Pilgrim die. It must not die. It must live, and prosper, and do good, until our Master comes to take us and our children home.

As the editorial charge of the paper has been placed again in our hands, we shall do what we can, with our limited opportunity, to make it acceptable and useful, and to answer the ends for which it was started,—to instruct our children in the principles of the gospel, and fit them for the kingdom of heaven. For the rest, we shall trust to receive the hearty co-operation of every friend of the young, and the aid and favor of the same kind Helper, who so abundantly blessed us in the beginning.

Will you, dear reader, do your part in this good work? And, by soliciting subscribers, by writing for it, and praying for it, will you do what you can to bring it back to its former circulation and usefulness, and even to a larger? Will you hunt up those who have parted company with it, and persuade them to take it again. Every effort made in this direction will be in obedience to the command of Him who said,—"Feed my lambs!"—and will, no doubt, receive its reward.

Between now and the new year will be a good time to get subscribers and form clubs. Who will engage in the work? A few words and deeds from all who are interested in this matter will be gladly received.

W. B. H.

Write for the Young Pilgrim.

We want more original matter for our little paper. Who will furnish it? Come, brethren and sisters,—yes, and the younger pilgrims, too,—take up your pens, and see what you can do, from month to month, to help make it a LIVE paper, and a good one,—just what the young folks need, and just what they will like.

Send on your stories, facts, sketches, anecdotes, letters, poetry, puzzles, Scripture questions and illustrations, Sunday school intelligence, and so forth. Interesting, stirring and instructive articles, suitable for young readers, short, pointed and practical, breathing the spirit of Christ, and illustrating truth and duty, will be always acceptable.

Feed the lambs, brethren, and a crown of glory will be yours, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

UNION.

The monthly Union meetings in New York are increasing in interest. The number at the October meeting was the largest of any yet held. The spirit of the meeting was most excellent, and the paramount object of all is the great and glorious truth of the near approach of the heavenly Bridegroom. It calls out the old friends of the Advent. There were some at the last meeting whom I had not seen for twenty years. I am fully convinced that our bond of union is the doctrine of the Lord's coming. It was this that made us a separate people; it is this alone that can keep us one. Other doctrines have and will come up; what else can we expect, when we call to mind the fact that thousands all over the land are studying and searching the Scriptures daily? (This fact presents to the world a most interesting phenomenon.) And still further; not studying them in the light of commentaries, and men's expositions, nor in the light of the mongrel theology of the past fifteen hundred years; but, bless the Lord, in their own light. "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path."—Ps. 119: 105. "The holy Scriptures . . . are able to make" us "wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. 3: 15.

And now comes an objection;—"If the word of God is a fountain of light, why the disagreement between those who make it their exclusive text book?" I answer, because we have been educated in the different systems of theology, and it is difficult to overcome and rid ourselves of the errors of those systems. Another reason is, many apprehend truth easier than others, and consequently keep in the advance. But perhaps the greater reason is, the imperfection of our present attainments in the knowledge of God and his word. Let us then study, and watch, and pray, and any sentiment advocated by any one, that seems to be erroneous, let us not immediately, before we have tested it, anathematise both it and its author; but bring it to the infallible record; compare it prayerfully, kindly, believingly; and if in the wisdom of the multitude of counsellors (Prov. 11: 14) it is decided to be erroneous, then our course is plain,—James 5: 19, 20, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

BURIED LOVE.

"Tommy," "Hi," "Gracie,"—gone, all gone to the grave! O ye beautiful of earth, how ye do come to us and win our hearts, but to leave them all broken and yearning at your tombs! Alas! thus it has ever been since "lost Eden," and thus it will be till our Lord and Life comes again. Only three short moons ago, there gathered around the board and altar at my brother's house, in Adams Centre, N. Y., three little prattling, loving, innocent hearts, whose child voices and pattering feet, with their blue eyes and ringleted heads, early taught to bow in prayer, constituted a fond mother's pride, and a father's joy. Very dear and beautiful were they—all who knew them loved them, all who named them, praised. The "enemy" became envious of so glad and joyous a circle, and hurled at each fair head one of his deadliest shafts, diphtheria, and then one after another of these laughing children "bowed to the destroyer," and to-day, "embalmed in memory and bedewed with many tears," lie side by side, white and still, low in the village graveyard. Not a murmur escaped them. Each child had been given to God, and though but of three, five and eight summers in age, each prayed while there was power to speak and say, "Our Father." Gently, and with an unswerving confidence that Jesus would raise him from the grave at his own near coming, did little "Tommy" sink to his last sleep. And never shall I forget when, standing over little pet "Gracie," I closed her beautiful eyes, never to open on earth again, how my brother, calm and yet tearful, folded the little one's cold hands in the attitude of supplication, and turning her face upward toward heaven, exclaimed, "Go to sleep, darling; it is all over now; go to sleep till Jesus comes;" and thus the dead child, as if in agonizing prayer, lay mutely, and yet eloquently, imploring its Maker to bring the day of resurrection.

My dear brother and his companion bear this great loss as only christians can. They have buried their last child, but God is with them. Very wonderfully does their "good hope" bear them up, as the dark shadows fall over their home. Be brave, brother and sister, for the parting is brief, and soon, very soon, "thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." There are fewer ties to bind you here,—three strong and added cords to draw you towards the deathless land. There is less of parental responsibility,—more time and opportunity left for Christ and his cause. In the coming morning, that voice that thrilled all souls will once more be heard, sweetly as of yore, saying, "Suffer little children to come unto ME," and they will come. Amen.

And so I come to the sad record:—

Thomas W. Taylor, born July 9th, 1857; died Oct. 15th, 1865.

Hiram P. Taylor, born April 7th, 1860; died July 24th, 1865.

Grace C. J. Taylor, born Marth 4th, 1862; died Oct. 17th, 1865.

Only children of Elder Charles O. and Matilda W. Taylor, of Adams Centre, N. Y. Given to death, but given to God first. Oh, you that have children, do you feel the solemn responsibility of your charge? Do you consecrate them to God in prayer? Do you strive to make them beautiful, good and beloved? Do you lead them in paths of virtue? Do you teach them to pray? Do you do all your duty to them for eternity? Will they rise up in the glad morning and call you blessed? Could you bury them like a christian? Have you a well grounded faith and hope that in that awful day God will say to you and yours, as he said to Noah in the great day of the flood, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee have I seen righteous before me." O beware, lest by your bad example and neglect you train your children for eternal death.

THE ADVENT CHRIS. STATE CONFERENCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The twelvth session of the Advent Christian State Conference of N. H. was held at Lake Village, Oct. 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th, 1865, agreeably to the call of the official board.

The first business session of the conference was held on Friday, commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. After the meeting was called to order by the President, Eld. Albion Ross, Exeter, N. H., and prayer by Eld. J. Harvey, it was moved and carried, that the Secretary read the minutes of the last annual session, which was held at Alton Bay, N. H.

On motion, the minutes were accepted. The following resolution was then offered by Eld. J. Knowles: Resolved, That the term constitution be erased from the minutes of the last annual session, and the word resolutions be placed in its stead. After some discussion, in which Elds. Harvey, Knowles, Couch, Piper, and the Secretary, participated, it was passed. Members who were present at this hour were as follows: A. Ross, J. Couch, J. Knowles, T. W. Piper, A. Bean, J. Harvey, D. F. Leavitt, S. S. Moony, and A. W. Sibley.

On motion, the vote passed at the last annual session, relative to those who wish to become members of the New Hampshire State Conference, that they shall suggest, or have their names suggested to the ministerial committee, and they present their names to the conference, was rescinded. Adjourned till after the P. M. service.

Met as adjourned, the President in the chair. After devotional exercises, it was moved and carried, that we proceed immediately to the election of officers; whereupon, by vote, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Eld. J. Knowles, President; Eld. T. W. Piper, Vice President; Eld. A. W. Sibley, Secretary; Eld. J. Couch, Treasurer.

Voted, That the visiting Brn. present take a seat with us and participate in our deliberations. On motion, the Chair appointed Elds. J. Couch, J. Harvey, D. F. Leavitt, as committee to prepare business to come before the meeting. It was moved and carried, that Eld. J. A. Cleaveland, pastor of the church in Whitefield, N. H., become a member of the conference. Adjourned till 9 o'clock Saturday A. M.

Met as adjourned. Bro. Knowles in the chair. Prayer by Bro. J. A. Cleaveland. It was moved and carried, that Eld. Wm. Sutherland, Newport, N. H., become a member of this conference. The committee on business then reported the following resolutions, and order of business to be acted upon:

1st. Resolved, That we make a missionary effort in the State of N. H. the ensuing year, by holding twelve or more protracted meetings, in different parts of the State; said meetings to be appointed and superintended by a committee of three, appointed by the conference, whose duty it shall be to attend said meetings themselves, or appoint and employ other brethren to do the same.

2nd. Resolved, That this conference be responsible for the support of the above laborers, where they fail to receive enough from the churches and places where such meetings are held.

3rd. The election of the ministerial committee.

4th. The election of a quarterly conference committee.

5th. The election of a tract committee.

6th. The election of a protracted meeting committee.

7th. The report of the ministers present.

The report of the committee on business was adopted. By vote, the following committees were chosen for the year ensuing:—For ministerial committee, Elds. J. Couch, J. Morrill, Wm. Sutherland, and J. A Cleaveland. For quarterly conference committee, Elds. A. Ross, J. Knowles, and A. W. Sibley. For tract committee, Elds. J. W. White, J. G. Smith, and T. W. Piper. For protracted meeting committee, Elds. J. Couch, J. G. Smith, and Wm. Sutherland. The following resolution was then presented by the Secretary:—

Resolved, That the committee on protracted meetings be requested to make a report of their financial condition, in holding said meetings,

REPORT OF THE MAINE SEC. ADV. MINISTERIAL CONFERENCE.

Met at North Parish meeting-house, Augusta, Me., at 1 o'clock P. M., Oct. 26th, 1865. S. K. Partridge was chosen President. Adjourned to 9 A. M. Friday. Met Friday according to adjournment. C. H. Leverton was chosen Secretary. The report of the last meeting was called for, and read. Moved, that a committee of three be appointed to take the supervision of the meeting, present business, etc. Carried. Brn. Wellcome, Carr and Damman were appointed.

The committee reported as follows: 1. That we hear the report of the committee on the Constitution. 2. That we have two sessions each day—one at 9 A. M., the other at 1 P. M. Preaching at 7 P. M. Adopted. Adjourned at 12 M. to 1 P. M. The Constitution was adopted with amendments.

CONSTITUTION.

ART. 1. This conference shall be called The Maine Second Advent Ministerial Conference.

ART. 2. The officers of this conference shall be, a President, Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer, and a committee of three to be an Executive Board, and shall be chosen annually.

ART. 3. The regular meetings shall be held annually, on the second Tuesday in January.

ART. 4. The Executive Board shall call an extra session of the conference, at such time and place as they judge best for its welfare; always previously giving six weeks notice.

ART. 5. The objects of this conference shall be to obtain thorough investigation and knowledge of the Scriptures, by united examination; a greater unity in the faith, in purity and in doctrine among the ministry; the promotion of gospel order and discipline among ourselves and the churches; christian union and effort to build up the believers in Christ in the doctrine of the New Covenant, and in the knowledge of all Bible truth, especially the proclamation of the immediate personal advent of Christ to restore all things. Also, to bring sinners to Christ for pardon and salvation in the kingdom of God, by harmony of action in preaching; to encourage all whom we believe divinely impressed to preach the word, to move forward in the work of God; and to circulate such publications as we believe the best adapted for these ends.

ART. 6. The members of this conference shall consist of all such ordained ministers as wish to unite in the above objects, and who are not objected to by any of its members.

ART. 7. No person called a preacher shall be received into this conference, unless in the judgment of all its members present such person has natural qualifications to teach, grace enough to be taught, and a call from God to preach, though he be a christian.

ART. 8. All complaints against the character or conduct of any member, to receive attention, must be put in writing, accompanied by the name of the complainant, and then presented to the Secretary, who shall lay it before the Executive Board at once; who [if satisfied there is need of discipline for moral delinquency] may notify the accused to refrain from preaching, and the public from giving him countenance, until the next session of the conference, when proper investigation of the case shall be had.

ART. 9. No person ordained by members of this conference shall be thus recognized, unless their character and qualifications agree with article seven.

ART. 10. All members of this conference shall report at each session, either personally or by letter, to the Secretary.

Moved, That we now proceed to elect officers. Carried. Moved, That the President and Secretary now officiating stand for the ensuing year. Carried. Moved, That Wm. H. Mitchell be Vice President. Carried. Moved, That I. C. Wellcome be Treasurer. Carried. Moved, That Wm. H. Mitchell, R. R. York, and S. K. Partridge be the Executive Board. Carried. Moved, That we now hear the report of the Agent of the Tract Society. Carried.

Bro. I. C. Wellcome then read the report.

Total receipts.	$203.03
Total disbursements. . . .	$164.79
Balance in treasury.	$38.24

The report was accepted.

Moved. That the Conference be constituted a Tract Society. Carried. Adjourned to 9 A. M., Saturday. Met Saturday, at 9 A. M. Opened as usual by prayer. Moved, That I. C. Wellcome be agent of the Tract Society. Carried. Moved, That we raise $200.00 for the Tract Fund. Carried. Moved, That the Executive Board, with the agent, be the Board of Managers for the selection and distribution of books and tracts. Carried. Bro. L. L. Howard then moved that the following resolutions [passed at our last session] be rescinded.

1. Resolved, That we believe that the doctrine of the Seventh-day Sabbath, as interpreted in the publications emanating from Battle Creek, and the theory of the non-revival of the wicked dead, from elsewhere, are contrary to the teachings of the New Covenant; and their promulgation is subversive of the christian faith, and tends to distraction. We therefore exhort all our brethren not to encourage their circulation.

2. Resolved, That the law of faith by which man is justified, or condemned, is the doctrine of Christ, as brought to view in Rom. 10: 5–11, and John 3: 18; which law is established by the death and resurrection of Christ.

The yeas and nays being called, the vote stood as follows: yeas,—L. L. Howard, Isaac Wight, D. M. Hanscomb. Nays,—J. Carr, H. D. Reed, I. C. Wellcome, I. Damman, C. H. Leverton; these being all the members beside the Chair present. The vote to rescind was lost.

Met at one. The following was then presented:—

Resolved, That we, as ministers of Christ composing this conference, will avoid all vain expressions, and, also, all unchristian personal allusions, in public or private. Carried.

Brn. Wight, Hanscomb and Howard now requested to be dismissed. Previous to this, Bro. Howard, conceiving that his presence in the conference was objectionable, made a motion that he should be turned out, without one vote in favor. It was now Moved, That Brn. I. Wight, L. L. Howard, and D. M. Hanscomb, at their request, be dismissed. Carried. Moved, That a report of this session be sent to the "World's Crisis" and "Advent Herald" for publication. Carried. Adjourned sine die.

During the session there was preaching each evening, and on Sunday, with good interest. We think the meeting was a benefit to the people.

S. K. PARTRIDGE, President.
C. H. LEVERTON, Secretary.

The World's Crisis
AND SECOND ADVENT MESSENGER.
Boston, Tuesday, Nov. 14, 1865.

☞ TAKE NOTICE.

All subscriptions for the Crisis are payable in advance, at the rate of $2.50 a year; but if delayed six months beyond the time of payment, the price is $3,00 a year. Thus 50 cents a year is saved by paying in advance.

BE PATIENT.

Some of our readers will need a little patience to bear with our delays in business matters. One of our clerks, Bro. E. P. Woodward, has been sick for some weeks, and as the result, orders for tracts, books, and changes in the direction of papers, have not been attended to as promptly as we could wish; but we have endeavored to do the best we could under the circumstances. Bro. W. is now better, and expects to be in the office again this week, after which, we hope all will be right.

TRACTS.—We are out of some kinds of tracts, and consequently have not been able to fill all orders. We hope to have a supply soon. Sickness has been the cause of the delay.

OUR VISIT TO PHILADELPHIA.

Our late visit to the city of "Brotherly Love" was one of much interest and profit to us, on account of the delightful interviews enjoyed with the dear children of the Lord, who are looking for his speedy return. We found some in different churches, who appear to be wholly consecrated to Christ, and are anxiously waiting his appearing, and expecting him within a very brief period. We have never met persons to whom the second coming of our Savior seemed to be more of a reality, than to these humble souls. They show their faith by their works. It is no matter of speculation with them. They feel as confident as did Simeon about the first advent; and as sure they shall live to see him come, as he did that he should not die till he had seen the babe of Bethlehem. We have never seen before so much intelligence and devotion combined. It was truly a feast to our soul, for which we have great reason to thank the Lord.

While in Philadelphia we had pleasant interviews with Bro. F. H. Burbank, who is doing a good work among the colored people and poor whites. The Lord is blessing his faithful labors, in company with others who are aiding him. Those who have any thing to spare for the poor will put it to a good use if they send it to the "Dorcas Mission." [See notice on second page.] Brn. Himes and Hastings made a short visit to the city on their way to other fields of labor. They [illegible] interesting meetings in places where they have recently been.

Our last day in the city, Oct. 29th, was one of much interest. Our meetings were held in Concert Hall, on Chestnut St., where the Spiritualists held their National Convention. It is said to be the nicest hall in the city, and to hold some three thousand people. The usual price for the hall is $50 a day.

On the same platform where the Spiritualists formed their National Organization, we gave three discourses to large audiences, on the subject of Spiritualism; showing the cause of the various phenomena attributed to the spirits of our friends,—that they proceed from demons, and not from human spirits. We next examined the morals and doctrines of Spiritualism, and found the tendency of the former directly the opposite of christianity; and the latter all opposed to the Bible. In the evening we spoke on "the future of Spiritualism," in its political aspect. Several asked questions during the day and evening. The truth did not suffer in consequence of criticism. Several prominent Spiritualists were present to hear what we had to say. During the intermission at noon, we had a pleasant interview with one who has spent some ten thousand dollars in experimenting in Spiritualism. He has invented different machines to aid the spirits in making communications. He has just completed an instrument which surpasses all others, and he says the spirits are delighted with it, because they can communicate through it so rapidly. He took us to his rooms and showed us his various inventions. He is very ardently engaged in his investigations of the various phenomena of Spiritualism. But after listening to his statements for sometime, we felt it duty to point him to the Scriptures of truth on the subject, and show him that if he followed on, it would be as it had been, a continual promise of something he would not obtain; and at last he would only find himself among those who are "ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth."—2 Tim. 3: 7. We exhorted him to leave the ignis-fatuus he was then pursuing, and take the Bible for his guide, and he would be led aright. He is a man of wealth and influence, and very zealously engaged in the cause of Spiritualism. We think we never saw one more in earnest. The spirits keep making him large promises, and are giving him many interesting and encouraging prophecies of what they will soon accomplish.

This is truly an age of wonders—"lying wonders," with which, if it were possible, they would deceive the very elect.

CORRECTION.—In an editorial, in the last Crisis, (Nov. 7th), concerning a "free paper," we are made to say the opposite of what we meant, as follows:—"Neither do we know of an editor who inserts articles that he does not indorse himself." It should read; "Neither do we know of an editor who does not insert articles that he does not indorse himself."

DISCUSSION IN PHILADELPHIA.

Our discussion in Philadelphia with Mr. J. G. Fish, of Hammonton, N. J., was one of considerable interest, and did much to advance the cause of truth. The discussion was in Sansom street hall, commencing Monday evening, Oct. 23d, and was continued every evening during the week. We discussed the following question:—

Resolved, That man has a spirit which exists after the death of the body, in a conscious state, and communicates to the inhabitants of earth."

Mr. Fish, who was formerly a Baptist preacher, is now one of the boldest and ablest defenders of Spiritualism. He does not hesitate to make earnest efforts to overthrow the Bible and to denounce the God of the Bible. During his remarks the first evening, he said: "I am going to impeach the Bible;—it shall be impeached." But when he brought forward his witnesses, for the purpose of impeaching the Bible, they were all proved to be lying witnesses; hence the Bible was acquitted, while they were condemned by their own contradictions, and hypocritical lies.

He made a great effort to prove that Moses' writings were copied from the Zend-Avesta* of Zoroaster, and read what was claimed to have been taken by Moses from the Avesta. At the close of the discussion on Thursday evening, after our opponent had been quoting, as it was claimed, from the Zend-Avesta, what he asserted was written three hundred years before the days of Moses, giving a strange account of the origin of man and other things; a stranger to us, who had been attending the discussion, came and said, that he was pained to hear the Avesta so misrepresented, and inquired why we did not correct our opponent? We replied, that we had not the Zend-Avesta, so that we could do it. He replied that he knew of a copy to which he could get access, and if we would call the next day at his office, he would have it there for our inspection. Of course the opportunity was improved, and the book carefully examined; when it was found that no such things were in the book as had been given to the audience by my opponent during the debate, which had been given as extracts from the Avesta. On Friday evening Mr. Fish brought up the subject again, asserting that the Zend-Avesta of Zoroaster was three hundred years older than the books of Moses; and that Moses made up his writings in part from the Zend-Avesta. He had been reading extracts from a book, which, from the way he spoke, we had supposed was the Zend-Avesta, till after our examination of the real work, which is very scarce. The copy loaned to us was the only one we ever saw. It has not been translated into English but a short time.

After hearing the statement of our opponent, in our reply, we said, here is a copy of the real Zend-Avesta; and remarked further, that we did not know what book our opponent had been reading, but would like to have him tell the audience, for we mistrusted it was one got up by the spirits and their followers, and was not very reliable, as we could not find a sentence in the Zend-Avesta, which had been quoted by our opponent as coming from Zoroaster. Mr. Fish did not see fit to inform the people anything about the book from which he read, so that we are still ignorant of its authorship.

After stating to the audience that there were no such things in the Zend-Avesta as had been represented by our opponent, he said if we would let him take the book, he would read from it and prove his position; so we very gladly passed the book to him; but after examining it for some time, he did not find one word to read to the audience; hence we concluded that he was obliged to admit that what his book had said was not true. We do not charge Mr. Fish with wilfull misrepresentation; but the author of his book was the one who led him astray.

We then showed that, according to the best authority, Zoroaster, the author of the Zend-Avesta, wrote about one thousand years after Moses; hence Moses could not copy from Zoroaster's writings as my opponent had claimed; and whatever might be found in the Zend-Avesta that resembled the writings of Moses, Zoroaster was the one who copied, and not the Jewish writer.

In the English Encyclopedia, Vol. VII. p. 1038, we found the following:—"The modern Parsees assign to their prophet [Zoroaster] the date of 550 B. C." The Parsees were the priests of the Persian religion, and would be most likely to know better about the time when the founder of their religion lived than any one else. It is understood that the priests of any religion are better prepared to give information relative to their religious matters than any outsiders.

Beeton says:—"Zoroaster . . . is supposed to have lived in the reign of Darius Hystaspes."—Beeton's Dictionary of Universal Information, p. 1407. When Cyrus, king of Persia, had reigned seven years, after the conquest of Babylon, his son Cambyses reigned seven years and five months, then Smerdis, the Magian, reigned seven months, and was followed by Darius Hystaspes. Cyrus began his sole reign, as may be most clearly shown, B. C. 488. Cambyses reigned jointly with Cyrus about four years, leaving three for his sole reign; so that Darius Hystaspes did not begin to reign earlier than B. C. 477, which was over ten hundred years after Moses wrote. These facts served to open the eyes of some and remove the fog and dust that had been thrown around them by statements not resting on facts.

In the course of the debate, our opponent said:—"Man is panting for immortality." We inquired how a man could pant after a thing already in his possession? We then showed that the Bible nowhere teaches that man is immortal in this state of existence, but is to seek for it "by patient continuance in well-doing."—Rom. 2: 7.

When referring to the resurrection of our Savior, our opponent said he was not raised, but his body was embalmed by Joseph, and stolen away by the apostles. But while holding to such unscriptural doctrines as these, it is claimed that Spiritualism is ancient christianity revived; whereas, the facts in the case show that they have nothing in common. Spiritualism is wholly anti-christian, opposed to God and the Bible.

Our opponent further stated that the Bible was a "mass of fables." He admitted that Spiritualism and heathenism were alike. He stated that the God of the Bible was a human spirit, or a demon, and "ought to have repented of his sins long ago." He said, "I would that Spiritualism prevailed now instead of christianity." Such is the teaching of the spirits, and their followers. Is not this anti-christ?

We think the discussion resulted in much good to many by opening their eyes to see the character of Spiritualism as they had never seen it before. But few were aware how deeply it is riveted in error, infidelity and sensualism. To them it had looked "like a lamb," but they now see that it speaks "as a dragon," and is the great enemy of Christ and his religion, "speaking lies in hypocrisy."

Our audiences were large, intelligent, and attentive. The truth found some warm friends who were well satisfied with the results of the discussion.

* ZEND-AVESTA is from Zend and Avesta. Zend properly signifies the translation of the Avesta, or the scriptures of Zoroaster into the Huzvaresh or Pehlevi language, an ancient Persian dialect, in which the Avesta is written. The Avesta is the text itself. The Zend is the interpretation, or commentary on the Avesta.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.

We think all must admire the spirit of the following, which was appended to one of the articles in this paper:

"When you receive any of my poetical effusions (if poetry it may be called,) I do not wish you to publish them unless you deem them worthy, and leave it wholly with you to decide; as I wish 'our paper' to continue to be the best in the world."

If all writers felt thus, an editor's troubles and burdens would be greatly relieved. And we are glad to say that we are often cheered in our labors by expressions like the foregoing. It is just such a spirit as we suppose all christians feel. The Spirit of Christ never leads us to seek honor, or a high position in the sight of men, or to be offended if we are not put as high as some one else. It is the "old man that clamors for the honors of this world, while "the new man" is led to "condescend to men of low estate," "in honor preferring one another." Humility never murmurs because it is put in a low condition; while pride would be very uneasy and fretful if not honored. The Lord gives grace to the humble.

THE REVELATION.

[illegible] Isaac Newton's Observations upon the prophecies of Daniel, and the Apocalypse of St. John," printed in London, in 1733, he says:—

"These prophecies of Daniel and John should not be understood till the time of the end; . . . but in the very end, the prophecy should be so far interpreted as to convince many. Then, saith Daniel, "Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." . . . And therefore it makes for the credit of the prophecy, that it is not yet [in 1733] understood. But if the last age, the age of opening these things, be now approaching, as . . . it seems to be, we have more encouragement than ever to look into these things. If the general preaching of the gospel be approaching, it is to us and our posterity that those words mainly belong. In the time of the end "the wise shall understand." . . .

The folly of interpreters has been, to foretell times and things by this prophecy, as if God designed to make them prophets. By this rashness they have not only exposed themselves, but brought the prophecy also into contempt."—"Sir Isaac Newton on Daniel," pp. 150—1.

"THE HERALD OF THE BRIDEGROOM."—This is a new paper, the first number of which we have just received. It is published in Newark, N. J., and is largely supported, we learn, by the liberality of Bro. A. Flavel. It is edited by Bro. S. S. Brewer, and devoted mainly to the evidence that the Lord will come in 1867. It is to be published semi-monthly. Price $1.25 for twenty-six numbers. It is proposed to sustain it mostly by voluntary contributions.

We think there is no danger of awakening too much interest on the subject of the Lord's coming. The great event is just at hand. It is time all were more awake upon the subject.

HOW TO COOK.

"The Hygienic Cook Book, or How to cook without the use of salt, butter, lard, or condiments. By Mrs. Mary E. Cox, M. D., Chester, N. H.

"The Hygienic Cook Book" we consider an excellent work, and ought to be in every family. It gives a great variety of receipts for making healthy bread and cake,—the best ways yet known to health reformers. Send and get one of the books. Price 20 cents, postage paid.

DIFFERENT SPIRITS.

From two letters received in one day last week:—

One from Maine.

"I see that you withhold publishing what I have written, and I want to know for what reason. I know it was not written in very good style, and if I cannot have the privilege of publishing my communications in our paper, I do not want it any longer."

Another from Washington, D. C.

"Please consult the glory of God in the publication or withholding of this, and use your own judgment whether it will be most to his glory to publish it or not; and be assured that, decide as you may, the writer will be satisfied. I know it is full of faults."

☞ Be sure that you do not search for faults in others more than you do in yourself, for one should know his weak points in order to grow strong.

WORDS AND THOUGHTS IN THE OFFICE.

We hope every reader will remember that it is no pleasant position to pore over some letters that come on business to the office; to have one's patience taxed to a very large extent, and also to cause the Publication Society to pay for half an hour's time lost in almost a fruitless effort to find out where such a letter came from, or where the person now takes his paper; or if he gives the town, he does not the State; perhaps neither. Or he may go into some other town, and write from there that he wants his paper changed, but does not say where he now takes it.

Here is an incident a day since. A line from A. R. to be credited for $2.50 Now he had only given the town he was in; he did not state that he took the paper in that town. Well, we looked through the large book of twelve hundred pages. Found no town that had such a name to it, and, to be sure, we looked again; and the fact that he wanted to be credited, showed he was not a new subscriber. Well, he must be on the books somewhere. We had in our mind to say a good many things about him. The Lord gave us grace enough to bear such a tax on our patience, and so from one to another we went, and learned that he formerly took the paper in one town, then he had ordered it to another town, and went into still another town, where he dated his letter, but no State.

"THE YOUNG PILGRIM."

A WORD TO ITS FRIENDS.

To you who, in the Pilgrim's infancy, labored so nobly and so successfully to extend its circulation and enlarge its usefulness,—to you we appeal in its behalf now.

It was by your efforts, with God's help, that its subscription list ran up to six thousand, in the six months while it was under our charge before, and to seven thousand at the close of its first year. Such was the interest then felt, and so encouraging was the prospect, that a large and continued increase was expected in the year following. Our expectations were disappointed. Instead of an increase, its second year showed a falling off of some four thousand subscribers.

This was to be lamented; and must now, if possible, be remedied. To bring it back to its former circulation and usefulness, ought to be the effort of every friend of the young, and every lover of the truth.

The paper is needed; and we cannot afford to do without it. If every other denomination, even those who are less numerous and less able than we are, can support a Sunday School paper for the special instruction of their young in the principles of the gospel and the doctrines of their faith, why should not we? And if they, who differ from one another so little, need each a paper of their own, surely we, who, in many things, differ so widely from them all, need one of our own much more,—to guard our youth from error, and to establish them in the truth.

God has a mission for the Young Pilgrim to fulfill, equally with our other periodicals; and, until that mission is completed, no one, surely, can wish to see the Pilgrim die. It must not die. It must live, and prosper, and do good, until our Master comes to take us and our children home.

As the editorial charge of the paper has been placed again in our hands, we shall do what we can, with our limited opportunity, to make it acceptable and useful, and to answer the ends for which it was started,—to instruct our children in the principles of the gospel, and fit them for the kingdom of heaven. For the rest, we shall trust to receive the hearty co-operation of every friend of the young, and the aid and favor of the same kind Helper, who so abundantly blessed us in the beginning.

Will you, dear reader, do your part in this good work? And, by soliciting subscribers, by writing for it, and praying for it, will you do what you can to bring it back to its former circulation and usefulness, and even to a larger? Will you hunt up those who have parted company with it, and persuade them to take it again. Every effort made in this direction will be in obedience to the command of Him who said,—"Feed my lambs!"—and will, no doubt, receive its reward.

Between now and the new year will be a good time to get subscribers and form clubs. Who will engage in the work? A few words and deeds from all who are interested in this matter will be gladly received.

W. B. H.

Write for the Young Pilgrim.

We want more original matter for our little paper. Who will furnish it? Come, brethren and sisters,—yes, and the younger pilgrims, too,—take up your pens, and see what you can do, from month to month, to help make it a LIVE paper, and a good one,—just what the young folks need, and just what they will like.

Send on your stories, facts, sketches, anecdotes, letters, poetry, puzzles, Scripture questions and illustrations, Sunday school intelligence, and so forth. Interesting, stirring and instructive articles, suitable for young readers, short, pointed and practical, breathing the spirit of Christ, and illustrating truth and duty, will be always acceptable.

Feed the lambs, brethren, and a crown of glory will be yours, when the Chief Shepherd shall appear.

UNION.

The monthly Union meetings in New York are increasing in interest. The number at the October meeting was the largest of any yet held. The spirit of the meeting was most excellent, and the paramount object of all is the great and glorious truth of the near approach of the heavenly Bridegroom. It calls out the old friends of the Advent. There were some at the last meeting whom I had not seen for twenty years. I am fully convinced that our bond of union is the doctrine of the Lord's coming. It was this that made us a separate people; it is this alone that can keep us one. Other doctrines have and will come up; what else can we expect, when we call to mind the fact that thousands all over the land are studying and searching the Scriptures daily? (This fact presents to the world a most interesting phenomenon.) And still further; not studying them in the light of commentaries, and men's expositions, nor in the light of the mongrel theology of the past fifteen hundred years; but, bless the Lord, in their own light. "Thy word is a lamp to my feet, and a light to my path." –Ps. 119 · 105. "The holy Scriptures . . . are able to make" us "wise unto salvation, through faith which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. 3: 15.

And now comes an objection;—"If the word of God is a fountain of light, why the disagreement between those who make it their exclusive text book?" I answer, because we have been educated in the different systems of theology, and it is difficult to overcome and rid ourselves of the errors of those systems. Another reason is, many apprehend truth easier than others, and consequently keep in the advance. But perhaps the greater reason is, the imperfection of our present attainments in the knowledge of God and his word. Let us then study, and watch, and pray, and any sentiment advocated by any one, that seems to be erroneous, let us not immediately, before we have tested it, anathematise both it and its author; but bring it to the infallible record; compare it prayerfully, kindly, believingly; and if in the wisdom of the multitude of counsellors (Prov. 11: 14) it is decided to be erroneous, then our course is plain,—James 5: 19, 20, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

BURIED LOVE.

"Tommy," "Hi," "Gracie,"—gone, all gone to the grave! O ye beautiful of earth, how ye do come to us and win our hearts, but to leave them all broken and yearning at your tombs! Alas! thus it has ever been since "lost Eden," and thus it will be till our Lord and Life comes again. Only three short moons ago, there gathered around the board and altar at my brother's house, in Adams Centre, N. Y., three little prattling, loving, innocent hearts, whose child voices and pattering feet, with their blue eyes and ringleted heads, early taught to bow in prayer, constituted a fond mother's pride, and a father's joy. Very dear and beautiful were they—all who knew them loved them, all who named them, praised. The "enemy" became envious of so glad and joyous a circle, and hurled at each fair head one of his deadliest shafts, diphtheria, and then one after another of these laughing children "bowed to the destroyer," and to-day, "embalmed in memory and bedewed with many tears," lie side by side, white and still, low in the village graveyard. Not a murmur escaped them. Each child had been given to God, and though but of three, five and eight summers in age, each prayed while there was power to speak and say, "Our Father." Gently, and with an unswerving confidence that Jesus would raise him from the grave at his own near coming, did little "Tommy" sink to his last sleep. And never shall I forget when, standing over little pet "Gracie," I closed her beautiful eyes, never to open on earth again, how my brother, calm and yet tearful, folded the little one's cold hands in the attitude of supplication, and turning her face upward toward heaven, exclaimed, "Go to sleep, darling; it is all over now; go to sleep till Jesus comes;" and thus the dead child, as if in agonizing prayer, lay mutely, and yet eloquently, imploring its Maker to bring the day of resurrection.

My dear brother and his companion bear this great loss as only christians can. They have buried their last child, but God is with them. Very wonderfully does their "good hope" bear them up, as the dark shadows fall over their home. Be brave, brother and sister, for the parting is brief, and soon, very soon, "thy children shall come again from the land of the enemy." There are fewer ties to bind you here,—three strong and added cords to draw you towards the deathless land. There is less of parental responsibility,—more time and opportunity left for Christ and his cause. In the coming morning, that voice that thrilled all souls will once more be heard, sweetly as of yore, saying, "Suffer little children to come unto ME," and they will come. Amen.

And so I come to the sad record:—

Thomas W. Taylor, born July 9th, 1857; died Oct. 15th, 1865.

Hiram P. Taylor, born April 7th, 1860; died July 24th, 1865.

Grace C. J. Taylor, born Marth 4th, 1862; died Oct. 17th, 1865.

Only children of Elder Charles O. and Matilda W. Taylor, of Adams Centre, N. Y. Given to death, but given to God first. Oh, you that have children, do you feel the solemn responsibility of your charge? Do you consecrate them to God in prayer? Do you strive to make them beautiful, good and beloved? Do you lead them in paths of virtue? Do you teach them to pray? Do you do all your duty to them for eternity? Will they rise up in the glad morning and call you blessed? Could you bury them like a christian? Have you a well grounded faith and hope that in that awful day God will say to you and yours, as he said to Noah in the great day of the flood, "Come thou and all thy house into the ark, for thee have I seen righteous before me." O beware, lest by your bad example and neglect you train your children for eternal death.

THE ADVENT CHRIS. STATE CONFERENCE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The twelvth session of the Advent Christian State Conference of N. H. was held at Lake Village, Oct. 12th, 13th, 14th and 15th, 1865, agreeably to the call of the official board.

The first business session of the conference was held on Friday, commencing at 9 o'clock A. M. After the meeting was called to order by the President, Eld. Albion Ross, Exeter, N. H., and prayer by Eld. J. Harvey, it was moved and carried, that the Secretary read the minutes of the last annual session, which was held at Alton Bay, N. H.

On motion, the minutes were accepted. The following resolution was then offered by Eld. J. Knowles: Resolved, That the term constitution be erased from the minutes of the last annual session, and the word resolutions be placed in its stead. After some discussion, in which Elds. Harvey, Knowles, Couch, Piper, and the Secretary, participated, it was passed. Members who were present at this hour were as follows: A. Ross, J. Couch, J. Knowles, T. W. Piper, A. Bean, J. Harvey, D. F. Leavitt, S. S. Moony, and A. W. Sibley.

On motion, the vote passed at the last annual session, relative to those who wish to become members of the New Hampshire State Conference, that they shall suggest, or have their names suggested to the ministerial committee, and they present their names to the conference, was rescinded. Adjourned till after the P. M. service.

Met as adjourned, the President in the chair. After devotional exercises, it was moved and carried, that we proceed immediately to the election of officers; whereupon, by vote, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Eld. J. Knowles, President; Eld. T. W. Piper, Vice President; Eld. A. W. Sibley, Secretary; Eld. J. Couch, Treasurer.

Voted, That the visiting Brn. present take a seat with us and participate in our deliberations. On motion, the Chair appointed Elds. J. Couch, J. Harvey, D. F. Leavitt, as committee to prepare business to come before the meeting. It was moved and carried, that Eld. J. A. Cleaveland, pastor of the church in Whitefield, N. H., become a member of the conference. Adjourned till 9 o'clock Saturday A. M.

Met as adjourned. Bro. Knowles in the chair. Prayer by Bro. J. A. Cleaveland. It was moved and carried, that Eld. Wm. Sutherland, Newport, N. H., become a member of this conference. The committee on business then reported the following resolutions, and order of business to be acted upon:

1st. Resolved, That we make a missionary effort in the State of N. H. the ensuing year, by holding twelve or more protracted meetings, in different parts of the State; said meetings to be appointed and superintended by a committee of three, appointed by the conference, whose duty it shall be to attend said meetings themselves, or appoint and employ other brethren to do the same.

2nd. Resolved, That this conference be responsible for the support of the above laborers, where they fail to receive enough from the churches and places where such meetings are held.

3rd. The election of the ministerial committee.

4th. The election of a quarterly conference committee.

5th. The election of a tract committee.

6th. The election of a protracted meeting committee.

7th. The report of the ministers present.

The report of the committee on business was adopted. By vote, the following committees were chosen for the year ensuing:—For ministerial committee, Elds. J. Couch, J. Morrill, Wm. Sutherland, and J. A Cleaveland. For quarterly conference committee, Elds. A. Ross, J. Knowles, and A. W. Sibley. For tract committee, Elds. J. W. White, J. G. Smith, and T. W. Piper. For protracted meeting committee, Elds. J. Couch, J. G. Smith, and Wm. Sutherland. The following resolution was then presented by the Secretary:—

Resolved, That the committee on protracted meetings be requested to make a report of their financial condition, in holding said meetings, to the next annual conference. After considering the matter, it was carried by a full vote.

The conference listened to reports from the following brethren in the ministry:—Elds. J. Couch, T. W Piper, J. Harvey, D. F. Leavitt, Alvah Bean, and S. S. Mooney. On motion, the conference adjourned till after the P. M. service from the stand.

Met according to adjournment. The President in the chair. Prayer by Bro. A. Bean. The following Brn. then reported themselves: J. Knowles, A. W. Sibley, J. A. Cleaveland, Wm. Sutherland, and Calvin H. Fletcher. The Secretary then read a report from Bro. J. W. White, Portsmouth, N. H.; also Bro. Couch, by request, reported for Eld. T. M. Preble, East Weare, N. H. The reports were cheering as a whole, and interesting indeed. We were sorry that there were not more present to report, for they seemed the richest part of our conference.

Bro. Calvin H. Fletcher was formally received, as a member of the conference, and we were glad to welcome him to our embrace. Eld. J. Couch being chairman of a committee to superintend the tract enterprise, etc., reported the amount which he had received by contributions and other sources; which was $20.50, eighteen of which was contributed by the church and friends in Concord, N. H.

Eld. J. W. White submitted the following report, as the result of his efforts in that department, being the second on the committee of supervisors, commencing Dec. 1st, 1864, and ending Oct. 12th, 1865.

Received of the church and friends in Portsmouth, N. H., by collection,	$28.63
Received by private subscription, to Oct. 12th, 1865,	$47.00
Total amount,	$75.63

Eld. J. G. Smith being another on the committee did not forward to the conference his report, consequently, we are unable to give an accurate account of how much has been done during the past year.

The whole amount received by Brn. Couch and White is	$96.13
The sum expended for tracts, etc., is	$75.80
Leaving unexpended in the hands of the committee,	$20.33

We hope more will be done the ensuing year, by way of distributing tracts, than has been the past. Great good will result from what has been done, we verily believe.

It was moved and carried, that a vote of thanks be extended to the brethren of Lake Village, and especially to Bro. J. Knowles, for their courtesy in inviting this conference at Lake Village, and for their christian kindness and liberality manifested to us during the meeting.

The following resolution was offered by Bro. J. Couch:—Resolved, That the official board have the power to change the time of holding the next annual session of this conference. After due consideration, it was passed.

Moved, That the minutes of this conference be published in the World's Crisis. Carried. Adjourned without date.

A. W. SIBLEY, Secretary.

P. S.—There was preaching during the conference by the following brethren:—Elds. A. Ross, J. A. Cleaveland, J. Couch, A. W. Sibley, J. Harvey, Wm. Sutherland and A. Kidder. The meeting was considered by all to be one of the best ever held in the State; and some said, the best that they had ever attended. God was indeed in our midst. We are happy to say that our conferences during the year have been blessed of God. A. W. S.

REPORT OF THE R. I. AND EAST. CONN. QUAR. CONFERENCE.

Met according to notice, with the North Foster church, on Wednesday, Oct. 4th, 1865. No business on Wednesday. Preaching in the evening.

Thursday, 10 A. M. Met for business. The President in the chair. Minutes of the last conference read and adopted. The treasury remained the same as last reported. Bro. E. R. Wood reported the Exeter church by letter. He says, "The church in Exeter are struggling along. We are not in as good condition as in former days. There is not that union that there should be, in order to labor successfully for the salvation of souls."

Delegates. N. Shumway reported the Danielsonville church. It remains about the same as when last reported. D. V. Corey reported the East Killingly church in a low state. J. Eldrich reported the church at North Foster. Could not give a very favorable report. There are some faithful members. If it were not for their earnest efforts and labor, the church would go down. Preaching most of the time. L. Wade reported the condition of the Abington church. In as good condition as at any time for the past five years. We have a good house, and a good attendance upon the preaching. Sabbath school flourishing.

Brethren E. Bellows, A Durfee, D. V. Corey, J. Eldrich, M. R. Phetteplace, D. O Hopkins, H. C. Hopkins, Wm. Ingham and Peter Noka, reported their labors. Their several reports were full of interest. I forbear giving a full report of the preaching brethren, in order to give place to other matter that should be interesting to all. The usual invitation was extended to the preaching brethren to take part in our deliberations.

Moved, That we adjourn the business part of this Conference to Friday, at 9 o'clock A. M. Carried.

At two o'clock in the afternoon, met for social worship. At three, sermon by Bro. Ingham; also in the evening, by Peter Noka.

Friday, 9 A. M. Met as per adjournment. After the usual business was disposed of, the subject of the Freedmen was introduced, and Bro. E. Bellows offered the following preamble and resolution:—

Whereas, The great commission, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," is still binding upon us to carry the glad tidings to all the world for a witness, and then should the end come; therefore,

Resolved, That this conference should make an effort to raise funds to the extent of its ability to aid in the Freedmen's Mission, the object of which is to instruct them in the knowledge of the gospel of the kingdom.

Moved, That this preamble and resolution be adopted. Carried.

The question was discussed by Brethren M. R. Phetteplace, V. P. Simmons, E. Bellows, and Peter Noka. After which it was Moved, That we organize an independent Freedmen's Mission. Carried.

Moved, That we appoint a committee of three to draft a constitution, as a basis for the mission. Carried.

Moved, That A. Durfee, E. Bellows, and V. P. Simmons be that committee. Carried.

The committee offered the following constitution of the Rhode Island and Eastern Connecticut Freedmen's Mission:—

Preamble. The object of this mission shall be to raise funds to send the gospel to the Freedmen in the southern portion of the United States of America.

Article 1st. The members of the R. I. and East. Conn. conference of reformers, shall be considered members of this Mission. The meeting of which shall be called at each quarterly session of the conference.

Art. 2d. The officers of this Mission shall be the Moderator, Clerk, and Treasurer of the R. I. conference.

Art. 3d. The direct way of raising funds for the said mission shall be by taking collections in the churches once in three months, and donations from other sources may, however, be raised, which donations may be made to the treasurer or moderator of the conference, at each session of the same.

Art. 4th. The funds of this mission may be sent to the treasurer of the grand society, organized at Wilbraham, in the year 1865; or otherwise, as the mission may direct.

Art. 5th. No article of this constitution shall be altered or changed, except by vote of two thirds of the members of this mission at one of its regular meetings.

A. DURFEE,
E. BELLOWS,
V. P. SIMMONS, } Com.

Moved, That we accept the constitution as drafted by the committee. Carried.

Moved, That we adjourn this session of the conference, to meet at Danielsonville, on the first Wednesday in January next. Carried.

After the organization of the mission, and the adoption of the constitution, which is to regulate all of its future operations, the brethren pledged and paid in to the amount of $33.00. The collections for the free distribution of tracts amounted to $4.20.

Preachers present,—M. R. Phetteplace, E. Bellows, A. Durfee, H. C. Hopkins, J. Eldrich, D. O. Hopkins, Wm. Ingham, Peter Noka, and Sr. Otis.

WM. H. CHAPMAN, Clerk.

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Rockwell.

BRO. GRANT:—With a heart overflowing with grateful emotions of love and gratitude to the Lord, I feel deeply impressed to drop a few lines to you, as I am persuaded that any tokens of Zion's prosperity will ever be a source of consolation to you. You recollect that at the New Preston campmeeting, I handed you a list of appointments for insertion in the Crisis. Your compliance with my request is duly acknowledged, and as I have been in the field for some weeks, endeavoring by the help of the Lord and the prayers of the dear children to fulfill them, I think that a sketch of my progress, and the results, as far as developed, of the success of my feeble and imperfect labors (if I can communicate them so as to make them intelligible), will be gratifying to you, and I wish that it may prove a source of encouragement, to all the dear Brn. and Srs., to go forth unto Him without the camp, bearing his reproach.

From the vicinity of the Wallingford campground I went to Yalesville; held two evening meetings in that place. I think the work is steadily progressing, and I must say that the spirit of love and unity, which was so sensibly manifest at the campmeeting, seems to be the prevailing spirit of the little flock scattered abroad wherever I go. Lord, speed the gathering day.

From Yalesville went home with Bro. Dudley. He lives one and a half miles south of Wallingford Centre. Held a meeting in the evening. In the morning returned to Yalesville, with the intention to go to Cheshire to my next appointment; but it was intimated to me that my appointment was expected at Prospect, yet I was left in a state of doubt; so I concluded to go to Cheshire, and call on Bro. Durand for information. Found him not fully recovered from his sickness, which came upon him at New Preston. Asked his advice, and he said he thought I should be expected at Cheshire Street. But I requested that we should have a season of prayer for instruction; and as we rose from our knees, I asked Bro. and Sr. Durand if they had any token, and in one simultaneous voice they said, "Go to Prospect." My heart replied, Amen.

Called on Bro. Mix, but they seemed not to understand the matter, but in the morning notified, as far as convenient. Friends came in, and we were favored with a refreshing season through the day and evening. I think the cloud of mercy that passed from this place over to Wallingford is returning, and if not obstructed by pride and unbelief, that this place will soon be revived again.

Among the many good things, found Bro. and Sr. Durand at the Lord's day meeting, the first they had attended since the New Preston campmeeting. Their testimony greatly refreshed my spirit, and gave a new impulse to the cause in this place.

But now comes the triumph. There is in this place one of the Lord's little ones, who has been delivered from the slave power of cruel bondage about two and a half years, not able to read, but, I bless God, he is able to understand better than many who can read. About one year ago last August he was awakened and joyfully converted to a saving knowledge of the present truth. While in the field alone, and as every honest-hearted child should do, he wished to be baptized; but for the peculiar shade of his skin, or some other cause to me unknown, he had been held back from discharging this important duty, although he had often requested it. So we appointed a meeting especially for his accommodation. The hour was agreed upon, and although he was at work two miles and a half away, he was on hand before the hour, and with the company of our good Bro. Mix, and one or two other brethren, and our self-denying and cross-bearing Sister Chandler, after singing, reading the word, and prayer, with the candidate we entered the water, pronounced the impressive words connected with the solemn ordinance, and buried our brother in the likeness of death.

To me, and our dear brother, who had so nobly borne his cross, it was a moment of solemn, triumphant joy, as also to those of the brethren and sisters present. For as our brother rose from beneath the water, as the cry of the new-born infant is the first cheering token of life, so the clear outgushings of loud Alleluias rolled up to the throne of God in long-continued strains, peculiar to the colored race only, filling the hearts of all with joy and gladness. Glory to God! it was not only a day of triumph, but of removing of burthens, and renewing of strength, as many can testify. Praise the Lord! The church in this place seems to be thirsting for the living God, as the hart panteth for the water brooks.

And now, kind Father, send a refreshing shower of thy grace upon them and me. O! may our feeble hands be made strong in the Lord and in the power of his might. O! direct our hands this night, that like Samson we may take hold of the strong pillars on which the temple of darkness rests, and by one united bowing of ourselves before the Lord, be in thy strength enabled to prevail. O that sinners may be awakened, and converted to God! H. ROCKWELL.

Prospect, Ct.

From Sr. A. E. Smith.

BRO. GRANT:—With your permission, I would like to ask a few questions through the Crisis. One is this; are there any among the Advent people who can give me some legal advice, either through the Crisis, or by writing to my address? The point is in reference to our business and financial affairs at the Hackensack church. Is possession nine points of the law? In the first place, Mr. L. promised to give us the lot of ground for one dollar, to make the deed good; and also a hundred dollars. Now he refuses to do it, and wishes us to leave the premises, and has rented the upper part of the church. We have a bill against him for labor, which we need to pay the men, if we do not get the property. We have a bill for the bricks that the church stands on, which were presented to us. The moving of the house, the plastering, the pulpit, and part of the painting, were given to us, which he cannot pay for, because it is ours, and our eight months' collections, which he has confessed are $75,—the whole amount is $248.

What I wish to know is this; can he put us out till he pays over to the church this amount? Again, will not the law hold him fast to his first promise, which was in the presence of eight or nine different witnesses,—some white and some colored men? As I have none of Cæsar's money to spend for advice, I thought this would be a good way to ascertain the facts. My poor colored children are frightened all the time, for fear they will be turned out of the church I have to stand at the head of this affair, to protect these poor black people, and I would like some advice how to act. I find the tide is turning, and many of the white people are coming on our side, and say they will assist me in the Sabbath school, and will follow this meeting, no matter where I take it; and they will help me. But the question is, what shall I do? Everybody is full of law, and say you ought to do this and that, because he has said so many hard things about you; but I don't wish to do any thing but to take care of my children in the Lord. Shall I hear soon from some one?

Another question to carpenters and builders that read the Crisis. How much will it cost to put up a church twenty-five feet wide, forty-five long, putting the boards up and down, the height to be the length of the boards; four square windows, not round tops, two doors in front, aisles each side, none in the centre, pulpit, and benches with backs,—old fashion; shutters or blinds to the windows, and roof on, no paint, no plastering, for the winter?

And again, what will the same church cost finished, with plastering and painting? All the materials can be obtained within half a mile of the premises. I wish to make a contract to build the church as soon as possible. One contractor raised his price six hundred dollars from Saturday till the next Wednesday. He thought he could put up the shell for nine hundred dollars. But after he saw Mr. L., he said it would cost me $1500. According to that, he would make the church cost $2500, which I think can be done for $1800. Now I am standing still, to see what the Lord will do for me and my children. Shall I hear soon from my brother carpenters? Send me two estimates.

ANNA E. SMITH, No. 128 East 27th Street, New York City.

P. S. Will you please give me a little corner for donations for the Hackensack church.

Obituaries.

BRADLEY. Died in Bristol, Ct., Oct. 17th, 1865, of typhoid fever, Bro. Henry L. Bradley, aged fifty-five years and four months.

He leaves a wife and four children to mourn his loss. Bro. Bradley was converted when seventeen years of age, joined the Baptist church, and remained a faithful and consistent member till 1842, when he heard the glorious news of the Advent at hand, and left all and went forth with Bro. Matthew Bachelder to publish the glad tidings to a perishing world.

For a year, or more, past, he has felt deeply moved to go forth and preach the gospel of the kingdom; and, in accordance with this conviction of duty, he made a few appointments, which be filled to good acceptance, and still others were in process of arrangement, when death laid his heavy hand upon him. His illness was doubtless induced by the pressure of fatigue and anxiety, consequent upon the severe sickness of his son, with whom he remained almost constantly, caring for him with the utmost solicitude.

He suffered much during his illness, but died easily at the last. He expected to recover, and said to his physician that he thought he should not die yet, but still felt that he had committed all to the Savior, and could be passive in the hands of the Lord. He has passed away, but has left us a rich legacy in his holy life, his christian example, and his patient trust.

The funeral was attended by Bro. Edwin Burnham, who addressed a large concourse of people, from 2 Thess. 4: 18,—"Wherefore comfort one another with these words,"—presenting the hope of the resurrection of the dead, and eternal life at Christ's coming in his kingdom.

We miss thee, dear father, where'er we roam;
We miss thee sadly at our dear old home;
Yes, we miss thy kind voice and presence there,
But we miss thee most at our family prayer.

EASTMAN. Died at East Canaan, N. H., Oct. 6th, 1865, Bro. Rendall Eastman, of Spring Creek, Warren County, Pa., aged twenty-eight years.

The subject of this notice was a returned soldier of the 18th N. H. Volunteers. Though not killed in battle, as were many of his fellows, yet he returned but to suffer much pain, and finally to die. He died in the triumphs of faith. He leaves a wife, two little boys, an aged father, brothers, sisters, and many christian acquaintances to mourn his loss.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Liverpool Oct. 28th, Queenstown 29th.

The National Council of Switzerland is proceeding with the revision of the Constitution, and had proclaimed that the free exercise of religion will be permitted to all religious communities. An article admitting priests to the Council was rejected.

The Rome correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette states that Count de Sartiges had informed the Pope that the evacuation by the French troops would commence on the first of November. He also announced to the Pope that the Italian Government would renew negotiations with the Holy See as soon as the elections were completed.

The Observer says the Cabinet Council lasted but a short time. It was unanimously agreed to support Earl Russell as Premier. The arrangement is fully expected to receive the Queen's sanction to-morrow.

Two French steamers leave Toulon to-day to bring home a portion of the French troops in the Roman States. The second brigade returns to France next spring.

Liverpool Nov. 2d, Queenstown 3d.

The correspondent of the Times says it is generally reported in Paris that the French army in Mexico will be withdrawn by installments, and that by August or September next year the whole will have returned to France.

This resolution is said to be adopted not only from a desire to afford no reasonable grounds of complaint to the United States, but also on economical grounds.

The Brazilian mail had reached Lisbon with the following dates:

It is stated that Spain has informed England that she intends taking energetic measures for the suppression of the slave trade.

Two French vessels had arrived at Civita Vecchia for troops, who are now commencing evacuation.

The Paris correspondent of the Morning Post says the intended withdrawal of all the French troops in Mexico has lately assumed a more decided character. Maximilian would recruit more in Austria and Belgium. It is proposed to permit the French officers and men to take the oath of allegiance to Maximilian if inclined, so that Maximilian would find himself surrounded entirely by his own army.

DOMESTIC.

Warhington, Nov. 7. The U. S. Consul stationed at Havana, under date of Oct. 31, informs the State Department that the Captain General of the Island of Cuba has tendered to the British Consul General troops and war vessels to go and assist the authorities of Jamaica. The war vessels were accepted, and two of them sailed on the date of this dispatch, from St. Jago de Cuba.

Our Consul at Havana encloses to the State Department a dispatch from our Consul at Kingston, in which he states that his predecessor, who had had some four years' experience with the Islanders, expresses fears that it will require several months to suppress the insurrection effectually. He also expresses the hope that an American war steamer may be at once dispatched to that port, and states that there are on the Island of Jamaica about 400,000 inhabitants, of which only 10,000 are whites, about 75,000 mulattoes, and the remainder blacks.

The present outbreak has evidently been long contemplated, and is intended to be a war of extermination by the blacks against the whites, and the great disparity of numbers gives the former a great advantage. They have moreover chosen a time when there are but few English troops at that station, and but one small English war steamer—the Wolverine—at the Island.

New York, Nov. 8. Havana dates of the 28th ult. state that the severe hurricane of the 22d and 23d raged with great force all over the Island. In Havana harbor many vessels drifted foul of wharves and sank. The Admiral's flag ship ran into the wharf, damaging several schooners and boats. Several launches, with cargoes, were sunk, and a total of fifty vessels were more or less damaged.

The streets of the city were filled with water to the depth of a foot. Houses and walls were blown down, roofs blown away, and the trees of the plazas prostrated. Two thirds of the roof of the Tacon Theatre was torn off. The country seat of the Captain General and others suffered considerably.

Springfield, Nov. 7. The large and elegant Water Cure Establishment of Dr. Munde at Florence, Mass., near Northampton, was entirely destroyed by fire this evening. The fire originated in one of the bath rooms. Only a part of the furniture was saved. The house was filled with boarders for the winter.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 11.—The official reports received at the State Department represent that the present year has thus far proved disastrous to Syria, agriculturally, for nearly every green thing was devoured by the locusts. In many parts of the country during the spring, this evil was followed by a murrain which carried off five per cent. of the cattle. Then came the cholera, which is still at work at Damascus, Harm and Aleppo. The mortality at Samaria has been estimated at 2000, and at Joppa 1000. The mortality still lingers at Berot, but has lost its epidemic form.

The Consul at Paris says there is no longer any doubt that the cholera has commenced its ravages in that city.

Reports from Florence to the State Department represent that the cholera has greatly diminished in the southern and eastern portions of the Italian kingdom. It is on the decline at Jerusalem, and is also abating at Barcelona.

NEW YORK, Nov. 11.—The Executive officers of the Fenian brotherhood have engaged a spacious mansion in the upper part of the city for their headquarters. The President and different Bureaus will move into it next week. The Express says the present organization is not intended for the government of the future Irish Republic; but only to aid their Irish patriots in the struggle for independence by arms, money, etc.

New York, Nov. 13. A Washington dispatch says: General indignation is felt in Government and Diplomatic circles at the wanton attack of Spain upon Chili.

Gov. Hahn, who has just arrived from Louisiana, represents that the reconstructed rebels in that State are acting very badly. In one parish they met in convention and re-established slavery by formal enactment and resolutions.

Three negroes have been shot by returned rebel soldiers within a month at Alexandria.

Last week one of the civil courts sentenced a negro to be whipped under the old Virginia code. Gen. Augur promptly annulled the sentence.

EFFECT OF THE FENIAN MOVEMENT ON CANADIAN NERVES.—An Ottawa (C. W.) letter of the 9th, says:—

It is now beyond doubt that steps are to be taken by the Canadian government to meet the danger of the Fenian movement.

The Executive Council met in Montreal on the 7th, and is to meet in this city on the 10th, and though it is, of course, not known what business was done, enough has transpired to show that the placing a large force on the line of frontier was discussed. That force will likely be at least twelve battalions, or some six to eight thousand men, and this will be backed by the regular force in the country, now amounting to about ten thousand men.

Montreal is to furnish three battalions, or about fifteen hundred men. Three or four others will be raised east of the city, and in Canada West six or eight battalions will also be raised. Of these three will come from Toronto.

Such is the on dit in the cities, and a growing pugnacious feeling is arising. The Montreal Gazette of the 7th says that if "fighting comes, we will fight to the uttermost."

The same paper admits that it is possible for a body of fifty thousand Fenians to get upon Canadian territory and do "a good deal of mischief," but they would be driven back, after getting "such a lesson as would not speedily be forgotten." It also publishes the pastoral of the chief pastor of the Irish Catholic church, which advises the Irish to have nothing to do with the Fenian movement. On the influence of this pastoral call on the flocks of the Catholic church in Canada, the government depends not a little for peace and quiet, so far as home goes.

DISTRESS OF FREEDMEN.—The evidence accumulates upon us from all parts of the South, that the destitution of the Freedmen this winter will be beyond all precedent. The desolations of the war, the inability of the Freedmen's Bureau to grant relief, and the rapid restoration of abandoned lands to their former owners, leave multitudes of the Freedmen without food and clothing for the winter. Unless the people of the North will promptly furnish clothing of all kinds for men, women and children, there must be great suffering and loss of life during the inclement season now rapidly approaching.

Reliable persons report that thirty thousand will perish from want of food and clothing, in Georgia alone, if relief is not furnished, and that speedily.

Clothing, blankets, and supplies of all kinds, may be sent to W. E. Whiting, rooms of the Amer. Missionary Association, 61 John St., N. Y.—American Missionary.

☞ Grain that has been injured and become musty, unless its gluten is destroyed, may be restored to nearly its original sweetness by pouring boiling water over it, and permitting it to stand till cool.

☞ The trains on the Grand Trunk Road Thursday were delayed several hours on account of the snow storm of that day, and the Montreal papers contain accounts of a heavy snow storm on Monday.

☞ War has broken out between Spain and Chili, in consequence of demands made by the former power, to which Chili could not honorably accede.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

☞ Who?—A letter, postmarked Cordova, Ill., containing $5.00 for the Crisis, is received; but as no name is signed to it, we do not know who the money is to be credited to.

M. E. Severence—Received and credited; all right.

CASH RECEIPTS FOR THE CRISIS.

To find how your account stands.

The present No. of the Crisis is 528. The No. which follows your name is the No. to which you have paid. If the No. paid to, is greater than the present No., the difference shows how many weeks you have paid for in advance. If the No. paid to, is less than the present No., the difference shows for how many weeks you owe. For every week of indebtedness before No. 468, (if any), charge four cents; for every week since No. 468, if less than 26 weeks, five cents; if over 26 weeks, six cents a week (or $2.12 for the year.) From the sum deduct four cents for every dollar, and you have the exact amount due.

REST, PEACE, AND LIGHT.

"Shall earth ever find rest? Shall peace stretch her mantle over this earth again? Shall light break in upon the darkness and chase it all away?" M. L. M.

Yes, rest to earth is coming;
'Tis the All-wise decree,
That strife and mad commotion
From its fair soil should flee;

And peace her glorious banner
Spread wide from shore to shore,
For hate and deadly warfare
Will then be known no more.

And light—what bright effulgence
Bursts on the raptured eyes!
As floods of God's own glory
Descend the parted skies;

And all the new earth filling,
As waters do the sea,
Each hill, and vale, and fountain,
Bathe there eternally.

Ah! who would not with pleasure
All sinful joys resign,
And walk the path of sorrow,
Nor murmur nor repine?

That when that glorious morning
Shall dawn upon the blest,
We may with all the ransomed
Share light, and peace, and rest.

WORKING FOR THE DEVIL.

"The partaker is as bad as the thief."

This is Bible doctrine. "When thou sawest a thief, then thou consentedst with him, and hast been partaker with adulterers."—Ps. 1: 18. "Lay hands suddenly on no man, neither be partaker of other men's sins."—1 Tim. 5: 22. Again, "If there come any unto you and bring not this doctrine, receive him not into your house, neither bid him God speed; for he that biddeth him God speed is partaker of his evil deeds."—2 John 10: 11.

Let us inquire when we are working for the devil, and when we are partaking of other men's sins.

1. Take the case of the christian milliner and dress-maker. She knows full well that many of the articles she makes for her customers foster pride and extravagance. To procure them is a wicked waste of God's money, yet her hands are busy in this avocation. If it is wrong to wear gay, costly and fashionable attire, is it not also wrong to make it? "May we not as well wear, as make, that fashionable bonnet?" The apology for doing this devil's work is, "It's my trade; I must live." Live, sister; live? Will God kill you if you obey him? Abstain from all appearance of evil. . . . .

2. Instance the pious jeweller. He knows it is wrong for people to bedeck themselves in gold ear-rings, finger-rings, breast-pins, chains and bracelets for ornamental purposes. God forbids it; his word is explicit on this point. See Isa. 3: 16; Rom. 12: 2; 1 Tim. 2: 9; 1 Pet. 3: 3, 4. Yet this selling jewelry is his calling, like to that of Demetrius, the shrine-maker, who made silver shrines for Diana, saying, "Sirs, ye know that by this craft we have our wealth." Acts 19: 24–26. But says the jeweller, "I must live; my family must be supported." Brother, will God kill you in very deed unless you persist in doing the devil's work? leave you and your family to perish for lack of bread? Strange doctrine this; where did you find it? anywhere from Genesis to Revelations? Turn to Ps. 37: 23–25. How readest thou? Mechanics work for Satan when they use their skill and ingenuity for the production of articles that naturally tend in their use to fit souls for perdition.

3. Take the man who patronizes the manufacturer and trafficker in strong drink. He knows that every maker and seller of this devil's broth is a murderer—a murderer of fathers, a murderer of mothers; and yet he sustains this horrid trafficker by his patronage. He may not purchase this liquid death and distilled damnation, either for himself or for others; but he upholds this bloody man by purchasing of him other articles for domestic use, and thus partakes of his sins and helps Satan to do his own work. He who makes or sells alcoholic drinks, and he who sustains the maker and seller of these poisons, is alike engaged in the devil's work. * * *

4. Beloved reader, you know that light and trifling conversation, foolish talking and jesting is forbidden of God, and is classed among the vilest sins; and yet the world is full of this nonsense. And can you be innocent, and sit or stand by for a moment and hear this senseless gabble, and not in some way manifest your displeasure? If by your silence, a smile of approval, or if in any way you express your approbation of it, are you not a partaker of the evil of this leprosy, this gangrene of the soul that eateth like a canker, "biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder"?

5. Does a man swear, take God's name in vain in your hearing, and you reprove him not for his blasphemy, are you not guilty of a breach of the law of love, consequently become a partaker of the evil of this violation of the third commandment?

6. Do you see persons in the church or out of it transgressing any of the ten commandments; and if you do not raise your voice reprovingly, "cry aloud, and spare not," does not He who "seeth not as man seeth" reckon you with the transgressors, the guilty ones? "Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbor, and not suffer sin upon him."

7. There goes a man who rents his house, his store, his field or grove, for what? to glorify God? or for deeds of darkness? for gamblers, rumsellers, whoremongers, frolickers, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God, for any unholy purpose or traffic? The man who rents for evil purposes any property which God has placed in his hands, is doing the devil's work, and is a partaker of the sins resulting therefrom. We know a man calling himself a christian that rents his house to a rumselling hotel-keeper and gambler. Another rents a beautiful grove for Satan to do his worst in. Others rent out houses of ill-fame.

8. Look at those ministers, D. D.'s, christian bishops, and other distinguished church-members, who held a banquet at a rumselling and gambling hotel in Chicago, feasted to surfeiting, drank toasts, and cracked jokes; were they not doing the devil's work with a vengeance? Meanwhile, were they not partakers of the sins of the same gambling, rumselling hotel-keeper?

9. Look at the hurrah at the religious festivals, tea and strawberry parties, fancy fairs, tin and gold weddings, where, like the worshipers of the golden calf, they sit down to eat and rise up to play. Also glance at the New Years' visitations, where wine-bibbing, drunkenness and surfeiting are the order of the day: is there no devil's work here, no partaking of other men's sins?

10. Mark the course of that fond mother tipping off her daughters in all the gaiety and frivolity of a wicked, fashionable world, that tends to make her as proud as Lucifer, and to prepare her for destruction. Would this good mother adorn herself thus in the face of gospel purity and simplicity? Sooner would she sever a right hand; yet she permits her daughters to do thus wickedly, kill or cure. Are not this mother's skirts stained with the blood of souls? Is she not a partaker of the evils resulting from this worldly conformity? Satan is at the bottom of this; it is the devil's work.

11. Again, that father and mother would no more be guilty of attending a theatre, a dancing party, than they would be of setting their neighbor's house on fire; and yet they allow their sons and daughters to do these abominable things. Does not God hold these parents responsible for the consequences resulting from these sins of the flesh and the spirit? The same deeds of wickedness done by their offspring are laid at their very door! How was it with Eli, when his "sons were vile and he restrained them not"? 1 Kings 22: 21; Job 22: 19.

12. Parents, you who disobey God in not training your children "in the way they should go," in the path of duty and holiness, and who consequently grow up wayward, impertinent, godless: are you not guilty fearfully in the sight of Heaven? and are not the very sins committed by your ungodly children placed to your account? Take the example of Eli again, and the terrible judgments that followed his sins of omission.

13. Those who apologize for the sins of slavery in any way, the traffic in the bodies and souls of men, are partakers of the guilt and condemnation of the cruel men-stealers who weep and howl for the miseries that have come upon them, whose riches are corrupted, whose garments are moth-eaten, whose gold and silver is cankered, and the rust of them witnesses against them and eats their flesh as if it were fire!

14. The farmer who sells his grain and hops to the distiller and brewer, to be manufactured into poison to poison the bodies and souls of men, is equally guilty with the manufacturers and seller of the same poisons. It is the devil's work from first to last. The same curse rests upon those New England tobacco raisers and manufacturers. We say New England traffickers in the poisonous Indian weed, for they have long known that the use of this vile narcotic in any form is a curse to the world, a curse to the church, a curse to the body, mind, and soul. Where much is given, much is required. He that knoweth his master's will, and doeth it not, shall be beaten with many stripes.

The raising and habitual using of tobacco is contrary to the spirit of the gospel, a sin against God, the work of Satan; and those who work with Satan and keep on doing Satan's work are sure in the end to have Satan's reward.

15. Once more, ministers that withhold any truth of the Bible, keep back any part of the price, refuse to warn the people of their sins, popular and unpopular, in high places or in low, from the fear of man, the love of applause, or from any worldly motive or policy whatever, will be held responsible at the bar of God for these very sins the people commit through their neglect to preach the word in season and out of season, to reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine. 2 Tim. 4: 1, 2; Ezek. 33: 7, 8; Ezek. 34: 8, 9.

[BRO. G.—This article, from the Tribune of Oct. 24th, should go into the Crisis. It will show the readers that Noah's times are here again, the "whole earth being filled with violence," and the "days of the Son of man" at the door. Print it; or if you prefer not, then send to me again at my expense, as I desire to preserve it. Great events are before us. Yours, D. T. T.

STATISTICS OF CRIME AND DISASTER.

Half a Year's Record—The "Carnival of Crime" in Figures—Murders in the Analysis—Viatricide, or Railway Murder—Sixty-five Railroad Accidents in Six Months, and twenty-seven in September—Bank Robberies and Defalcations—Disaster by Fire and Flood—The Volume of Losses.

The unusual statement of crimes and disasters during the last six months has been often remarked, and it seems the subject is now about ripe for conclusions of figures. That the public have noticed so large an increase in this fatal species of home production may be sensibly attributed to the lapse of a great war, and the revelation and recoil of the passions which it absorbed. If some have been skeptical as to the extent of individual outbreaks on society, it has been for want of statistics, and partly because crime, which has dabbled so much in catastrophe of late, has been forgotten in other misfortunes, of which the last half year has been full. Regular murders have almost found oblivion in railway disasters. But every chord of suffering life seems to have been stricken; and we have heard of a host of nondescript assaults upon the "house of life," beside homicide, marricide, parricide, matricide, sororicide, infanticide, familicide, patricide (attempted)—hardly pausing at cosmicide, which we interpret to be a violent taking-off in honor of the journal which has made the greatest display of murders. Railway slaughter renders necessary an addition to the vocabulary, and we have it to hand, namely: viatricide, or murder of the traveler. Altogether here is an interesting field of inquiry for our Kennedys and De Bows.

STATISTICS AND CURIOSITIES OF MURDER.

The entire estimate of the capital crimes committed in the United States in the last half year it is doubtless impossible to give. But from April to Oct. 10, ninety-five murders are counted from metropolitan files, exclusive of twelve manifest homicides and half a dozen assassinations by Indians and guerrillas. Twenty-five murderous attempts are recorded, nine cases of wife-murder and seven of attempted wife-murder, which seems to have been a terrible specialty with male criminals in New York and New Jersey. In contrast with this, there appear to have been but two husband-murders. Eight instances of familicide, or murder of a family, including three persons, make the most shocking feature of the category. Four fratricides, two parricides and matricides, two double and two quadruple murders, eight infant-murders, half of which were cases of abortion, were recorded. In the West and South-west three lynch-law trials took place. Singularly, amid all this excess of life-taking, we only find thirty-three suicides.

The assassination in April of President Lincoln exceeded all crimes in atrocity and daring, and thence crime seems to have begun its startling episode. The great mass of murders and crimes generally were perpetrated between June and September, viz: fifteen in June, twenty-one in July, twenty in August, and twenty-six in September. The last month was also by far the most fatal with respect to railroad accidents, although it was supposed that crime had its climax in the previous summer months. We conjecture that about one hundred and fifty persons have lost their lives by criminal hands, not remarking those who have perished by the railway Juggernaut.

EXTRAVAGANCE IN CRIME—PHILOSOPHY IN POISON.

Eccentricity and monstrosity seem to have been prodigal in the chapter of the criminal calendar just closed. Of extraordinary cases in America, most all of which seem to have been brute outrages of a multiple kind, may be mentioned—the Joyce tragedy in Roxbury, Mass.; the double murder at Summerville, Pa.; the familicide in Tennessee; the wholesale execution of Judge Wright and his four sons in Missouri, and the Starkweather family murder. But the great crimes of Europe have far exceeded all these in general wonder and mystery, and it is seldom that a grouping of such strange elements are found together in the social history. In systematic wickedness, and depth of motive they show a far older experience than American crime. Intellect, science, a sort of philosophy, and even religion, were sunk in the plot and woven in the deed, with the spirit of a young Lady Macbeth, a Fosco, a Thenardier. How Constance Kent, a child of thirteen, came to put away her little brothers, is still a study. Dr. Pritchard, a medical reviewer, daily resumed the patient task of killing his wife by slow poison. Mrs. Winsor kept a hospital for infanticide. Southey murdered the children of his mistress with a parade of Malthusian philosophy, for fear that they would starve, omitting, of course, to kill himself; and a Swedish priest poisoned a dozen of his parishioners with the sacrament, out of pity for their wretchedness. Crime of this complex character seems weird, appalling, and extravagant beyond expression.

THE VAGARIES OF CRIME.

Of the proportion of crimes in general it is scarcely possible to arrive at conclusions. But it should be remarked that twenty cases of nameless outrage—a class of crime which seldom invites record—were printed in the last six months. Curious and monstrous among other flagrancies were the placing of torpedoes on a railroad, an attempt to throw a train off the track, the burning of three houses by a girl fourteen years old, polygamy to the extent of ten wives by a man who afterward hanged himself, and in another case to the number of four; highway robbery by a politician; mail robbery by a postmaster, and the malign biting off of noses! Add to these the publication of obscene books and papers, and the defacing and misfeaturing of natural scenery, several cases of which came under the law. An ex-Congressman was also convicted of subornation of perjury. We must not omit to mention the story, if only to set it down as a hoax unexcelled in ghastliness—of the boy who deliberately cut off his arm to keep from going to school. This story, reported from New Jersey, was widely circulated.

THE COLOSSAL IN ROBBERY—BANK OPERATIONS.

Large operations of robbery appear to have been in proportion to other crime. The succession of several robberies of banks within a short time, and the apparent ease with which they have been robbed, have already called forth words of caution from the public journals against a state of financial insecurity. The following statement of bank and kindred robberies alone will show that this warning was not without reason of facts:—

Jan.—Bank of Crawford, Pa.	$150,000
March—National Central, N. Y.	50,000
March—Banking-House, Blands, Louisville	50,000
May—Bank, Walpole, N. H. (recovered)	45,000
June—Bank, Richmond	200,000
Aug.—Bank, Wellington, O.	100,000
Aug.—Banking-House, Portland	25,000
Sept.—Bank, Concord	300,000
Sept.—Treasury, Texas	30,000
Sept.—Adams' Express	25,000

This comprehends only robberies committed by outside parties, and we cannot pretend to say the list is complete. A few of the robberies were very remarkable. In the instance of the Crawford Bank (evidently a worked-up robbery), it seems that while the cashier was at work in the evening, the thief entered, extinguished the gas, and made away with the bonds before any light could be obtained. Mr. Bland of Louisville was imprisoned in his own safe, and nearly suffocated to death. The Concord Bank robbery is recent and well known.

ROBBERY AND ABSTRACTION.

A list of bank robberies would not be complete without a statement of the immense defalcations and swindles of the past six months, which have assailed the safety of banks from within as burglars from without. We append a generic list:—

May—Bank, New Haven Savings	$100,000
Aug.—Bank, Phœnix (Jenkins')	250,000
Aug.—Banks, etc., New York (Ketchum's)	4,000,000
Aug.—Erie Railroad bonds (Jones') reported $400,000 to	500,000
Aug.—Custom House, Memphis, reported	1,250,000
Aug.—Quartermaster at Paducah, by clerk	25,000
Sept.—Government bonds, Bliss, N. Y.	36,500
Sept.—Revenue Collector, Ohio (defaulter)	90,000
Sept.—Auerbach swindle, Louisville	80,000
Sept.—Railroad bond forgeries (Gildwin)	204,000
Sept.—By a New York book-keeper	10,000
Oct.—Government bonds by General Bristow, Lynchburg	80,000

A few of these were recovered. The list, of course, does not include the alleged paymaster frauds, navy-yard frauds, and official corruptions, of which the papers have been full. It must not be omitted, however, that a State Treasurer of Ohio was removed from office on charge of heavy embezzlements. Of important operations in the professional line may be mentioned the robbery of Mr. Veazie at Albany of $11,000; that of $25,000 from an Indiana farmer; $48,000 at Chattanooga; the $20,000 burglary at Detroit, and $50,000 at Philadelphia. Forgeries have also been very numerous and extensive, but it is, of course, impossible to give statistics.

RAILWAY MASSACRE—A NEW CHAPTER FOR SEPT.

Railway accidents open up a large account. From May 15th to Oct. 15th there were sixty-eight in all, or sixty-three in six months, up to September. Of these twenty four were collisions, nine explosions (two of which did not occur on the line), six came from bad bridges and culverts, twenty-two from rotten ties, broken rails and axles, and twelve were precipitations, more or less uncomfortable to the traveling public. Ten accidents occurred in June, eight in July, fifteen in Aug., twenty-seven in Sept., and in the whole year to date, not less than one hundred, comparing the present with our former statement of accidents published in August. Thirty million dollars would be a modest reckoning for the loss involved in the demolished lives, trains, and properties of the past year, and probably not less than 300 persons have been killed, and more than 600 injured in every shape by accidents in the same time.

CALAMITY BY STEAMBOAT AND SHIPWRECK.

Steamboat explosions and shipwreck naturally accompany this class of traveling accidents. Ten explosions and eight collisions of steamboats are noted, along with forty five burnings, sinkings, and wrecks of vessels; sixty-three disasters in all, upon the water. Several of these catastrophies, which have crimsoned river and ocean far and wide, are remembered in all their awful poetry, helpless agony and terror. By the explosion of the steamer Sultana some 1,200 victims found a muddy grave in the Mississippi; 400 went down in the burning ship Nelson; 250 with the Brother Jonathan, and 100 were drowned by the collision of the steamers Pewable and Meteor on Lake Michigan. Nearly 3,000 lives, it may be guessed, have been lost at sea between April and September. The translateable loss cannot be far inferior to that sustained upon the railroad. Eight additional disasters are recorded in October.

ACCIDENTS AT LARGE—EXPLOSIONS.

The chapter of miscellaneous accidents takes in a great variety of calamities, such as death from the incavation of walls, wharves and embankments, burning, in foundries and elsewhere, crushing between cars, being run over and run away with, and from shooting, cutting, and poisoning by prescription, all of which causes convey standard warning to society and the individual to be on guard. Seventy mortal cases of this class of accidents were reported, and twenty where injuries were sustained. There were beside eight explosions of boilers and magazines, several of which were particularly frightful in their shock and damage. Counting those by steamboat and rail, there were altogether twenty-seven severe explosions, followed by great loss of life generally, and enormous loss in the case of the Sultana. These explosions embrace such as may be termed causes; those which resulted from other occasions of disaster have not all been counted.

DISASTER IN MASSACHUSETTS.

To recapitulate: there have been, within six months, 131 accidents to travel by land and water, wherein were thirty-two collisions and nineteen explosions; and about 150 prominent accidents of all kinds, outside of the area of ruin belonging simply to fires.

THE AREA OF CONFLAGRATION.

Even in this respect the last half year seems to have been otherwise than ordinary. One hundred and fifty-five fires between April and Oct. 15th make no insignificant item in our business account of loss by accident. In six months up to September we count 142.

These fires, too, reveal startling figures, and make a light whereby the commercial world may read. The loss in twenty fires for the last forty days was $6,000,000; in twenty-five fires, where each loss was $100,000 or upward, $16,000,000; in forty-five fires for five months, $19,270,000; and altogether, about 30,000,000, which we estimate to be as near the truth as it is possible to arrive with the present available data.

Half a dozen great fires combined to swell these losses, chief among which were those in the Petroleum regions; $10,000,000 by the destruction of government works in Tennessee; $3,000,000 by the late large warehouse conflagration in New York; $500,000 by that of Massachusetts factories; and amounts of $200,000 and $300,000 by burnings elsewhere.

LOSSES OF $150,000 AND UPWARD.

Below we give a miscellany of fires as distinguished by loss. They occurred between the middle of May and October:

Pork-packing house at Indianapolis	$400,000
At South Dedham, Mass	150,000
Avenue C, New York	150,000
Balmoral Manufactory, Meriden, Ct.	3.0,000
Nashville Government Warehouses	10,000,000
Louisville, Drug house	200,000
Rolla, Missouri	300,000
Saratoga, N. Y.	350,000
Fire in Quebec	1,000,000
Iron Works at Buffalo	150,000
Barnum's Museum	2,000,000
Drug Mills at Jersey City	150,000
Cotton Factory, Petersburg, Va.	200,000
Williamsburgh Factories	150,000
Water and South street fire	650,000
Fire in St. Louis	300,000
Fire at Troy	150,000
Fire in Augusta, Maine	150,000
Warehouses, Cherry street, New York	3,000,000
American Rice Mills	500,000
Fire in Chicago	170,000
Cotton at Memphis	300,000
French & Richards' Druggery, Phila.	300,000
Cotton at Mobile	1,000,000
Coal Oil at Pithole	150,000
Fire at Belfast, Maine	300,000
Fire in Bridge street, New York	1,000,000

EX-DOMICILIARY—TOWNS IN CINDERS.

The foregoing list, without being entirely comprehensive, is suggestive. Great fires, with a damage to the amount of $1,500,000, occurred in Canada, principally at Toronto and Quebec. In Quebec ninety-one houses were destroyed, and one hundred families left houseless. Twenty-five buildings were burnt at Troy, and as many at Augusta, Me.; and in the great fire at Belfast, Me., one hundred buildings were consumed, and in West Forty-fourth street, New York, seventy-four families were burned out. Towns like Idaho, Denton, Md.; Forest City, Cal., and Galveston, were entirely destroyed. In Carlisle seven children were burned to death, and in Chicago eight firemen were buried under falling walls. One thousand acres of Massachusetts forests were burned away. There are no means of making exact computations of life and property losses.

DISASTERS EXTRAORDINARY.

Here follows a statement of the most remarkable catastrophes of the last six months:

Explosion of steamer Sultana; lives lost (reported)	1.400
Explosion of Mobile Magazine; lives lost	300
Collision, Baltimore & Washington Railroad; killed and wounded	50
Collision, Ohio & Mississippi Railroad; killed and wounded	165 30
Railroad explosion, Tennessee and Alabama	130
Loss of Brother Jonathan (lives)	250
Loss of ship William Nelson (lives)	400
Loss of Pewabic and Meteor (lives)	100
Mississippi steamer explosion (lives)	33
California steamer Yosemite explosion, 52 killed and 60 wounded.
By storm on the Gulf Coast (reported) drowned	90

DELUGE AND EARTHQUAKE.

The late storm on the coast of Texas and Louisiana is said to have swept away whole settlements like Caucasica and Sabine, and drowned about ninety persons. Six hundred cattle were washed from only one farm, during a sudden rise of the waters twenty feet above the land. Equinoctial tempests in this section of the country inflicted immense damage, according to all report.

Earthquake was felt during August in Memphis, and in various places throughout the south west. But its heaviest shocks were experienced in California and Oregon during September. The citizens of Eureka, Santa Clara, San Francisco, and other localities, were thrown into temporary unsteadiness by being rocked and shaken in the cradle of this phenomenon. Mt. Hood, Oregon, was at the same time reported to be in a state of eruption.

IN FINE.

To recapitulate: a fair calculation from the foregoing would place the entire damage to property by disasters of a public character at about eighty millions. Robberies may be set down at about twenty millions more.

We have thus given a fair glimpse of a field of statistics, which, if not inviting, appears necessary, at all events, to the public knowledge. Such statistics are painful, but are not without a certain high usefulness and even philosophy, which should commend them especially to the census takers in these days of social science and statistics. Society should understand its pulse, commerce should feel its pocket, and the world should know what proportion crime and disaster bear to the economy of the world.

Thus far the Tribune. If we add to this awful record the testimony of the U. S. Consul at Port Mahon, who says that the Russian pest has again broken out in Siberia, and that "its ravages are frightful beyond any thing heretofore known"; and that of a Paris letter writer to the Montreal Transcript, who declares, "It is asserted by scientific men that India is so ravaged by a poisonous wind that the very reptiles die, and that this plague will reach us next spring, and with so much violence as to make us dread the end of the world," and affirm what is too true, that the terrible cholera is but ten days from us, if not actually here, then the picture of evil and of "FEARFUL LOOKING," (Luke 21) is complete.

Selected for the Crisis.

"HE GIVETH HIS BELOVED SLEEP."

Did you ever watch the ivy which you train about the window, or over the pictures of your parlor in the winter? How glossy and green and beautiful its leaves. So long as they are healthy, living leaves of the plant, deriving their nourishment from the root, so long they remain green and shining, and the dust of the room does not seem to settle upon them, nor tarnish their brightness. But watch here and there a leaf as it withers and turns brown and dry. It still hangs upon the plant, still bears its name, but how unlike its former self. You go to remove it, and as you sever it from the stem, a cloud of dust falls from it, which makes you turn away in disgust. And I have often thought, is it not something so with the christian? In this world of trial, so long as he keeps very near to Christ, feeding on him, drawing all his life and strength from him, so long is he raised above the dust and turmoil and disturbance of the world; above its opinions, its flatteries, or its scandal; its pride and deceit, its petty and perplexing trials, and the world may almost read upon his face the secret of the repose of soul.

But let him loosen his hold on Christ, and his graces wither, his serenity and composure forsake him, his garments trail in the dust, and he is at the mercy of every breath of trial which may assail from a gainsaying, fault-finding, wicked world. And this distance from Christ, this following the Master "afar off," is what makes so many "gloomy christians"; not religion, but the want of it.

Like the eagle, he might have soared sunward and basked in the serenity of that upper air, far above the noise of earth's jars and discords and worries; but he has let himself disgracefully down from that privileged home to be the prey of the veriest trifler that would feed upon his feelings, despoil his home, and make his soul as a "whited sepulchre."

Alas! alas! away from Christ, what may not the christian be left to do and to become! but clinging to him, living upon him, walking with him day by day, his soul shall be nourished and refreshed, and, almost like the disciple on the mount of transfiguration, so shall his face be radiant with that peace which the world cannot give nor take away.

"THE WORD OF THE LORD."

"Now in the first year of Cyrus, king of Persia, that the word of the Lord spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah might be accomplished, the Lord stirred up the spirit of Cyrus, king of Persia, that he made a proclamation throughout all his kingdom."—2 Chron. 36: 22. In this proclamation, there is nothing said about the temple; yet if, instead of Jeremiah, we had been informed that this was to accomplish the word spoken by the mouth of Isaiah, we might conclude the temple was meant; for in the edict which was put in writing, that is mentioned; but since "by the mouth of Jeremiah" the Lord hath spoken nothing concerning the temple, it is impossible that that could have been "the word" as alluded to here. "The word of the Lord spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah" was this,—"I will cause the captives of Judah and the captives of Israel to return, and will BUILD them AS AT THE FIRST."—Jer. 33: 7. When they were BUILDED AS AT THE FIRST, Jerusalem was restored. And since the object of the "proclamation" of Cyrus was to accomplish this,—"the word of the Lord spoken by the mouth of Jeremiah," it was "the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." Dan. 9: 25.

REST.

Rest, weary soul!
The penalty is borne, the ransom paid,
For all thy sins full satisfaction made;
Strive not thyself to do what Christ has done;
Take the free gift, and make the joy thine own.
No more by pangs of guilt and fear distrest—
Rest, sweetly rest!

Rest, weary heart!
From all thy silent griefs and secret pain,
Thy profitless regrets and longings vain;
Wisdom and love have ordered all the past,
All shall be blessedness and light at last.
Cast off the cares that have so long opprest—
Rest, sweetly rest!

Rest, weary head!
Lie down to slumber in the peaceful tomb,
Light from above has broken through its gloom,
Here, in the place where once thy Savior lay,
Where he shall wake thee on a future day;
Like a tired child upon its mother's breast—
Rest, sweetly rest!

Rest, rest for aye!
In the green pasture of the heavenly shore,
Where sin and sorrow can approach no more;
With all the flock by the Good Shepherd fed,
Beside the streams of life eternal led,
Forever with thy God and Savior blest—
Rest, sweetly rest!

NEVER TOO OLD TO LEARN.

Socrates, at an extreme age, learned to play on musical instruments, for the purpose of resisting the wear and tear of old age.

Cato, at eighty years of age, thought proper to learn the Greek language.

Ogilby, the translator of Homer and Virgil, was unacquainted with Latin and Greek till he was past fifty.

Boccaccio was thirty years of age when he commenced his studies in polite literature; yet he became one of the three great masters of the Tuscan dialect, Dante and Petrarch being the other two.

Colbert, the famous French minister, at sixty years of age returned to his Latin and law studies.

Ludovico, at the great age of one hundred and fifteen years, wrote the memoirs of his own times—a singular exertion, noticed by Voltaire, who was himself one of the most remarkable instances of the progress of age in new studies.

Accorso, a great lawyer, being asked why he began the study of law so late, answered that indeed he began it late, but he should therefore master it the sooner.

Dryden, in his sixty-eighth year, commenced the translation of the Iliad; and his most pleasing productions were written in his old age.

Franklin did not fully commence his philosophical pursuits till he had reached his fiftieth year.

Sir Henry Spelman neglected the sciences in his youth, but commenced the study of them when he was between fifty and sixty years of age. After this time he became a most learned antiquarian and lawyer.

BELIEVING, YE SHALL RECEIVE.

Every true christian knows and believes that God is a hearer and answerer of prayer for spiritual blessings; for he has experienced it in his own soul. But how few, comparatively, go to him just as freely for the supply of temporal needs. Yet there is nothing right for us to have, which it is not right to ask him for, always submitting our own will to his in the matter. "If we ask any thing according to his will, he heareth us."

Years ago, in the wilds of Pennsylvania, a young minister was settled, who devoted his time through the week to teaching the poor children that belonged to his flock. Writing and arithmetic were the chief branches taught; and, as he was starting for school one morning, he was quite disturbed to find he had lost his pen-knife—an indispensable article to a teacher, in those days of the quill pen. He thought he had probably lost it on his return from school the previous night; but a light snow had fallen, which made it impossible to search for it then. As he walked along, he made the matter a subject of earnest prayer. While thus engaged, he observed a man leading a horse up a by-road, which presently broke into a run, and turned into the highway. Just where his footstep knocked off the snow, the teacher discovered the missing knife. "I never," said he, "had a more delightful sense of God's goodness and faithfulness, as a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God, than on this occasion."

I know a lady who is in the habit of taking all such seemingly trivial matters to God in prayer, and who says she has sometimes been almost startled by the direct answers she has received. An article of constant use was once lost, much to her inconvenience, and, after much fruitless searching, she thought, "why not pray that God will direct me? Nothing is lost to him; he sees and knows everything." So she knelt down, and asked God if it was according to his will that the article might be found; and then went cheerfully about her accustomed duties. Presently her child begged for a box of shells he seldom played with, and, on opening it, the long-lost article was found, where little hands had stored it away. It was not the first nor the second time that her prayers had been answered in the same way, under very similar circumstances. She seldom speaks of such things, as they appear to many almost like trifling with prayer; but He who numbers even the hairs of our heads, and without whom not a sparrow falls to the ground, will regard nothing as beneath his notice that concerns even our temporal well-being.

HOLDING THE TRUTH FAST.

I have read of a little boy—call him Willie, if you please—whose grandfather, when dying, had made him promise to "hold fast the truth." Willie had promised to do so, and was very strict in his efforts to keep clear of lying in every form. He was the son of a poor man, and was glad to work in a rich man's garden for his food. One day the gardener said:

"Willie, come here and help me move these plants."

Willie was in such a hurry to obey, that in turning round he knocked over a slender flower-stand, on which stood some very rare plants in costly pots and vases.

"There!" cried the gardener, "you've made a pretty muss of those plants. The vases are all broken, and so are most of the plants. They cost a good deal of money."

"O, I am so sorry," said Willie, weeping as he tried to gather the pieces and put them together again.

"You can't mend them," said the gardener. "You are a careless fellow."

"O dear, dear!" cried the boy, "Mr. Ramsay will be very angry, and turn me away. That will make my father feel bad, for he is very poor, and can hardly earn bread for himself and mother and my little brother."

"But Mr. Ramsey need know nothing about it," rejoined the gardener. "If I tell him that Miss Bertha's dog got into the garden, and upset the stand, he will not blame you, will he?"

"John!" exclaimed Willie, very seriously, "that would be telling a lie."

"But if I tell it what need you care?"

"It would be the same thing as if I said it, if I knew about it," replied Willie, "and," he added with great firmness, "I will tell Mr. Ramsay all about it, let what will happen."

"You may do as you like, Willie," said the gardener; "but if you are turned away it will not be very easy for you to find another place so nice as this."

"I can't help it. I promised grandfather I would 'hold fast the truth,' and I will.

Willie wept a good deal that day, but he stuck to this grand purpose without flinching. When Mr. Ramsay entered the garden shortly after, he noticed Willie's grief, and said kindly: "What is the matter, little Willie?"

"If you please, sir, I have thrown down the flower-stand, and broken those nice vases with the choice roses that were in them. I am sorry sir. Please, sir, don't turn me away."

Mr. Ramsay was a good man, and did not fall into a passion, as many rich men would have done. He inquired into the facts, and forgave the boy, after charging him to be more careful in future. The gardener was glad to keep the boy, too, for, in proposing to invent the story of the dog, he was only tempting Willie, to see, as he said, "of what sort of stuff the boy was made."

I think Willie was made of the right sort of stuff, don't you? He had a good clear conscience, which helped him to see that it would be as wicked to let the gardener lie for him, as it would be to lie himself. Then he had a strong will, by which he held on to the truth in spite of his fear that Mr. Ramsey would turn him away. Ah, Willie was a noble boy. How many such children have I in my great family? Are there not hundreds of thousands among them who hold fast the truth in spite of every thing? How is it with you, my reader? Are you a truth-teller? Yes, sir, you reply. Well, God bless you, my dear, and help you to cling to the truth, even in the face of death.—S. S. Advocate.

STRAIGHT PATHS.

The waning light of a Sabbath evening fell on the open leaves of the large, old Bible. Young fingers had turned over the leaves, and those same young fingers had grown old, and bony, and withered, and turned them over then. Young eyes had spelled the words, and those same eyes had peered dimly through spectacles to read its blessed truths. Glad young hearts had felt the preciousness of its reading, and hearts that had found earth's promises to fail, had found here a resting place.

They were young eyes that were bending over it now, and a young heart that was seeking to know the will of Jesus concerning her life. The young girl sat pondering these words—they were marked faintly with a pencil line: "And make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way."

"I have been turned out of the way often, and by such little things. Mother is a christian, and it was only this morning I enjoyed the sermon so much, and when we were coming out of church mother said it was so long, and the minister's voice so unpleasant, that it took away all the good. And last week, after I read about Mr. Miller's giving up all for God, and trusting in him, I wanted to wear my old muslin, and give the five dollars father gave me, to old Mrs. Howe, to buy fruit and jelly for her; but father said, when he threw the book down, 'That man is a fanatic—he can't expect every body to have the faith he has;' and that froze my heart right up, and that isn't half that every body does. I don't know of any body that makes 'straight paths,' and sometimes I think I won't try either. It's only the good books and papers that keep me on; and perhaps the very people that write, walk crookedly, too."

A boy's form emerged from the shrubbery, and a boy of fourteen years ran up the steps and sat down beside his sister.

"How beautiful everything is in the quiet and starlight!"

"Yes, it is beautiful," said the boy. "Are you glad you are a christian?" Charlie looked up in his sister's face. He did not need words.

"It seems to me a blessed thing, something every body longs for; but no one ever becomes a real Bible christian. I don't believe there is such a thing. There might have been when Christ was on the earth, but seeing is believing, and I shan't believe till I do see. If father really believes I'm going to be lost, why don't he tell me so? He never said I must trust in Jesus to be saved. He says so in prayer meeting," Charlie went on. "But I might talk in prayer meeting as well as he does, or any body else. I wish I could, and I'd make the ears of the hypocrites tingle. Why don't he tell me so—and mother too? When I was little, she used to say, at night, 'Don't forget to say your prayers,' and now I'm getting big, I believe she's ashamed; ain't that true, now, Lucy? Did she ever ask you to be a christian?"

"No," said Lucy, sadly.

"And then, as to Sunday school teachers—I never had one that did me a bit of good; they talk in a cold, hard-set way. Why don't they say, Jesus died for you, Charlie; he loves you? Why don't people talk and act as if religion were alive? they act as if the Bible were a story-book, and God was dead."

"But, Charlie, you and I needn't."

"I don't know why we should keep straighter than other people. I'm just discouraged. I don't see why I should sign the pledge when the minister drinks cider, and makes currant wine. That's a beginning of evil; now isn't it?"

"Yes, that isn't keeping in the straight path."

"And when I try to keep from swearing, I hear christians swear every day. O, no, it's nothing to say, 'What under the heavens,' and 'Heaven knows,' and 'Confounded!' instead of what boys say. Now what is the difference," asked Charlie, excitedly. "I don't believe God sees any difference. Father told me this morning not to whistle 'Dixie,' and he was reading the Sunday Herald at the time. He is a christian!"

"I know it, Charlie. This morning I was trying to think Sunday thoughts, and mother called me to button her glove, and all the time she was talking to me about my bonnet strings, and the color of my gloves. Then aunt Mary talked about the dust all the way to church, and the new church stair carpet, all the way home."

"And Aunt Mary went to the theatre last night, and taught in Sunday school to-day."

"I'd either give up one or the other. And she was reading Miss Edgeworth's tales this afternoon, and she'll read a chapter in the Bible before she goes to bed. O, christians! O, christians!"

"And she and mother never go to the weekly prayer meeting—they have to sew or are too tired."

"I don't see how they can expect us to do right. It's the christians that keep us out of the way; we don't expect any thing from other people."

"What is a christian, Charlie?"

"One who loves God better than he loves the world, the flesh or the devil."

"No one loves the devil," said Lucy, smiling.

"Well, they serve him—a good many christians do. I guess he sets christians in the way to keep us out."

"But, Charlie, if our eyes are opened, we needn't follow them. The Bible can be a real Bible to us."

"But, Lucy, is it right for christians to look all around the church in prayer time? I've seen one of the oldest do it. And is it right for father to smoke ten cent cigars, and put five cents on the plate?"

"But, Charlie—"

"Yes, 'but Charlie.' We boys talk it over; we've got our eyes open. You can be a real christian, and if you are, perhaps I'll try it." And Charlie jumped up, and ran around the corner of the house, whistling "Dixie."

The sister's head was bowed on the old book. She was asking God to help her to make "straight paths," for Charlie's lame feet.—Advocate and Guard.

A PHOTOGRAPH IN JEWELS.

I saw a young lady's photograph the other day, which had many jewels on it. There were ear-rings, a breastpin, bracelets, finger-rings, and watch-chain. "What remark do you think I made to myself, as I looked on it?"

"You said it was very pretty," replies Miss Lively.

Not so, my pretty miss. But I did say, "The young lady who sat for that photograph is pretty enough, but she is also very, very vain."

"Yes, it is only vain folk,—that is, folk who love to be admired by others—who love to wear ornaments on their persons. I think such people are very silly. A meek spirit, a modest face, a gentle tongue, are far prettier in my eyes, than gold, pearls, or diamonds.

The good Queen of England, Victoria, showed her good sense when she sat for a photograph in a plain, black silk dress, without an ornament, of any kind.

"Had not your majesty better send for some jewels?" said the artist.

"No," replied the sensible queen; "this photograph is to go among my people, and I wish to do all in my power to discourage extravagance."

That saying was worthy of a queen. Ponder it carefully, my dear girls. I wish I could persuade all of you never to wear any jewels except those of piety, modesty, purity, and heavenly love. I know you would be handsomer in calico with these ornaments, than you could be in silks and jewels, without them. Who of you will make a fixed resolve to wear none but jewels of the heart.—*S. S. THE SHELTERING FOLD.

Children, now through a wilderness
All dark and drear we go,
And sin it was that brought us grief,
Sad pain, and death, and woe.
But our good Father hath prepared
For weary ones a rest,
And we may leave our sin and care,
And even here be blest.

CHORUS.—Then hasten to his fold, children,
Unto his sheltering fold;
In Jesus' arms, safe from alarms,
We'll rest within the fold.

O! the dim way in which we tread
With danger is replete,
Snares many, deftly hidden round,
And thorns for tender feet;
And enemies to God and man
Are prowling in the way.
Anger and self-will, bear and wolf,
The lambkins seek to slay.

Now to a close earth's sixth day dawns,
Its night comes speeding on,
And dark the hour, dread the power,
Before the coming dawn!
And tempest clouds may gather fierce
Those tender heads above,
When more than earthly care you'll need,
And more than earthly love.

Yes, in the care of Him who when
On earth bade children come,
The weary little ones may rest
Till Christ prepares their home.
Then when our glorious Sun doth rise,
And bring us bright glad day,
We'll leave these desert walks and swift
To Zion take our way.

CHORUS.—And there by beauteous fields, children,
By lovely streams we'll roam,
For dangers flee when Jesus comes,
And takes us all safe home.

MAN'S FUTURE DESTINY.

BY J. P. BELT.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—GEN. 3: 19.

In discussing the subject of man's future destiny, the nature and extent of the threatened penalty is involved in the doctrine of the resurrection; and there is no point in the controversy on which so much stress is laid. And although the Bible is the standard by which the different premises are claimed to have been drawn, yet two views, the one directly opposed to the other, regarding the extent of the curse pronounced on Adam, have obtained among theologians.

The position is taken by some, that when the body returned to the ground, death, a negative of life, is the complete annihilation of all the wicked ones. That when Adam transgressed the divine commandment, his life was forfeited; and when death ensued the penalty was fully paid, and the law had no further claim; and unless his sin was forgiven, in consequence of the vicarious death of Christ, the glorious Mediator, he will not come again from the grave. The other position supposes that when the curse was pronounced, it embraced all the evils which in their nature terminate in death; that in the case of Adam, dying he did die, yet not in the sense of annihilation; and that this death came upon all his posterity, with the exception of Enoch and Elijah; that, although it is a negative of life, there will be a resurrection of the bodies "both of the just and of the unjust." This hypothesis is drawn from the premises that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29.

It has been conceded by the advocates of the non-resurrection theory, that if the bodies of those that have returned to the ground were the subjects of Christ's prediction, his language is fatal to their position. Hence is seen and felt the necessity of ridding the text of a literal signification into a sense that obviates and does away the difficulty which otherwise interposes. But this requires a studied effort, and one has said that "it took him four years and a half to get over that text alone." And although it is agreed that the meaning must be determined by the principle, and not the mere language of the text itself, yet there is a diversity of opinion regarding the meaning designed to be understood, so far as the things which are claimed to be represented are concerned. By some it is contended that, by a mere figure of speech, the text represents the whole human family as being under condemnation to eternal death, in consequence of Adam's original sin. That none, but those who embraced the plan of redemption in the atoning blood of the Mediator, will be reprieved from the curse of the law that was imposed upon them. That "they who have done good" will come forth "unto the resurrection of life." That class will live again. But that those who have done evil will come forth "unto the resurrection of damnation." That is, they will not be made alive, although they come forth from the grave and appear in the judgment; for the wrath of God abideth on them.

Another class assume that the text was designed to represent the whole race of mankind in a lost condition, totally depraved in their nature, and spiritually dead in trespasses and sins. That the hour was coming, and now is, when those who are dead in sin will hear his voice, and they that hear and believe shall be spiritually made alive by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit. Consequently, in their view, the language has no reference to the bodies in the literal graves.

But the more general view is, that the whole subject of the chapter pertained to the nation of the Jews in their civil and religious polity. That they had refused to hear that prophet like unto Moses, whom the Lord their God had raised up to them; and for that reason, they were to be dispersed among the Gentile nations, and be destroyed nationally and ecclesiastically. That, by a figure of speech, the text represented that the time would come when they should hear his voice, and be restored to their own land in Palestine, where Christ would reign over them "a thousand years" on David's throne. This, in their view, they call "the age to come." And in that period it is contended that the prophecy of Ezek. 37 will be fulfilled to the whole house of Israel, including the return of the ten lost tribes.

It is no matter of surprise that one misled by such a strange theory should ask, Would it be just to raise Adam again to be punished for the same offence? Would it be just to disturb his slumber and pass on his case again repeating the same penalty? All such questions in that direction are the result of a wrong theory, inasmuch as the Bible no where intimates that either Adam, or any of his antecedents, are required to account for that first sin at the judgment seat of Christ. For that sin Adam was immediately arraigned before his God in the garden of Eden, and the curse was pronounced according to the penalty that had been threatened. Dying he did die, and all his posterity are under the same penalty. For "in Adam all die." Therefore, if Adam committed other sins after the curse had been pronounced, and afterwards died in a state of impenitence, he will be required to answer in in the day of final account for those sins, and not for the original sin which consigned him to the grave.

The account given by Moses is, "Now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." And through this cunning medium the "old serpent, which is the devil," proposed the temptation. In its original state, the common serpent probably lived on the delicious fruits of the garden, and walked erect like man. That this was its condition is indicated by the subsequent doom—"Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life." At all events, it was furnished with speech and rational faculties, as all the subsequent mediums have been; for "he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" This faculty of speech was in the view of the woman miraculous, and she listened to its subtle wiles. He began the temptation by insinuating that the restriction was an interpolation, and that policy has generally been pursued when a positive declaration of Scripture stands in the way of some peculiar theory. But the woman's reply shows that she could not be induced to believe that it was not God who commanded them to refrain from eating of the restricted tree. "And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." The acute tempter saw that he had a difficult task before him, and he pressed the temptation in another direction. The woman could not be induced to believe that the prohibition was something added to the original matter, and he ingeniously perverted the words of caution into a sense that was calculated to excite her passions and lust, and then boldly said, "Ye shall not surely die. For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." Then in order to prove his assertion, the serpent probably ate the fruit in her presence, thereby giving her to understand that, instead of producing death, it was this wonderful fruit which had elevated him from brutality to the rank of rational beings. It is also possible that he persuaded her not to be restrained in the laudable acquisition of knowledge, which was only attainable by eating this delicious fruit. And the idea was strongly urged that this wonderful fruit was calculated to enable her to choose the good and refuse the evil. It is evident that it was by some plausible argument and visible demonstration that she was influenced to try the fatal experiment; for it is said that "when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof and did eat; and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat."

This is the particular account of the temptation and fall of man. It was by a plausible, yet false interpretation of the words of caution that the father of lies, and originator of perverted views of the Scriptures, beguiled the mother of us all; "and the woman being deceived was in the transgression." She was seduced by the sophistry of a talking medium, and was the instrument of her husband's ruin; for the curse was pronounced on him, because he "hearkened unto the voice of his wife." Lust had conceived in their hearts, and in heart they had apostatized. They did not heed the words of God, but on the first trial of their fidelity, they yielded to the sophistry of a subtle medium; and when their sin was finished, it brought forth death. Although the temptation was very plausible, the motive presented was only self-exaltation. The arch-deceiver knew that so long as they had access to the tree of life they would not die. And they had been commanded to "multiply and replenish the earth" by the ordinary laws of propagation, hence they were the more easily deceived.

Now whether we can particularly account for the introduction of sin and death into this world by the fall of man, is not of the greatest consequence. We know that by reason of the temptation man did apostatize, and we can only understand the consequence so far as God has seen fit to explain it. Our first parents were finite, moral beings, and the solemn warning indicated their liability of apostasy. If there had been no danger, why were they so strictly charged concerning the restricted tree of knowledge. Holiness and sin are equally the voluntary acts of moral agents; and the one is as possible as the other. In both cases the agent has the freedom of his own will; otherwise, Adam would have been incapable of either holiness or sin, and consequently unfitted for moral government. But it should be distinctly kept in view that when Adam sinned he violated the law of God, but not the divine decree and purpose. For the eternal covenant and plan of redemption by the death of the glorious Mediator was embraced in the decree; and the covenant compact clearly indicates that "God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." He foresaw the end from the beginning, and this is the only way to account for every event whatever. That a change in the condition of man took place in consequence of the fall of man, is readily admitted by all. But how great the change, and the nature and extent of the curse, is a subject of much dispute among theologians. Some have supposed that all the posterity of Adam are guilty of his original sin; that, although they were not personally guilty of eating the forbidden fruit, yet there was a transfer to them of the guilt which he incurred. Therefore, they conclude that the whole race of mankind are under condemnation to eternal death for his personal act of disobedience in the garden of Eden. And this sandy foundation is the basis on which the theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead is mainly constructed. But the premises do not comport with the Scriptures, nor with reason and common sense. For the language of the Bible is, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him; and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him." This is also the language of reason and common sense. Personal acts and moral character are not transferable from one person to another. "For where no law is, there is no transgression." And sin is defined to be the voluntary transgression of the law; and until a person by the volition of his own will transgresses the law, sin and guilt cannot be imputed to him. Therefore the theory that the human family are under condemnation to eternal death for the original sin of Adam, in which they had no personal participation, is opposed to reason and common sense,—a contradiction of the Scriptures, an impossible conceit, a distorted image of human weakness attempting a philosophical deduction.

But the prohibition does indicate the important probation that our first parents were under while they were in the garden of Eden. Life and death were set before them in a manner calculated to enhance their dignity and happiness, if they fulfilled the condition of life. But if they did not fulfill the condition of life, dying they must die. And no word conveys an idea more terrible than death, whether it pertains to the body from the natural causes of mortality, or the destruction of both soul and body in the day of final retribution.

Adam's first state of probation was under the covenant of works, and the law knew no mercy; and for his first act of diobedience the curse of the law came upon him, as it is written, "Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law, to do them." The language of the law is, "obey and live, disobey and die"; and its precepts and penalties cannot be abated. For not "one jot or one tittle shall . . . pass from the law till all be fulfilled." The threatened penalty expressed the just deserts of sin, and when our first parents transgressed the divine law, they were exposed to immediate death, under the abiding wrath of God. The only ground of reprieve was the revelation of mercy through the glorious Mediator, the woman's promised seed. And on this gospel ground they went forth from the garden, on probation for eternal life, being now under the covenant of redemption.

The curse that came upon Adam embraces all his posterity, and the whole race of mankind received hurt in the constitution of their bodies and moral state of the mind. Hence the same inability to satisfy the legal claim under the covenant of works, has passed upon every man. "Through the offence of one, many be dead." Had there been no plan of redemption in the divine purpose, death would have ensued the very day that Adam sinned, and the human race would have perished in his loins. Therefore every candid and reflecting mind must perceive that the plan of redemption is to be fully accomplished at the end of this mortal state. "It is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment." The order and arrangement of the plan proves that the covenant of redemption was established before the beginning of creation. And if all that pertains to the great work of redemption by Jesus Christ be exhibited, we have an exhibition of the whole gospel of divine grace.

According to the covenant compact, it belonged to Christ to assume our nature, and suffer in the sinner's stead, that the law might be vindicated, and made honorable; hence he is eminently "the Redeemer." And as his humiliation and death places him in the position of judge of "the quick and the dead," the final destiny of the race, for whom he died, will not be awarded until he comes the second time. "For the Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment to the Son." And since the Son "came not to judge the world" at his first advent, none have yet been judged and rewarded. Hence Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied, saying, "Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints, to execute judgment upon all."

"DOES THE SOUL LIVE IN DEATH?"

NUMBER TWO.

In our last we noticed Matthew 10: 28,—"Fear not them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul."

The next argument used to prove that the "soul lives in death," is taken from the Messiah's words in John 12: 23–26. Jesus said, "The hour is come that the Son of man should be glorified. Verily, verily, I say unto you, Except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone: but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit. He that loveth his life shall lose it; and he that hateth his life in this world shall keep it unto life eternal."

The argument from the above passage is stated thus: "The life of the corn leaves the body in death, and the body is dead; but the life is more alive than before; that is, it is more active. If the life dies, the corn of wheat never produces fruit. The soul lives, then, when the body dies."

What relation has this argument to the words of Christ? Plainly, none. He speaks in reference to his own death and resurrection,

"Our Lord compares himself to a grain of wheat; his death to a grain sown, and decomposed in the ground; his resurrection to the blade which springs up from the dead grain; which grain thus dying brings forth abundance of fruit. I must die to be glorified; and unless I am glorified I cannot establish a glorious church of Jews and Gentiles upon the earth." (Clarke.)

Paul, using this illustration in reference to man (1 Cor. 15: 36–44), says, "That which thou sowest is not quickened, except it die: and that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body which shall be, but bare grain; it may chance of wheat, or of some other grain; but God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed its own body. So, also, is the resurrection of the dead: it is sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption: it is sown in dishonor, it is raised in glory: it is sown in weakness, it is raised in power: it is sown a natural body, it is raised a spiritual body. And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living soul [or person], the last Adam was made a quickening [or life-giving] spirit. The first man was of the earth, earthy: the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy [or mortal], such are they, also, that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they, also, that are heavenly [or immortal]. As we have borne the image of the earthy [or mortal], we shall, also, bear the image of the heavenly [or immortal]."

In all this argument, thus far, man is not once spoken of as a compound being; but simply as man; as mortal man, whose only hope in death is the resurrection, by the Life-giver, the Lord from heaven. He does not speak of the germ of the grain as being in one place, and the body in another, as separated; but the illustration by the inspired apostle, when applied to man in death, is that whatever is raised was dead; "sleeping in Jesus;" the "life hid with Christ in God." He does not speak of the spirit of man coming at the moment of the resurrection to be united to the body from which it has been long separated: this idea is not even hinted at. Paul gives no place to this doctrine. Hear him: "Now this I say, brethren, that flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God; neither doth corruption inherit incorruption. Behold, I show you a mystery: We shall not all sleep [die], but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; (for the trumpet shall sound;) and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory. O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Now, since neither Christ nor Paul speak of "the life of the corn leaving the body in death, and the body dead; and the life more alive than before; that is, it is more active" between death and the resurrection, than when living in the flesh: we conclude that it was no part of the doctrine of Christ, or of Paul. For, surely, if this were the true doctrine, the Master and Head of the Church would have spoken plainly upon it; and Paul, the "wise master-builder" in the Apostolic Church, would have at least hinted at it, in his great argument with the Corinthian fool, who denied the resurrection. 1 Cor. 15: 36.

Another argument for the existence and life of the soul in death, is founded on the fact that "man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail. Hence the term, when expressive of the person, is used as a synecdoche, not literally. 'The soul that sinneth, it shall die.' Here it means the person, not the life element. Adopt this principle and all is plain."

Let us look at this. "The first man, Adam, was made a living soul." God said to him, in the day of his transgression, "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." This convicted and doomed sinner is declared to be a living soul, having the "life element," and yet he is doomed to death, and to return to the dust from whence he was taken. Thus, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die." The "person," the "life-element," dies and goes to the dust.

But "The man is called a soul because he has a soul, as a vessel is called a sail, because it has a sail." The man. What is the man that has the soul? God says when he created man and breathed into him the breath of life, man became a living soul. The author of this tract defines man as composed of three elements: body, soul and spirit. Now if this man has a soul, does it mean that the two elements which help make up the perfect man, possess the third, and call it his soul? and in a change of circumstances, do the body and soul say my spirit? and still in another view, do the soul and spirit say my body? Which of these is the man? Is there more than one man? When one speaks of his soul, or his spirit, of his mind, or heart, does he mean to speak of more than one being, under different forms of expression? When one says, my soul, me, I, does he not simply mean himself, as a simple living soul, or person?

It is said if we will adopt the principle that soul, when applied to persons, is figurative, and refers only to the body, and not to the life element, then all would be plain. But would this, if it were true, be honest? Does God make this distinction? When he said to Adam, the living soul, "Thou shalt surely die," he told him what he meant by death: it was to return unto the ground: "for out of it thou wast taken: dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." (Ged. 3: 19.) Did not God give the whole truth on this matter?

Here, then, we have man's destiny in death from the mouth of Jehovah. He not only says man shall die, but tells us what that death is: it is going back to dust. And he does not tell us of any part of man that survives the death. He does not speak of a life element in dead men; or of a soul going to the New Jerusalem. But if these things had been true, would God have omitted them when speaking to his fallen creatures? Assuredly not.

In this connection it may be remarked that the Scriptures speak of God having a soul no less than fourteen times. We give one example: "Your new moons and appointed feasts my soul hateth." (Is. 1: 14.) Does our brother believe that God has a soul in the popular sense of that word? or that he meant to say, simply, that HE hated the hypocritical worship of the Jews at that time?—Voice of the West.

WHO SHALL BE SAVED?

"Who shall ascend into the hill of the Lord, or who shall stand in his holy place? He that hath clean hands and a pure heart, who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity, nor sworn deceitfully. He shall receive the blessing from the Lord and righteousness from the God of his salvation."

David has here asked a question that should cause every one to pause in their course and listen to the answer, especially those who profess to be in the way that leadeth to Mount Zion, even unto his holy hill. It would seem that David had made the inquiry for the especial benefit of the church, and it becomes us, who profess to be one of that body, to ponder it. The promise is to him that hath clean hands and a pure heart. You here see that the axe is laid at the root of the tree, even to the heart, for the heart is the great source of all our action, and if that be pure, so will our lives be.

Christ pronounced blessings on the pure in heart, and says "they shall see God." A sweet fountain cannot send forth bitter water, neither will a pure heart, one that is sanctified to God, send forth the bitter fruits of hate, strife and malice. We are created with a heart which is represented as a heart of stone, but by the divine influence operating upon it in answer to prayer, we may have it changed to one of flesh, or a pure heart, and then by a faithful continuance in well doing may receive a foretaste of the blessings from on high and the fruition in the kingdom of his Son.

To help us to find if we are in possession of this pure heart, let us consider some of the fruits of an impure one, and if we find we are in possession of a pure heart, we have lost nothing by the few hours' reflection; but if, on the other hand, we find ourselves wanting, it is better to find it out now than to go on deceiving ourselves and hear it said, "Depart, I never knew you." Now the heart that is at enmity with God must be on pretty good terms with Satan, and of course always willing to do his bidding; and you will find it ever on the alert to do some mischief. It has such an experienced leader, and is such an adept in counterfeiting, that it is sometimes almost impossible to tell it from a pure heart. But though man may sometimes be deceived, God never; for man looketh upon the outward appearance, but God upon the heart, and he knoweth them that are his.

Some of the works of an impure heart, when under the christian guise, are these:—Going about reporting all manner of evil; stirring up discord among brethren; wounding where they should heal; ingratiating themselves into people's favor only to find out what they can to use to their disadvantage; when one brother or sister has a little difficulty they must know all about it, not with a view to act as peacemaker, but to tell, and make it much worse. Of course they know the private history of each member, and many are the dark sayings lisped into the ears of one brother to the detriment of another, and thus the peace of an entire church is destroyed by these impure hearts. They will always end with a pious hope that the erring one may see his faults, and make long prayers for the prosperity of Zion and love of the brethren, when every act is destined to distract and destroy. You see them seeking honor from man, always wishing to be first, and every thing that is not done by their direction is not done right; they are quick to pay homage to the rich, and slow to see the needs of the poor.

These are some of the fruits we see arising from an impure heart. Now let us consider some of the fruits of a pure one. Are any in sorrow, they are ready with sympathy. In distress, with help. In a strange land, they are as a brother or a sister. When cast down, they are ever ready with their prayers. Is there trouble among brethren, they go but to make peace. Patient in trials, firm of faith, strong in hope, long-suffering in adversity, abounding in charity, and, with the whole christian armor on, are ever ready to do the will of the Lord, whether they gain the applause or condemnation of man. Trusting in God, he does his will here, and when he comes down to the stream of death, and the dark waters begin to embrace him, he can quietly yield himself, saying, as did Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of life."

When we see the eager manner with which the world is striving after earthly gain, gold, silver, honor, a great name, also the most trifling things, many whose greatest trouble is to know how to take a new step in some dance, the latest fashion, or the result of the coming election, we cannot forget that their honors will turn to shame, that earthly pleasure, when the cup is drained, leaves naught but bitterness, and that he that loveth silver shall not be satisfied with silver, nor he that loveth increase with increase, and that this is also vanity. We sometimes ask ourselves, where is the meek christian who wears the world only as a loose garment, to be thrown off at the first call of the Master, whose first question in the morning is, Lord, what wilt thou have me to do, and whose evening praise goes up like a sweet smelling savor?

In this dark night of sin, when mammon is worshiped by a wicked world, who quiet their conscience by the cry of peace, and are solacing themselves with the belief that to-morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant, the meek follower of Christ, with staff in hand, is wending his way towards his Father's home. The chilling winds of oppression blow fiercely against him. Torrents of persecution almost bear him to the earth. Thick clouds of darkness envelope him, almost hiding from him that bright "Star" by which he directs his course. He is buffeted, derided, scoffed at, and it seems as if the powers of Satan were combined against him; and, worst of all, the lovely face of his Savior seems hidden from his view. In agony he cries, Lord, hide not thou thyself from me. Lord, save, or I perish! He remembers the promise, that though all the world forsake thee, yet will not I forsake thee. Faith takes firm hold of the promise, and soon the clouds begin to move away. The glimmering of Bethlehem's Star is seen. Soon it comes out and shines with a clear and steady brilliancy. The bow of promise is again given in the heavens, to show him God still is, and is faithful.

With a shout of praise he goes on his way, full of hope in God; for even if around him are storms, lightning and thundering, and all is wrapt in despair, far, far above it all shines that lone star to guide him to his home, a land where he shall receive the blessings from the Lord, in the kingdom of Christ, bask in the smiles of Jesus, sing with the holy throng, feast with angels, shout victory, victory, over all trials, dwell in love with faithful Father Abraham and his children of faith, and wake the golden harp in one loud song of praise, while cherubim and seraphim shall echo the refrain, and that sweet singer of Israel will again sing forth his psalms, and all the mighty host unite in a song to God, and to him that sitteth upon the throne, and so shall they ever be with the Lord. A SERMON.

"And these shall go away into everlasting punishment, and the righteous into life eternal."—MATT. 25: 46.

This text seems to express the final result of that great day of judgment, to which we are all hastening; therefore, it is of the greatest importance that we fully understand what is to take place when that awful day arrives. We will consider,

1st. The proof of a day of final judgment. I presume, at this present period of the world's existence, I shall find but very few who will deny the truth of the Bible, which speaks so plainly of that solemn event; which must take place at the closing up of all things in this world's history, and just before a new order of things begins. Now, dear reader, we will refer you to a few passages of Holy Writ, which portray in glowing colors the majestic scenes of that awful day.

We will first refer the reader to the book of Daniel, 7: 10, where it is said,—"Thousand thousands ministered unto them, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; the judgment was set, and the books were opened." Here the prophet saw, as he relates in the next verse, the overthrow of the cruel horn power, which had done so much mischief in this world. The prophet also had a view of the setting up, and establishing for ever, of that glorious kingdom of the Son of God, when "He who is our life shall appear," and reign over his saints for ever. We also read in Psalms 9: 8, "He shall judge the world in righteousness"; also, Psalms 96: 13, "For he cometh, for he cometh to judge the earth"; and in Psalms 98: 9, "with righteousness shall he judge the world, and the people with equity." We also read in Acts 17: 31, "Because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained." St. Paul also tells us, in Rom. 2: 16, of a day when "God shall judge the secrets of men, by Jesus Christ, according to my gospel." The same apostle tells us, in Rom. 14: 10, "that we shall all stand before the judgment seat of Christ"; and in Heb. 9: 27, "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." The apostle Jude also brings to view the dreadful scenes of the judgment, in verse 15th; and also the dreadful doom of the wicked at that time. St. Paul to Timothy (2 Tim. 4: 1), refers to the same time, where he charges him before the Lord Jesus Christ, "who shall judge the quick and the dead, at his appearing and his kingdom." Our dear Savior refers to the great judgment scene (Matt. 16: 27), where he speaks of his coming "in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works."

We also have the scenes of the judgment day portrayed in awful grandeur, in Rev. 20: 12, where the Revelator informs us that he "saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the books were opened," and judgment was rendered according to what was there recorded; so that every one should receive his or her reward according to their works here on this earth.

We think the proof that is brought to view, in the above quotations, is sufficient for any person, who is willing to submit to the testimony of the word of God; and plainly shows us that there will be a day of judgment, when all the human family will stand before Jehovah's awful bar; and saint and sinner will hear their final sentence, the sinner to be finally destroyed, and the righteous to receive the reward of eternal life.

Here I would make a few remarks in relation to the trial of saint and sinner before the judgment seat of Christ. We read in the sacred book that our Savior declares, "My word shall judge you in the last day." But will there be a regular trial for each man and woman before the tribunal bar? or, in other words, a judicial court, to try every person separately? We think there will be no such trial; but we think that every man's sins will be made known, in such a manner that thousands, and perhaps tens of thousands, or millions, will know their final doom in a few moments; and, in fact, I do not believe there could be a judicial, or trial judgment; for in that case it would take more than ten thousand years to try the human family. But according to inspiration, we are very sure there will be an executive judgment; for the sacred word tells us, that the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, "to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them, of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches, which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude 15.

As to the punishment of the wicked, at the day of judgment, we think it will be dreadful indeed; but, from all we can learn from the sacred volume of divine truth, we are firmly convinced that the punishment of the wicked, at, or after the day of judgment, will not be endless torture; or, as some say, endless misery: but it will be "second death," just as inspiration informs us. Or, as St. Paul informs us, that "the wages of sin is death"; and the great reason why I believe it is death, which is an extinction of life, is because the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelation, informs us that the instrument of punishment is "fire and brimstone;" and that, in all languages, is held forth as an element of destruction; and also by searching the sacred volume, we shall find the following words, which refer directly to the dreadful punishment of the wicked; viz: "destruction," "second death," "consume away," "be destroyed," "lose life," "perish," "burned up root and branch," "come to an end," "be as though they had not been," etc. But, in relation to a few crimes, which are brought to view by our Savior, who represents the sinner as making pleading excuses at the judgment seat of Christ, I would here remark, that there are many persons who profess to be followers of the meek and lowly Savior, who are so hard-hearted and stingy that they will let their fellow beings suffer hunger, and suffer with the cold, and suffer them, even their brethren, to go naked, rather than to give a little money, or other things, to relieve their sufferings; but the dear Savior says: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me." I tell you, dear reader, you never can be a true christian unless you are free-hearted and kind-hearted to your brethren and sisters.

We will show in our next that all rewards and punishments are after the day of judgment. B. FERMAN.

PULPIT INGENUITY.

A preacher in the neighborhood of Blackfriars, London, not undeservedly popular, had just finished an exhortation, strongly recommending the liberal support of a certain very meritorious institution. The congregation was numerous, and the chapel crowded to excess. The discourse being finished, the plate was about to be handed round to the respective pews, when the preacher made this short address to the congregation:—

"From the sympathy I have witnessed in your countenances, and the strict attention you have honored me with, there is only one thing I am afraid of; that some of you may feel inclined to give too much; now it is my duty to inform you, that justice, though not so pleasant, should always be a prior virtue to generosity; therefore, as you will all be immediately waited upon in your respective pews, I wish to have it thoroughly understood, that no person will think of putting anything into the plate, who cannot pay his debts." I need not add that this advice produced a most overflowing collection.

☞ Thomas Jefferson said that "nothing gave him so much trouble in his administration as intemperate drinking," and regarded [illegible] temperate habits an essential prerequisite for appointments to office. Let total abstinence from all intoxicating drinks be your motto.

THE SHELTERING FOLD.

Children, now through a wilderness
All dark and drear we go,
And sin it was that brought us grief,
Sad pain, and death, and woe.
But our good Father hath prepared
For weary ones a rest,
And we may leave our sin and care,
And even here be blest.

Chorus.—Then hasten to his fold, children,
Unto his sheltering fold;
In Jesus' arms, safe from alarms,
We'll rest within the fold.

O! the dim way in which we tread
With danger is replete,
Snares many, deftly hidden round,
And thorns for tender feet;
And enemies to God and man
Are prowling in the way,
Anger and self-will, bear and wolf,
The lambkins seek to slay.

Now to a close earth's sixth day dawns,
Its night comes speeding on,
And dark the hour, dread the power,
Before the coming dawn!
And tempest clouds may gather fierce
Those tender heads above,
When more than earthly care you'll need,
And more than earthly love.

Yes, in the care of Him who when
On earth bade children come,
The weary little ones may rest
Till Christ prepares their home.
Then when our glorious Sun doth rise,
And bring us bright glad day,
We'll leave these desert walks and swift
To Zion take our way.

Chorus.—And there by beauteous fields, children,
By lovely streams we'll roam,
For dangers flee when Jesus comes,
And takes us all safe home.

MAN'S FUTURE DESTINY.

BY J. P. BELT.

"In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."—Gen. 3: 19.

In discussing the subject of man's future destiny, the nature and extent of the threatened penalty is involved in the doctrine of the resurrection; and there is no point in the controversy on which so much stress is laid. And although the Bible is the standard by which the different premises are claimed to have been drawn, yet two views, the one directly opposed to the other, regarding the extent of the curse pronounced on Adam, have obtained among theologians.

The position is taken by some, that when the body returned to the ground, death, a negative of life, is the complete annihilation of all the wicked ones. That when Adam transgressed the divine commandment, his life was forfeited; and when death ensued the penalty was fully paid, and the law had no further claim; and unless his sin was forgiven, in consequence of the vicarious death of Christ, the glorious Mediator, he will not come again from the grave. The other position supposes that when the curse was pronounced, it embraced all the evils which in their nature terminate in death; that in the case of Adam, dying he did die, yet not in the sense of annihilation; and that this death came upon all his posterity, with the exception of Enoch and Elijah; that, although it is a negative of life, there will be a resurrection of the bodies "both of the just and of the unjust." This hypothesis is drawn from the premises that "all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."—John 5: 28, 29.

It has been conceded by the advocates of the non-resurrection theory, that if the bodies of those that have returned to the ground were the subjects of Christ's prediction, his language is fatal to their position. Hence is seen and felt the necessity of ridding the text of a literal signification into a sense that obviates and does away the difficulty which otherwise interposes. But this requires a studied effort, and one has said that "it took him four years and a half to get over that text alone." And although it is agreed that the meaning must be determined by the principle, and not the mere language of the text itself, yet there is a diversity of opinion regarding the meaning designed to be understood, so far as the things which are claimed to be represented are concerned. By some it is contended that, by a mere figure of speech, the text represents the whole human family as being under condemnation to eternal death, in consequence of Adam's original sin. That none, but those who embraced the plan of redemption in the atoning blood of the Mediator, will be reprieved from the curse of the law that was imposed upon them. That "they who have done good" will come forth "unto the resurrection of life." That class will live again. But that those who have done evil will come forth "unto the resurrection of damnation." That is, they will not be made alive, although they come forth from the grave and appear in the judgment; for the wrath of God abideth on them.

Another class assume that the text was designed to represent the whole race of mankind in a lost condition, totally depraved in their nature, and spiritually dead in trespasses and sins. That the hour was coming, and now is, when those who are dead in sin will hear his voice, and they that hear and believe shall be spiritually made alive by the quickening power of the Holy Spirit. Consequently, in their view, the language has no reference to the bodies in the literal graves.

But the more general view is, that the whole subject of the chapter pertained to the nation of the Jews in their civil and religious polity. That they had refused to hear that prophet like unto Moses, whom the Lord their God had raised up to them; and for that reason, they were to be dispersed among the Gentile nations, and be destroyed nationally and ecclesiastically. That, by a figure of speech, the text represented that the time would come when they should hear his voice, and be restored to their own land in Palestine, where Christ would reign over them "a thousand years" on David's throne. This, in their view, they call "the age to come." And in that period it is contended that the prophecy of Ezek. 37 will be fulfilled to the whole house of Israel, including the return of the ten lost tribes.

It is no matter of surprise that one misled by such a strange theory should ask, Would it be just to raise Adam again to be punished for the same offence? Would it be just to disturb his slumber and pass on his case again repeating the same penalty? All such questions in that direction are the result of a wrong theory, inasmuch as the Bible no where intimates that either Adam, or any of his antecedents, are required to account for that first sin at the judgment seat of Christ. For that sin Adam was immediately arraigned before his God in the garden of Eden, and the curse was pronounced according to the penalty that had been threatened. Dying he did die, and all his posterity are under the same penalty. For "in Adam all die." Therefore, if Adam committed other sins after the curse had been pronounced, and afterwards died in a state of impenitence, he will be required to answer in in the day of final account for those sins, and not for the original sin which consigned him to the grave.

The account given by Moses is, "Now the serpent was more subtle than any beast of the field which the Lord God had made." And through this cunning medium the "old serpent, which is the devil," proposed the temptation. In its original state, the common serpent probably lived on the delicious fruits of the garden, and walked erect like man. That this was its condition is indicated by the subsequent doom—"Upon thy belly shalt thou go, and dust shalt thou eat all the days of thy life." At all events, it was furnished with speech and rational faculties, as all the subsequent mediums have been; for "he said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said, ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" This faculty of speech was in the view of the woman miraculous, and she listened to its subtle wiles. He began the temptation by insinuating that the restriction was an interpolation, and that policy has generally been pursued when a positive declaration of Scripture stands in the way of some peculiar theory. But the woman's reply shows that she could not be induced to believe that it was not God who commanded them to refrain from eating of the restricted tree. "And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden; but of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." The acute tempter saw that he had a difficult task before him, and he pressed the temptation in another direction. The woman could not be induced to believe that the prohibition was something added to the original matter, and he ingeniously perverted the words of caution into a sense that was calculated to excite her passions and lust, and then boldly said, "Ye shall not surely die. For God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods knowing good and evil." Then in order to prove his assertion, the serpent probably ate the fruit in her presence, thereby giving her to understand that, instead of producing death, it was this wonderful fruit which had elevated him from brutality to the rank of rational beings. It is also possible that he persuaded her not to be restrained in the laudable acquisition of knowledge, which was only attainable by eating this delicious fruit. And the idea was strongly urged that this wonderful fruit was calculated to enable her to choose the good and refuse the evil. It is evident that it was by some plausible argument and visible demonstration that she was influenced to try the fatal experiment; for it is said that "when the woman saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise, she took of the fruit thereof and did eat; and gave also unto her husband with her, and he did eat."

This is the particular account of the temptation and fall of man. It was by a plausible, yet false interpretation of the words of caution that the father of lies, and originator of perverted views of the Scriptures, beguiled the mother of us all; "and the woman being deceived was in the transgression." She was seduced by the sophistry of a talking medium, and was the instrument of her husband's ruin; for the curse was pronounced on him, because he "hearkened unto the voice of his wife." Lust had conceived in their hearts, and in heart they had apostatized. They did not heed the words of God, but on the first trial of their fidelity, they yielded to the sophistry of a subtle medium; and, when their sin was finished, it brought forth death. Although the temptation was very plausible, the motive presented was only self-exaltation. The arch-deceiver knew that so long as they had access to the tree of life they would not die. And they had been commanded to "multiply and replenish the earth" by the ordinary laws of propagation, hence they were the more easily deceived.

Now whether we can particularly account for the introduction of sin and death into this world by the fall of man, is not of the greatest consequence. We know that by reason of the temptation man did apostatize, and we can only understand the consequence so far as God has seen fit to explain it. Our first parents were finite, moral beings, and the solemn warning indicated their liability of apostasy. If there had been no danger, why were they so strictly charged concerning the restricted tree of knowledge. Holiness and sin are equally the voluntary acts of moral agents; and the one is as possible as the other. In both cases the agent has the freedom of his own will; otherwise, Adam would have been incapable of either holiness or sin, and consequently unfitted for moral government. But it should be distinctly kept in view that when Adam sinned he violated the law of God, but not the divine decree and purpose. For the eternal covenant and plan of redemption by the death of the glorious Mediator was embraced in the decree; and the covenant compact clearly indicates that "God worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." He foresaw the end from the beginning, and this is the only way to account for every event whatever. That a change in the condition of man took place in consequence of the fall of man, is readily admitted by all. But how great the change, and the nature and extent of the curse, is a subject of much dispute among theologians. Some have supposed that all the posterity of Adam are guilty of his original sin; that, although they were not personally guilty of eating the forbidden fruit, yet there was a transfer to them of the guilt which he incurred. Therefore, they conclude that the whole race of mankind are under condemnation to eternal death for his personal act of disobedience in the garden of Eden. And this sandy foundation is the basis on which the theory of the non-resurrection of the wicked dead is mainly constructed. But the premises do not comport with the Scriptures, nor with reason and common sense. For the language of the Bible is, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father; neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son. The righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him; and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him." This is also the language of reason and common sense. Personal acts and moral character are not transferable from one person to another. "For where no law is, there is no transgression." And sin is defined to be the voluntary transgression of the law; and until a person by the volition of his own will transgresses the law, sin and guilt cannot be imputed to him. Therefore the theory that the human family are under condemnation to eternal death for the original sin of Adam, in which they had no personal participation, is opposed to reason and common sense,—a contradiction of the Scriptures, an impossible conceit, a distorted image of human weakness attempting a philosophical deduction.
